CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

WITH THE CONGRESS SECOND SESSION

Cuba at least, little attention has been paid to agriculture. We know that almost all the sugar factories have been burned either by the insurgents or the Spanish army. Consequently there has been a great falling off in our importation of Cuban sugar. Spain receiving little or no sugar from Cuba, necessarily her demands on Puerto Rico and the Philippines became greater, and hence these islands could not send us as much sugar as formerly.

Besides, it is not a question of the sugar we may have imported from these islands, but rather a question of their productive capacity. These figures clearly indicate that, the American market being made free for these sugars, and the population shut off from their present trade with Spain, much more sugar would come into this country from these islands than we can consume. Yet it is admitted that these islands are not now, nor have they ever been, cultivated to their full sugar capacity. Figures are not at my command showing the producing capacity in sugar and rice of these islands, still sufficient data are here given to show a greater production of sugar than we can possibly need, and the result is that large portions of these islands will be turned into rice fields, and eventually the American rice producer must follow the American sugar producer.

This must be the result of the Republican policy sought to be fastened upon the American people by the pending resolution. As well take off your tariffs on these articles. They can possibly serve no further useful purpose.

Sirs, there is no more reason why Hawaii should be annexed than that the Philippines and Puerto Rico, once captured, should be held; and no more reason to hold these than to grab Cuba—a war not for conquest notwithstanding. Hawaii is but the commencement; the others will follow, and thus will the American sugar and rice producers go to the wall, destroyed in the house of their supposed friends.

It is true that the same platform spoke of reciprocity as one of its cardinal principles. It is also true that in his campaign Mr. McKinley took occasion to say in one of his addresses delivered at Canton to an audience of drummers brought there to hear him that the reciprocity mentioned in the platform had especial reference to the countries to the south of us; and to quote the sense of his remarks: The Republican party desires to shape the policy of this Government so that American flour would find a free market in Havana, while the American people would enjoy the blessings of cheap sugar.

We from the sugar district of the United States knew that such a policy, if pursued, would be ruinous to American sugar, yet some of us felt certain that in time this policy would be changed; and, feeling so, a great many intelligent, honest, progressive men in my district, interested in sugar production, voted for Mr. McKinley for President. Had he or his party at that time taken the position now assumed, and advocated annexation of these islands, I venture the opinion that not 10 per cent of the votes cast there in the last national election would have been Republican.

In place of your resolution one should be pending abrogating the existing Hawaiian treaty. It is a fraud upon the American sugar producer, an imposition upon the American consumer, an unjust discrimination against foreign friendly sugar nations, and a robbery of our National Treasury. In vain do we look for any beneficiary of this treaty, save the sugar planters on the islands and the American sugar trust. It will be remembered that this treaty only exempts raw sugars. Consequently the sugar producer here must compete with the Hawaiian sugar producer, while the refined sugar pays duty, and the sugar trust secures the profit.

The American sugar trust, the meanest, the most grasping, the most debauching and disgraceful of all the trusts, has reaped a rich harvest from this treaty. It has robbed the American people through it. It has unjustly collected and unfairly appropriated revenues which, without the treaty, would have belonged to the Government. Without this treaty possibly it could not have cleared the three hundred millions it boasts to have accumulated in the last ten years upon its nominal capital of seventy-five millions; it perhaps could not pay two hundred thousand per year to its president and its treasurer. At least those things which it has done to the injury of the American people would have been less shocking without this treaty; and now you propose to perpetuate all these conditions.

But it is said that the sugar trust is opposed to annexation. Sometimes I am tempted to inquire if those who make the assertion believe it. The truth is, under this treaty the unholy alliance of the sugar trust and the Spreckels interests have now the control of the sugar production on the islands. They refine the whole of it. To terminate the treaty under the twelve months' notice provided for in section 5 of the treaty would ruin the further prospects of profits of the trust from the islands. This may occur at any time. It has been attempted in Congress several times. It should have occurred long ago.

Having the control of the plantations, the trust is naturally desirous of planting its advantages on a firmer foundation. Annexation would, in honor, force this great Government to maintain its sovereignty over the islands, though it bankrupt the nation, lost us the best blood of the land, and wrecked the American Navy to do it. Holding the plantations in its grasp, and raw sugar raised on them being admitted here free, the result to the trust can not be in doubt. This Hawaiian sugar speculation would not only be "a thing of beauty, but a joy forever" to the sugar trust should your resolution become law. It will not do to argue that the sugar trust is opposed to your resolution. Such argument will not deceive anyone at all familiar with the question.

Nor will it do for honorable gentlemen to argue as your committee has done in its report. The bugbear that we must annex Hawaii because if we fail some other nation will be begging the question entirely. It does not even rise to the dignity of an argument. The American Government opposing, no nation will dare attempt to take possession of the islands.

To annex is to assume sovereignty. Sovereignty carries with it responsibility. And, in fact, one of the stock arguments of the annexationists is that we should take the islands because the present Government can not maintain itself. Yet the Dole Government is essentially a white-man government. If this be true, then do these gentlemen invite us to assert control over a people—to assume the responsibility of a government—upon the admission? Nay! for the very reason that the white inhabitants of the islands can not maintain their superiority over its mongrel population.

I yearn for no such responsibility. But I am not prepared to admit that the Dole Government can not maintain itself in power.

Unhindered by adverse legislation, such as the fourteenth amendment, I assert that the history of the world demonstrates that the Caucasian race, wherever it has ventured, has dominated all other races. This is true of the white man everywhere and at all times.

The history of the reconstruction of the South bears testimony to the fact that the white man will rule even though hampered by enimical legislation.

So long as England and France maintain their positions as regards the islands, so long as we stand firm to the Monroe doctrine, well may the people of the islands rest assured that no flag will wave over them except their own. Well may we laugh at those who tremble lest Japan or Germany or any other nation shall take possession of them against our wishes. And should France free herself from her agreement with England on this subject, then the more reason for a treaty with England on our part. Under those circumstances, to admit that Hawaii is in danger in her sovereignty is to admit that the two great English-speaking peoples are unable to maintain their own sovereignty.

But what if some European or Asiatic nation does take possession of them? What is the danger to us? Right off our coasts Great Britain owns the Bermudas and Vancouver. All of these years we have given ourselves no great concern about this, nor did we during the war of the Revolution, nor during the war of 1812. France owns Guadeloupe, Martinique, and St. Bartholemew, yet in this moment of war we are not thrown into tremors on this account, even though France does not seem overzealous on our behalf. Jamaica belongs to England; Germany owns Curaçao; Denmark owns St. John, St. Croix, and St. Thomas, yet do we care? We have never lost sleep of nights because of these facts. Spain owns the richest islands of the group to the south of us; yet what good have these been to her during this war?

Before formal declaration of war we had cut her off from Cuba, her best island. Before a single American life had been sacrificed we held Puerto Rico in a similar condition. Even her far-off possessions—the Philippines—fell an easy prey to our valor and intrepidity, and the advantage Spain once held over us there has been and is being utilized to our advantage. So that Spain, with all of her rich possessions around us, can not find a single coaling station for her fleet so as to properly prepare to give us battle.

Once annexed, we can not always expect to hold Hawaii as a Territory. Territorial possession with us heretofore has only been the probationary stage to Statehood. The time will come when Hawaii will aspire to plant another star on our flag. Political exigencies will see to it that the boon is granted. What a parody on free government will her's be!

The population of the islands, according to the latest estimate, is as follows:

Hawaiians (Kanakas and half-breeds).....	39,504
Japanese	25,407
Chinese	21,616
Portuguese	15,291
Americans	3,080
British	2,250
Germans	1,432

What a magnificent free government these people would form and maintain! What a rotten borough to send representatives to our Congress! What votes to cast in the electoral college!

From all these things I pray God the American people may be spared.

The negro question has been a very serious question with the South. It has inflicted sufferings and humiliations upon my people.

The dark night of negro domination lives in the past, thank God! I want no more of it. Let us not stir up its putrid flesh nor shake its decayed bones in the charnel house of oblivion.

Let us rather hope that some of the Southern States have solved the vexing problem, and that all the others will soon follow the magnificent example set them by South Carolina, Mississippi, and Louisiana. In the name of the white men of Hawaii, let them control their Government without the interference of the fourteenth amendment; in the name of the white men of America, let us not enlarge the scope of this race question.

The West suffered so long from Chinese labor that a great uprising occurred long ago among her people. The Government was appealed to, and the gates of liberty were shut to the Mongolian.

Let us not add, in bulk, to the population of this great country the wretched Mongolian who now tills the sugar plantations of the islands. Let them not come again to disturb the tranquillity of our Western country. We do not want them. The American people do not care for them. They themselves are ignorant of our form of government and do not wish to be of us. Those who deny this should be willing to submit the question to the popular vote of the people of the islands, as was done with the people of Texas, as was done with the people of Santo Domingo, when President Grant urged its annexation to the United States.

But a greater reason than all of these conquers my judgment and forces my conscience to oppose this scheme. All men may not agree with the Republican platform that it is important that all sugar consumed by the American people should be produced on American soil; some men may be indifferent to the issue; but in this all men agree who live under the American flag, that this glorious Government must be perpetuated; unscathed and unscarred, it must walk through the coming centuries, accumulating strength and vigor at each step. It is accomplishing a God-conceived mission on earth. It is solving the great problem of free government and human happiness. The man who would change its course by so much as a fraction of a line, would nullify for a moment the advances being made for liberty, science, and civilization, is unworthy of his country.

Yet if we have accomplished so much it is because of the homogeneity of our people and of the compactness of our possessions. Our strength has consisted heretofore in the fact that we are essentially a peaceful people. No nation has cared to war with us because it had nothing to gain. We have been able to follow Washington's advice to keep from "foreign entangling alliances" because we had no possessions foreign from our mainland to protect. We have kept out of foreign complications growing out of European and Asiatic wars because none of our possessions were exposed and none could become involved. We have kept our Army on the basis of a home guard because we feared no invasion.

Why change all of these advantages? Why appeal to the passions? Why enter the field of foreign court intrigues? Heretofore we have been able to devote our energies to the sciences and arts and literature, while other nations employed much of their human wealth preparing for war, offensive and defensive. We have had all of our forces producing wealth, while other nations have elected half of their forces to remain idle, compelling the other half to toil to maintain this state of idleness. Is not departure from this worse than folly on our part? Nay, is it not treason itself to seek to alter these glorious conditions? The truth and justness and fairness of my position seem so apparent that, like the man who would prove an axiom, I find myself laboring. Did I deem it necessary to furnish authority to maintain this position, I could quote from Tyler and Daniel Webster and Taylor and Blaine and Sherman and Bayard and others of equal prominence in the past politics of this country.

To annex Hawaii will require of us the maintenance of a large navy in the Pacific Ocean; to hold Puerto Rico or any of the West Indies will require another large navy in the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea, and to hold the Philippines another navy will have to be maintained off the coast of Asia and in the Chinese Sea.

And why, I ask, should we squander the money to do this, when for our pains we shall only be borrowing trouble and invite war?

If in the course of human events we are compelled by necessity to have Hawaii, or Puerto Rico, or the Philippines, another Dewey will arise from among this great people, and the feat will soon be accomplished, and glory, godlike and fair, will be our harvest.

Who of you doubts this?

The declaration of Jefferson that we should acquire no territory requiring a navy to protect is as good policy to-day as it was when he first uttered it. It has been in keeping with this policy that heretofore, with the exception of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, we have abstained from acquiring territory not contiguous to our original thirteen colonies, though on two former occasions territory of that character was offered us as a gift. Even now, after over a quarter of a century of our possession of Alaska, the most ardent annexationist is not prepared to state that this possession has brought us either glory or profit, though it has been the source of complication between our Government and England; while our possession of the Aleutian Islands has been regarded so indifferently by us that we make no pretense of having a government there.

The day that we depart from the wise policy that I have been trying to picture disaster must overtake us. Foreign complications must arise; we must maintain an immense navy and standing army; we must divert from the pursuits of peaceful occupation and the production of wealth a vast number of our citizens and throw the burden of supporting them and the Government upon the balance of the people.

At the inception of our present war with Spain we were loud in our declaration that humanitarian reasons alone prompted us to action. The resolution declaring for armed intervention on our part in the war between Spain and Cuba specifically declared or strongly intimated that this war was not for conquest.

Yet this Administration seems now entirely devoted to the conquest and acquisition of territory. The people of Cuba must be relieved, we said. Yet not a blow has so far been struck to relieve the reconcentrados, while 9,000 miles from these suffering people our fleet has found its way and territory is in the course of changing hands. During this time a peaceful blockade of Cuba is being maintained. To all intents and purposes we are giving assistance to the Spaniard in his policy to starve out his Cuban subjects. Alas, poor humanity; another great crime is being committed in thy name!

Listen! "Colonial territory!" "Imperial policy!" What enticing phrases! How dazzling to the eye! How euphonious to the ear!

But, my countrymen, do not forget that these never come unattended. They have never become a people's possession that tranquillity and peace and harmony and happiness have not departed. History does not record the people whose highest aspiration this was that it did not encompass their destruction.

This issue was never presented to the American people. Let not gentlemen here listen to the croaking of partisan newspapers and accept it as the voice of the people. It is not the people's voice you hear; it is the voice of the interested party, who arrogates to himself the voice of the nation. They are but visions and dreams of imperial grandeur, that are being conjured up by these special advocates.

The American people are too sensible, too full of common sense, to be lured from their peaceful avocations, to seek to embark in a field of conquest and strife and intrigue and war. You who doubt this dare not consult them.

These are evils that I fear. They will undermine the Republic. I can not free my mind from these conclusions. They force themselves upon me. I am unwilling to attempt the experiment.

Continuing the wise policy that to this hour we have pursued, I see everything ahead bright and glorious, and can predict of this Republic what Lord Macaulay said of the Catholic Church:

She may still exist in undiminished vigor when some traveler from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand on a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAFF). The hour of 11 o'clock having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow at 10 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4779) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Thomasson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4780) granting a pension to Ida J. Rannells; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McBRIDE introduced a bill (S. 4781) authorizing the issue to Charles F. Beebe of patents for certain mineral lands, and mill sites appurtenant thereto, in the State of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted an amendment authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund, return, and pay to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company the amount paid or deposited by that company with the Secretary of the Interior, and by him covered into the Treasury of the United States in accordance with the decision of the Secretary of the Interior of March 8, 1898, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10682) making an appropriation to pay the Bering Sea awards; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the order be executed granting a short time this morning for the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the first bill under the order.

ELLA HAYNE AGNEW.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill if he is not taking a new departure?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. I will explain to the Senator that the committees of Congress and Congress itself have pensioned a woman who cared for the soldier from early infancy, and was in fact the mother to the soldier when she became poor and dependent. That is a distinction which the committee draws. There are very few such bills, but where the soldier was cared for by the stepmother from early infancy, she has been treated as though she were the soldier's mother.

Mr. PETTUS. It is not provided for in the general law?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not.

Mr. PETTUS. It is an addition that Congress is now making?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir.

SIMON PRICE.

The bill (S. 2345) granting an increase of pension to Simon Price was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Simon Price, late a private in Company B, Second Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 5 I move to strike out the word "otherwise."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM L. SMITHSON.

The bill (H. R. 9729) to increase the pension of William L. Smithson, late Company D, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war, was announced as next in order. It proposes to increase to the sum of $24 per month the pension of William L. Smithson, late Company D, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over. It is not in proper form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: I ask that a pension bill which was passed over and which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] reported be taken up. I shall offer a substitute for the bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9729) to increase the pension of William L. Smithson, late Company D, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William L. Smithson, late of Company G, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William L. Smithson."

AUGUSTA TURNER.

The bill (S. 1625) granting a pension to Augusta Turner was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the name "Turner," to strike out "member" and insert "late;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Augusta Turner, widow of John E. Turner, late of Company C, Fourth Battalion District of Columbia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES H. STREETER.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1974) granting a pension to Charles H. Streeter, to report it back favorably with an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to have it now considered. It is for a dependent child.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, in line 5, after the word "Streeter," to insert the words "invalid and;" and, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Charles H. Streeter, invalid and dependent son of Alonzo Streeter, late of Company E, Thirty-second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH A. ERB.

Mr. CANNON. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4765) granting a pension to Sarah A. Erb to report it back favorably, without amendment, and I ask that it may have consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Sarah A. Erb, widow of Gabriel S. Erb, late of Company E, Seventy-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING COURTS-MARTIAL.

Mr. COCKRELL. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 10423) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the administration of justice in the Army," approved October 1, 1890, and for other purposes. It is exceedingly important that the bill which proposes to amend the existing laws in regard to courts-martial should be passed. If there should be no objection, I should like to have it considered now. The War Department is about to make a publication and desire to place in that publication all the laws and among them this law. Let the bill be read, and then I will make a very brief explanation, if it is desired.

Mr. FRYE. We never object to anything the Senator from Missouri wants.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SISSETON AND WAHPETON BANDS OF SIOUX.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President—

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Very well.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to so arrange in regard to the order of business which was agreed upon for 1 o'clock as not to break into the speech of the Senator. By unanimous consent the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians was made the special order for 1 o'clock to-day. I now ask unanimous consent that that bill may be made the order for 1 o'clock to-morrow, instead of to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

Mr. FRYE. To be confined to the morning hour.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not care to add that.

Mr. FRYE. Not to interfere with the unfinished business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, no; not to interfere with the unfinished business.

BENEFITS OF REPUBLICAN RULE.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, the great change which has taken place in the financial, commercial, and economic condition of the country since the inauguration of a Republican President and the enactment of a Republican tariff law directs attention again to the benefits which have invariably flowed from the administration of the Government by the great party of Lincoln, Grant, and McKinley. Not in many years, if ever, have the material prospects of the United States been as bright as they are to-day; and for this the wise and patriotic legislation framed and passed by the Republican party is responsible.

During the extra session of Congress our Populist and Democratic friends very properly decided not to obstruct the passage of the Dingley bill, contenting themselves by stating that they desired the Republican party to pass any measure of legislation which it might propose, as they were confident such legislation could result in no good and that it would only augment the deplorable condition of affairs that obtained at the time of the inauguration of President McKinley.

While the Republicans were confident that the remedy which they proposed would be effectual, the Democrats were loud in their predictions that no improvement could be realized until our financial system was changed. Thus the issue was drawn between the two parties in a plain and unmistakable manner.

Only the impious, the foolish man, Mr. President, would stand here and claim for any human agency the credit of having covered our fields with smiling plenty when blight has been the portion of nearly all the rest of the world. For that marvelous good fortune which emptied upon our lands the fructifying forces of nature's laboratory until but a remnant remained for the rest of the world we as a nation are thankful. We gauge the gift rightly and honor the Giver, happy to enjoy this bounty now, but knowing well that bursting barns can not abide with us always and that sooner or later we must have our share of blight and shortage. Every sentiment of practical wisdom dictates that nations as well as men should reap of the sunshine that they may be guarded against the storm.

How well the people of this country have been guided in that course by the Republican party in the present visitation of good fortune I shall attempt to show.

A prediction made public by the Bureau of Statistics recently might well have been received with amazement and incredulity by those who had not followed carefully the trend of our national trade during the year. To suggest that the balance of trade in favor of the United States for one year could, much less would, reach the prodigious sum of six hundred millions seemed like idle folly. Never before in the history of the nation had the favorable trade balance been even half that much. And yet the prediction was well founded, and, unless the law of probabilities fails, the trade balance, which for the ten months ending April 30 was $514,245,495, will be over six hundred millions by June 30. The nearest approach to this extraordinary record was last year, when the agricultural and commercial conditions were the forerunners of those we have now. But even then the favorable balance of $286,263,144 was less than half what it will be this year, for a reason which I will attempt later to make clear. Previous to 1897 the banner year of American commerce had been 1879, with a favorable balance of $264,661,666.

As a result of the happy concurrence of conditions which serve to make memorable this year of our Lord 1898, the volume of cash sent over to us from Europe breaks all previous records. It is estimated that for the full fiscal year the net amount of coin received in partial settlement of our huge merchandise balance will be at least $100,000,000. That is to say, our stock of money will be increased by $100,000,000 or more. This is more than double any previous cash balance for one year, the largest having been $44,653,200 for the year 1879.

The benefits of a favorable trade balance to a debtor nation can hardly be overestimated. With between two and three hundred millions to send abroad annually to pay the interest on our bonds, national, State, and railroad, and another hundred millions to pay dividends on stocks when they are earned, the only hope of escape from national bankruptcy, ruin, and collapse is to sell more than we buy. The spread of our wheat, corn, and cotton fields, the adoption of new agricultural appliances, and a high grade of skill and industry have enabled us year by year to increase our exports of the products of the earth until these, together with the other goods, raw and manufactured, which we have sent abroad have enabled us, with but four exceptions in twenty-five years, to have the balance of trade in our favor. The amount of the credit has, however, varied widely. Frequently, and, indeed, usually, except in seasons when we have been especially fortunate in having abundant crops wherewith to replenish the dearth-empty granaries of Europe, the favorable balance has been scarcely enough, or but little more than enough, to pay our interest charges abroad and to discharge our dividend accounts.

Several circumstances have contributed to this condition, which may be divided into two broad, general classes—those which we can not control and those which we can. The former class, of course, includes the operations of nature—drought, dearth, plenty, etc.—and may at once be dismissed from discussion as belonging to a realm whose laws are written upon the elements and whose decrees are immutable. The second class, however, consists of those which are made by legislation or by commercial methods and acuteness. On the latter score I am sure no member of this body doubts that the American people have but little to learn, at least from other nations.

In legislation on economic subjects we find the cause of the extreme fluctuations of our favorable balance, and as it has been wise or foolish we see a like effect upon our commerce. It may be accepted as an established fact that as long as we have normal crops here and in Europe the superiority of our land, appliances, and management, together with Europe's labor loss under compulsory military system, will result in a favorable balance to the United States, provided our economic legislation is framed with ordinary common sense. This balance will be largely retained abroad to pay our interest and dividend charges. Further, when nature's favor grants us abundant harvests at a time when they are denied to the Old World, wise legislation will, as in Republican hands it has done now, secure to us the real benefits of our good fortune and cause our favorable balance to be increased in the ratio of our increased sales of agricultural products. This desirable end has been obtained for more than a generation through the benign policy of protection which has been secured to the nation by the efforts of the Republican party.

There are three methods of settling a trade balance open to the debtors—to pay in goods, to pay in money, or to return the bonds or other securities of the creditor. Obeying the universal law that all movement proceeds along the easiest and most favorable lines, the effort of the debtor is to make payment in his own products, manufactured or raw, and where no legislative bar intervenes that course is always followed. If, however, protection is the policy of the creditor, that manner of settlement is available only so far as the protective tariff fails to be effective. Where such a tariff is skillfully devised and honestly administered it becomes necessary for the creditor to adopt one or the other of the alternative means of payment, or both, to the extent the circumstances require. This is precisely the position in which we stand to-day. The protective tariff framed and passed by this Congress is responsible for the immense size of the trade balance of the current year, which, notwithstanding a foreign war, is giving prosperity to our people.

Mr. President, the patient labor of the statistician has furnished investigators into the realm of economics with a sure guide for their footsteps. The homely adage, "Figures can not lie," is not undermined but more securely buttressed by that aphorism of the logician, "It is the exception that proves the rule." The regular gathering of reports upon the results and conditions of agriculture, manufacturing, and commerce has placed at our disposal a mass of facts which, when analyzed, give proof of the efficiency or failure of economic theories. As bearing directly upon the subject of trade balances and the manner in which they are affected by high or low tariff, I invite attention to the following computations made from the reports of the United States Bureau of Statistics, beginning with the year 1835.

For nearly seventy years, beginning with Clay's compromise tariff of 1832, high and low tariffs have alternated. The length of time each was in force has varied greatly, but the operations of all have been marked by such striking financial and economic manifestations as to give individuality to the respective periods of their existence.

The period from 1835 to 1841, both inclusive, covered the principal portion of the life of the low tariff forced by Calhoun on behalf of South Carolina in particular, and the cotton-raising States in general. It imposed an average rate of 20 per cent, and during its operation disaster and bankruptcy were rife throughout the country. The manufacturing interests, nursed into youthful strength by the protective tariff of 1824, were practically destroyed, and the year 1837 saw the first of the three great panics of our financial history. The record of this period is eloquently told by the statement of its trade balances. During the seven years which my figures cover, 1835 to 1841, inclusive, the balance of trade against us was $115,784,471. Or, in other words, we allowed Europe to sell us 14 per cent more than we could pay for with our products.

88 per cent, make a striking contrast. From 1842 to 1846, inclusive, the balance of trade in our favor was $39,093,164, showing that during these four years we sold to Europe over 7 per cent more than we allowed her to pay for with her goods.

It was on the popular regard for this tariff that James K. Polk, under the banner "Polk, Dallas, and the tariff of 1842," carried protection Pennsylvania, and thus defeated Henry Clay in 1844. During the four years it was in force there was a notable business revival, which terminated suddenly when the Walker tariff, which cut down the average rate to 26 per cent, was passed in 1846. This measure remained in force with but few changes beyond those of 1857, when the rates were reduced to 15 per cent, until 1860. These were fifteen years of financial disaster such as this country had never seen before, and which every patriot must hope it shall never see again. It is difficult to see how low tariff, or rather free trade with a revenue attachment, could have been tried under more favorable circumstances. Every foreign condition seemed to favor the Democratic contention. In 1846 the English corn laws were repealed, thus admitting our grain to that country. Then came a general crop shortage abroad, and the Irish famine helped to make a demand for our breadstuffs, which was hardly supplied before the series of revolutions began in continental Europe. These struggles exhausted the Continent, and she was utterly unable to supply her own wants, coming to us for all the grain we could ship abroad. Then came the Crimean war, causing an active demand up to 1855. Yet, notwithstanding all these exceptional markets for our breadstuffs, so great were our importations that in only one year, 1847, did we have the balance of trade in our favor. On the contrary, in the fifteen years covered by the Walker free-trade tariff of 1846 the balance of trade was against us the immense sum of $370,826,801. In fact, in spite of furnishing "free corn" for England and supplying the general crop shortage of war-torn Europe from 1848 to 1854, we had permitted the Old World to send us 10 per cent more goods than we had sent it; and this in the face of the fact that California in those fifteen years produced gold to the amount of $651,989,085.

Of this vast amount of gold $412,900,927, almost two-thirds, was sent abroad to pay the great trade balances which Democratic free trade had piled up against us. If anything more is needed to prove conclusively that free trade was a failure, it is furnished by the prostrated finances of the country, the terrible panic of 1857, and the bankrupt condition of the Government in 1859-60.

The record of the years from 1861 to 1898 makes a brighter financial picture. In those years the balance of trade in our favor, notwithstanding the war and its ensuing period of inflation, was $2,010,429,667, or 84 per cent of the total exports, showing that even with a divided people, 2,000,000 of men withdrawn from peaceful pursuits, and all the waste of war, we have been able to send abroad 84 per cent more goods than we have allowed the world to send us. During this period we have had, with the exception of four years, a protective tariff varying in degree, but generally growing higher.

A further division of the "protective period" into its natural parts and an application of the same analytical methods brings out with striking clearness the benefits of the protective system. From 1861 to 1873 we were either at war or in the throes of reconstruction. During such a time industrial progress is of necessity either absolutely suspended or much retarded. But in this case the circumstances were aggravated. Two-fifths of our population were cut off from foreign trade by the blockade, thus sacrificing the cotton crop, then our most valuable export. In fact, the total exports of the five war years, 1861-1865, amounted to but $850,991,827, only about two-thirds as much as it is estimated we will export this year. Notwithstanding all these drawbacks, the protective tariff of that day, the Morrill tariff, with various amendments, so kept down the imports that the balance of trade against us was but $1,154,884,075, or, in other words, it enabled us to pay with produce for all but 24 per cent of our imports.

During the period from 1874 to June 30, 1898 (estimating the returns of the last two months of this fiscal year), the balance of trade in our favor stands $3,165,313,732. Twenty-one of the twenty-five years showed a credit balance, the sum total being 16 per cent of the total amount of exports.

This is indeed a marvelous showing.

I now desire to call your attention to some data of individual years which have shown large trade balances in our favor. An examination and analysis of these figures will show how necessary it is to have a protective tariff in order to secure the full measure of good fortune that has blessed our fields with smiling plenty, while others in Europe or throughout the world are blighted.

Prior to the fiscal year of 1897, the year 1879 held the record for a favorable trade balance with $264,661,666 to its credit. It was a year of high prices for agricultural products, especially breadstuffs. Wheat for export averaged $1.07 a bushel, and corn 47 cents. The crop, however, was not large, the total exports of breadstuffs being $210,355,528. Cotton, too, was a short crop, amounting to but $162,304,250, about $90,000,000 short of the average. The price was high, however—9.0 cents. Altogether our agricultural products amounted to $527,837,224 out of a total of exports valued at $699,534,742. The high tariff kept the imports down to $445,777,775, and we reaped the benefit of our good fortune in cash or its equivalent.

Eighteen years passed before the record of 1879 was equaled or surpassed. In 1897 many of the conditions of 1879 were duplicated in effect. It was a year of fair harvests, with a brisk demand abroad that put wheat at 74 cents and corn at 30 cents. Cotton, though much lower in price, was a normal crop and brought in $230,890,971. Altogether our agricultural exports amounted to $628,782,812, over a hundred millions more than in 1879, while the total exports were $1,032,007,603, three hundred and thirty-five millions more. With these conditions it seems as though the trade balance should have been at least a hundred millions greater to correspond with our increased sale of agricultural products. But it was not; it was, in fact, but twenty-two millions more, $296,263,144. And why? The answer is easy: Because, under the lower tariff rates prevailing, foreign merchants were enabled to send us $764,730,412 worth of goods, and thus deprive us of about one-third the profits of our abundant farms.

The comparison between the current year and 1897 is most convincing. To secure the figures for this year I have estimated the totals on the basis of the ten months already past. The result shows that the total exports will be about one thousand two hundred and thirty millions, of which agricultural products make up eight hundred and sixty-two millions. From these figures it seems that we will sell of the products of the farm two hundred and thirty-six millions more than last year and three hundred and thirty-five millions more than in 1879. Wonderful! Yet, without a protective tariff, we should not reap more than eleven-twentieths of our good fortune, as the experience of 1897 will demonstrate.

Let us assume, for the sake of argument, that the Wilson bill had remained in force another year. Not even the most rabid free trader will insist, I think, that it would have made another spear of wheat or corn spring up in our fields or blighted an extra one of the already stricken acres of the Old World. We would have undoubtedly sold just as many bushels of wheat as under the Dingley bill. But would we have been paid for it in cash or in cheap goods? Let us see.

In 1897 we exported a hundred millions more in agricultural products than in 1879; but the favorable balance of trade was increased only twenty-two millions over that of 1879, because the low tariff which prevailed last year allowed our foreign debtors to neutralize our extra sale of the products of the farm by largely increased importations. This year we will sell about three hundred and thirty-five millions more agricultural products than in 1879. How would we fare had we still the Wilson bill? It is a simple arithmetical problem to which we may apply the rule of three. Thus: If a one hundred million increase in agricultural exports produces a twenty-two million increase in trade balance, how much will a three hundred and thirty-five million increase in agricultural exports produce? Answer: About three and one-half times as much, or seventy-four millions increase. The trade balance of 1879 was two hundred and sixty-four millions, so we find that we might this year have a trade balance of three hundred and thirty-eight millions. Expressed in figures, the comparison stands thus:

1898.—Under Dingley bill.		1898.—Under Wilson bill.
Exports, total	$1,230,000,000	Exports, total	$1,230,000,000
Exports, agricultural ..	862,000,000	Exports, agricultural ..	862,000,000
Imports, total	618,000,000	Imports, total	862,000,000
Balance of trade	617,000,000	Balance of trade	368,000,000

It is perfectly clear, then, that the repeal of the Democratic tariff law and the enactment by the Republican party of a genuinely protective measure has saved the country, within a year of its passage, the immense sum of $279,000,000.

The financial condition of the Government and country at large has been immensely improved in the fifteen months that President McKinley has held office. In support of this statement I invite attention to the following figures:

Government receipts and expenditures.
Receipts from July 1, 1898, to April 1, 1897	$242,785,051.25

Total earnings of 201 railroad companies, owning 150,000 miles of road, to January, 1898, $1,037,000,000, an increase of $58,000,000 over 1896.

In 1896 thirty-four railroad companies, controlling 5,441 miles of road, went into receivers' hands, while in 1897 only eighteen, owning 1,551 miles, suffered that fate.

The commercial failures of 1897 were 2,000 less in number than those of 1896, and the liabilities $90,000,000 less.

In 1897 the output of pig iron was 9,654,680 tons, an increase of a million tons of the output of 1896, and for this year the unprecedented production of 12,000,000 tons is predicted.

Mr. President, I have addressed myself particularly to a consideration of the financial advantages which flow from the return of the Republican party to the control of the Government, because profits which can readily be expressed in dollars are the first with which our material interests must concern themselves. The ethical and economic results of the policy of the party of Lincoln, Grant, and McKinley are in my opinion no less important to the higher life of our people. Indeed, we might well afford to spend an amount equal to the vast sum of our national profits to secure the social benefits we have already gained in earning them. If "he who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before is a benefactor," what shall we say of the party whose policy has set thousands at work where hundreds worked before? Whatever glorious title the verdict of history and the voice of posterity shall assign to this service, it will by common consent be given to the Republican party as the most effective laborer for the further civilization, refinement, and uplifting of humanity.

The results of these labors are felt all over this land. To the aid of no class or section are they specially directed. The farmer of the West, the planter of the South, are as much benefited as the manufacturers of the North and East. The opposition to the protective policy of the Republican party has been kept alive by efforts calculated to arouse sectional prejudice. The farmers of my section and doubtless of others have been the mark for arguments which are calculated to arouse every selfish passion. The South has suffered more in consequence of such opposition than any other section of the country. Our people at last appreciate the fact that the only way to secure a complete realization of the manifold blessings that will necessarily follow the dawn of Southern prosperity is to welcome the capitalist in our midst. In this connection I desire to say that the people of my State are conservative and patriotic, and can be relied upon to extend a cordial welcome to the capitalists from all sections. Envy, malice, and uncharitableness have been the allies enlisted to blind the farmer's eyes to his own manifest advantage. The general attitude of those gentlemen who choose to describe protection as theft by the Government, and its supposed exclusive beneficiaries, the manufacturers, as robbers, is to my mind better described by the eminent Speaker of the present House of Representatives in a speech made some years ago than in any other language which has come under my observation. Of such persons Mr. REED said in addressing the House on the Mills bill:

This exaggerated idea of the profits of manufacturers is at the bottom of it. Whenever I walk through the streets of that Democratic importing city of New York and I look at the brownstone fronts, my gorge rises. I can never understand why the virtue which I know is on the sidewalk is not thus rewarded. I do not feel kindly to the people inside. But when I feel that way I know what the feeling is. It is good, honest, high-minded envy. When some other gentlemen feel that way they think it is political economy.

The burst of laughter which greeted this sally has not died away in the memory of those who realize that success is first and best attained by raising oneself rather than pressing one's competitor down. The Republican party stands for opportunity. None but a shallow demagogue has ever told the people that government can do more than protect its citizens in developing such opportunities as nature and industry may bring them. It can not create opportunity. It can only conserve it. Bearing this in mind, the Republican party has committed itself to the great doctrine of protection as the best means which human ingenuity has devised to aid and enrich a people. That it has notably done so this year is proven by the figures I have quoted. But these figures are better appreciated by the banker than the farmer. Now

I shall quote some which the tiller of the smallest mountain farm will understand clearly.

The figures I refer to are found in the report of the Agricultural Department for 1884, pages 472, 474, and in my opinion constitute the briefest, most complete and unanswerable argument in favor of diversified industries that has ever been published. The Department Statistician divided the States of the Union into groups according to the number of their inhabitants engaged in agricultural pursuits. The first group had farmers to the extent of less than 80 per cent; the land there was worth $38.65 an acre, and laborers' wages were $24.14 per month. In the second group from 80 to 90 per cent were farmers; the land was worth $30.55 per acre, and laborers' wages were $23.51 per month. In the third group the farmers number from 90 to 95 per cent; the land was worth $13.53 per acre, and laborers' wages were $19.51. In the fourth group the agriculturists numbered over 95 per cent; land was worth $5.18 per acre, and laborers' wages $13.67. In the first group the value of the products of the soil to the cultivator was $457 per capita; in the second group, $394; in the third, $261; and in the fourth, $160.

What was true in 1884 is true to-day.

The foregoing figures prove the benefit to agriculture flowing from the Republican policy of increasing manufactures, and thus building up, for the benefit of the farmer as well as for all of the people of this country, that vast home market which is by all means our richest commercial possession. And this does not mean that one, two, or three States out of the forty-five shall be fed by the others and in return manufacture their goods. It means that as manufacturing establishments become distributed over the country they better not only themselves, but their neighborhood. In a word, the highest ideal of a home market is where the factory is beside the farm. Some of our States have that now, as the figures show, and profit by it. All should strive for it. It goes without saying that this great home market will be but feeble and stumbling if the manufactures which brought it into being are not guarded against the ruinous competition of foreign cheap labor. Nothing is plainer than the prompt and energetic effect upon our manufactures produced by any change of tariff policy.

I also desire to call attention to the following statement made by Statistician Hyde, of the Agricultural Department, on the 6th day of March, 1898. Among other things, he says:

It can not be questioned that the farmers of the United States received for their cereal crops of 1897 something like $130,000,000 more than for those of 1896, and $80,000,000 more than for those of any preceding year since 1892. The hay crop, notwithstanding that it was the largest, with one exception, ever raised, commanded an increased price per ton, wool is higher, and considerably higher than at any time since 1893, and cotton is the only important product with regard to which there is not a substantial improvement over the conditions prevailing a year ago.

Still more significant are the statistics of farm animals, which show that during the year 1897 the farm horses in the country increased in value over $25,000,000, the mules over $6,000,000, the milk cows over $65,000,000, other cattle over $104,000,000, sheep over $25,000,000, and swine over $6,000,000—a total increase of value during the year of over $236,000,000.

This remarkable increase in value is well distributed, there being not a single State or Territory in the Union that does not report an increase in the average farm price per head of cattle and sheep, and but few where an equally satisfactory report is not made as regards all other farm animals. In Georgia the total value of farm animals increased during the year 1897 $3,000,000, in Pennsylvania nearly $7,000,000, in Ohio over $10,000,000, in Kansas over $20,000,000, and in Nebraska over $22,000,000, the increase in Kansas and Nebraska being 24 and 41 per cent, respectively.

Taking the products of the soil and the various products of the animal industry together, there is not the least doubt that the farmers of the United States received $500,000,000 more in 1897 than in 1896. This is a conservative estimate and well within the actual facts.

All these statistics—

point in the same general direction, namely, to a greatly increased business activity, due, in part, to the marked improvement in the condition of the agricultural industry and in part to a general restoration of confidence.

In all this prosperity the Southern States have and are continuing to share. Republican control of the Government is remodeling the South. In the past year the signs of change for the better are many. The banks of the nine reserve cities hold over $15,000,000 more on deposit this spring than they did a year ago, and besides have furnished much of the capital to place in operation 2,146 new manufacturing plants which have been started in the South during the past year. While there has been a notable increase in the volume of the currency in the South since the Republican party assumed control of the country, at the same time we have not sufficient banking facilities to meet the increased demands of that section. I trust that Congress will in the near future enact a banking law that will secure a proper distribution of the currency, which will necessarily result in the establishment of a greater number of banks in the South. The railroads have done a flourishing business. From the five leading ports of the South there was shipped in 1897 89,077,115 more bushels of grain than in 1896, and this excess was worth $31,877,168. This increase is phenomenal, representing a percentage of advance of 55.7 per cent, while all the other ports of the United States show only 23.5 per cent increase. Does not that look as though the South were coming to the front with a rush? What does it signify that much of the grain was not grown at the South but in the far West? It is an object lesson in the reciprocal character of the association of the sections of our country to note that even the temporary special good of one is shared by the others. Even though the wheat which has for months been pouring over seas is denied to our fields by the semitropical sun, it helped to enrich us nevertheless. Every bushel that rolled a mile over a Southern railroad did its share toward broadening the stream of benefits which flows out upon every needy country through which a busy railroad passes.

The people of the Southern States are on the verge of a more general appreciation of the benefits of Republican control of the Government. They stand on the threshold of a commercial development which will in its full fruition be more remarkable than any which has marked the progress of any other section of our country.

The opportunities which the protective policy of the Republican party offers to industry and thrift now are being more generally grasped, and already there are signs of progress that require no prophet's eye to interpret; signs that indicate as clearly as finger posts by the roadside that the South is soon to come into the full enjoyment of her glorious inheritance. I make the prediction without fear that before five years are passed the States which lie South of Mason and Dixon's line will be as near the front in a generous interstate rivalry for the crown of industrial supremacy as they are now in the race all the sections are making to show their patriotism.

It is a stupendous task to indoctrinate an entire people with an economic philosophy which for more than two generations has been held by them as foreign to their best interests. But the work has been done, not so much by the voice of schoolmasters or stump-orators as by the ceaseless propaganda of industrial example. The feeble efforts of the pioneers in the work of developing the natural resources of the South have been more far-reaching than they knew, because they have taught the people that the place to smelt iron is where iron and coal are dug, and that the place to spin and weave cotton is beside the cotton field. And with this lesson came the important one—the one the farmer learned—that every iron furnace or cotton mill established in the country raises the price of his stock, his produce, and, consequently, his land.

Mr. President, the economic attitude of the South has been misunderstood. It is the usual error of the publicist and orator that the South from the beginning was opposed to protection and chose to be merely the farm garden of our British cousins. No greater mistake was ever made. Her greatest staple—cotton—became King Cotton through the protective system. Common report has credited to Eli Whitney's cotton gin the honor of uplifting the cotton trade, but it is a mistake. A protective tariff placed upon cotton by the wish of her own people and increased through the efforts of one of the greatest statesmen of that section, John C. Calhoun, really did the work. Whitney and his gin made the cotton trade a possibility, but Calhoun and the protection granted it by the tariff of 1816 made it a golden reality. Calhoun's early advocacy of a protective tariff has been lost sight of in the notoriety he later obtained as an opponent of the system. The South Carolinian was the strongest advocate of the tariff of 1816, but in eight years he changed his mind, and opposed the tariff acts of 1824 and 1828 with vigor, pursuing his opposition at that time and later so far as to finally lead to his famous quarrel with Jackson and the nullification controversy of 1832.

Calhoun had in 1816 done more than he could later undo, for not even his great influence could overthrow the work he had done for protection; and the high tariff, as far as cotton was concerned, continued until the final triumph of the Democracy and free trade in 1844 and the passage of the Walker tariff in 1846.

Cotton in the first tariff bill received a protection of 3 cents per pound. This, it should be remembered, was not placed there by the recommendation of Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury and reputed father of tariff legislation, but in opposition to his opinion and wishes. By reference to his famous report upon the manufactures of the country, it will be seen that so far from regarding the raising of cotton by the South as a reasonable possibility, he considered the attempt ill judged and doomed to failure, because, in his view, the cotton fields of the South were too far removed from a tropic sun to ever hope to produce the plant in its best development. His recommendation in that report, which must ever remain the text-book of protection, was that the 3-cent duty first placed on cotton should be abolished in order that the mills of New England might have the advantage of raw material at the lowest price. Yet, notwithstanding the power and persuasive influence of Hamilton, the Southern members of Congress prevailed, and so pressed their point that at the expense of the Northern manufactures the 3-cent duty was retained and afterwards increased. More than this, the duty upon cotton received special consideration in the tariff of 1816. As a war measure all duties during the struggle of 1812-1815, which one of our historians has well called the "second war for independence," had been doubled. This raised the duty on cotton from 16 per cent to 33 per cent. Upon the advent of peace it became necessary to readjust the tariff in order to minimize the effect of returning at once to the old schedule. Cotton was well cared for; its duty was fixed at 25 per cent, a reduction of but 7 per cent from the inflated war figures.

This concession was not secured without a parliamentary struggle, the brunt of which was borne by Calhoun, who crossed swords with Webster. Here was a remarkable spectacle. The illustrious Webster, from industrial Massachusetts, opposing the protective system, by which his State and its neighbors were to rise to wealth and power. On the other hand, the dignified and courtly but sometimes fiery Calhoun advocating with brilliant diction, profound logic, and fascinating oratory the economic system which later he was to oppose with every energy of his being. Listen to his words:

When our manufactures are grown to a certain perfection, as they soon will be under the fostering care of Government, we shall no longer experience these evils. The farmer will find a ready market for his surplus products, and what is almost of equal consequence, a certain and cheap supply for all his wants. His prosperity will diffuse itself through every class of the community.

Could a man say more? He spoke with the tongue of a prophet, although his own section has but now begun to reap the benefits he pictured so graphically. That it did not do so earlier was due to the crowning of cotton—to the setting of one crop upon a pinnacle to the neglect of all others. But before the next tariff contest in Congress, in 1824, the South had seen the effects of the increased duty upon cotton, and that staple was in that year the most valuable of the country's exports. Cotton was at the steps of the throne; its scepter and rule seemed secure. Calhoun had changed his mind, but it was too late. He could not prevent the increase of protective duties, although he carried with him the vote of his State and most of those from his section.

Still he advocated no reduction upon cotton, at least, nor was there willingness on the part of Southern leaders to have the duty upon cotton reduced until the Walker tariff of 1846 was under consideration. The passage of this measure might well have opened the eyes of the opponents of protection in the cotton-growing States, for it was followed by a long period of depression which culminated in the financial crash of 1857. "Free trade and sailors' rights" sounded well as a battle cry in 1812, and under it our sailors won immortal glory; but as an economic measure it was a flat failure.

The year after the passage of the Walker bill the price of raw cotton touched bottom. Only once was "that bad eminence" even approached, and that was the year after the passage of that latter experiment in free trade, the Wilson bill. Not only was the effect of the Walker tariff, or, as it has always been known, "the free-trade tariff of 1846," disastrous to the price of the great staple of the South, but the export business was prostrated as well. From a total exportation in 1845 of 2,072,000 bales, the amount shrunk in 1846 to but 1,241,000 bales. Nor did the next few years mend the misfortune. The gold discoveries in California attracted the tide of development toward the West, and the railroad building and expansion was chiefly in that direction. But none of this helped the South. Cotton was very low and lands were unsalable at any price. The value of farms and plantations fell so low that the mortgages could not be collected, and a wholesale eviction of old holders followed. State taxes were unpaid, leading to bankruptcy and ruin.

Mr. President, time forbids that I multiply examples of the disaster and suffering wrought in the South through the Democratic victory of 1846, and the consequent overthrow of the protective policy conceived by Hamilton and defended by Henry Clay. The record is still recent enough to need but an appeal to memory to recall it. There are men still living who mark their descent from affluence and comfort into poverty from the day the Walker tariff became a law. So appalling was the shrinkage in every branch of business that President Fillmore says in his message of December 2, 1851:

The value of our exports of breadstuffs and provisions, which it was supposed the incentive of a low tariff and large importations from abroad would have greatly augmented, has fallen from $68,701,921 in 1847 to $26,051,378 in 1850, and to $21,848,653 in 1851.

Again I quote from President Fillmore; this time from his message of December 6, 1852:

Most of the gold of California as fast as coined finds its way directly to Europe to pay for goods purchased.

But, Mr. President, a brighter day has dawned. Out of the wreck of schemes and ill-founded hopes has arisen a new generation, who, working with head, hand, and heart, are raising the Southern States to a place where prosperity, plenty, and happiness shall be the familiar portion of their people. In the front rank of States that are working out a splendid destiny stands North Carolina. No State has greater possibilities, none greater need of the fostering care that flows from Republican control of the Government.

In order that the country at large may appreciate the wealth and resources of my State, I call attention to the following statements contained in the last report of the bureau of labor statistics of North Carolina:

W. C. Kerr (State geologist in January, 1881) estimated the water power of the State at 3,500,000 horsepower. If the whole of this were employed in cotton manufacturing, it would be adequate to turn 145,000,000 spindles.

The water power of North Carolina would manufacture three times the entire cotton crop of the country, whereas all the mills on the continent now in operation only spin one-quarter of it, and, putting the crop of the State at 400,000 bales, it has water power enough to manufacture fifty times that quantity.

North Carolina has a greater variety of minerals than has been discovered in any territory of like extent on the globe, from gold and precious gems to the celebrated black oxide magnetic iron ore of Cranberry, and from the finest porcelain clay to marble of exquisite tints and granite of many colors.

The State has inexhaustible forests of hard woods, white and yellow pine, and a greater variety of medicinal plants, roots, and herbs than any other spot on the continent.

Corn, cotton, and rice are now much greater staples than naval stores, but lumber more than maintains its old place in the industries and exports of the State. It is not limited to pine and oak, as in the past, but comprises black walnut, cherry, poplar, hickory, locust, and a great many other varieties of forest growth employed in the industrial arts.

The people have learned that every item of labor employed on raw material adds more than cost to its marketable value, consequently saw and planing mills, spoke and hub, tool handle, skuttle, and furniture factories have been erected in the State. High Point has fourteen furniture factories and manufactures all kinds of furniture, and the profits derived from this industry have added largely to the general wealth. The State will soon cease to export raw lumber and will send out the finished goods. This is now true in cotton—we manufacture as much as we produce.

The possibilities of this department are indeed great, for through it North Carolina can be placed before the world rich in mineral wealth, with noble forests, from walnut of the mountains to the cypress of the coastal plain; water courses able to whirl the cotton spindles of the world, while water from the mineral springs of the mountains of the west—all can the Old North State set before the world. Glancing through the data concerning the employees of the different industries of the State, there will be noticed a decided improvement. In the entire list employment is more regular than in 1886, and many of the industries of the State are now reopening, and next year promises to greatly increase the mineral production of the State.

Mica is found in the western counties, and a majority of the mines are located in Mitchell, Yancey, Jackson, Macon, Buncombe, McDowell, Cleveland, Rutherford, and Polk. During the past few years the low tariff rate has permitted the importation of large quantities of mica from India, and this has had a tendency to decrease the North Carolina product.

Congress has put a duty on mica, which has caused a revival of the mica mining. New mines are being opened and old mines worked. There are more men mining mica in North Carolina at present than there has been for ten years. From the best information we can gather there has been at least $5,000,000 worth of mica mined in this State.

The citizens of my State have not been backward in entering upon the development of her industries, and the whirr of spindle and the click of the loom in hundreds of cotton mills is daily teaching her people the great lesson of industrial expansion. In a letter recently received from a progressive business man there occurs a paragraph which so eloquently and exactly describes the change in the sentiment of the "Old Tar-Heel State" that I shall quote it and make the words my own:

There is a noticeable improvement in every way, even in the countenances and expression of the people—an element of elasticity and energy in the very atmosphere.

Prosperity has come to North Carolina to stay. This year there is a boom. Farm products are from 15 to 40 per cent higher than last year. Cattle in quick demand at 100 per cent advance. Horses 75 per cent higher than 1897, and few to be had. Poultry 150 per cent above last year. The lumber industry that was prostrated in 1896-97 is active and prosperous. Tobacco is higher than in four years. I quote from an editorial which recently appeared in the Morning Post, a leading Democratic paper published in Raleigh:

In the excitement attendant upon the war news, and the great sorrow which has afflicted our community specially in connection with the war, we must not lose sight of those facts which directly affect and concern the material affairs of our people. War has its calamities as well as its terrors, but it is under such afflictions that a really great people can show their highest capacities and fulfill their highest duties—as individuals and as a nation.

The Post has endeavored to give special attention to any and every occurrence tending to encourage our people in their business pursuits. It desires to be useful in this respect, and, while not indulging in vain hopes or speculations, has made use of every fact or incident which, in its opinion, could encourage the enterprise or the aspirations of our people.

We are therefore specially gratified at the evidences of rapid, general improvement in business conditions given by the reports of those great agencies, Bradstreet's and Dun's, published in our telegraphic columns this morning. These statements are reliable facts, first of all, because these two agencies have no cause to misrepresent but every reason to state facts as they exist. They are reliable because they are based on reports which, gathered from so many sources and therefore subject to comparison and verification, must be honestly stated or the falsehoods could and would be detected and exposed. These statements, therefore, of Messrs. Bradstreet and Dun can be relied on as a true reflex of the great industrial and commercial forces of our country in all their ramifications as they really exist.

These reports for the past six weeks specially show unmistakable evidence of the regular, and we may say great, as well as gratifying improvement to a more or less extent in every branch of industry and business enterprise. Not only this, but a corresponding loosening of the strings which have for so long a time so tightly closed the purse, which governs all trade and traffic and enterprise. This feature has been as conspicuous as it has been gratifying. We have at last, beyond doubt, despite war and all other existent or supposable disturbances and conditions, gotten out of the slough into which the country has wallowed during the past several years and entered upon a new and we believe permanent era of prosperity.

That there are instances to the contrary is true; there be such in all seasons, under all circumstances. But these are merely incidental when compared to the general condition. Let us all take heart, thank God, and have courage, and each exert himself to accelerate the return of "good times." Read the dispatches referred to and get to work with renewed vigor.

This is the leading Democratic paper in North Carolina, and I take it it will be received as good evidence by the other side of the Chamber.

I also quote from the characteristic letter of an old and respected farmer:

For the last forty years I have watched the prices of cattle, sheep, and poultry, and I have never seen such a demand for them as there is now, and the money is always ready in the hand of some one to pay for them. Since the enactment of the Dingley bill it is visible that there is new life in every industry in this country. The people get up earlier and go to bed later, use better language, and sing better tunes. In fact, they are in better humor with each other and themselves.

The development of the cotton-milling industry has been of infinite value. Here is what the president of a prominent bank in one of the principal cities of the State says:

The cotton mills in our section of the South are doing well now. Last year was the hardest we have had on business, but most of our mills made fair earnings for the year. The general business of the country has been greatly benefited by building cotton mills and giving employment to labor. The developing of cotton manufacturing has greatly increased the mercantile business, and has enhanced the value of farming land within a radius of many miles around each plant. It also has a tendency to diversify farm products. The farmer has a home market for everything he produces.

Another bank president writes:

The cotton mills in operation here have been very successful; in fact, their profits have been so large that I am not at liberty to state the exact figures; but suffice it to say that it did not take but a few years for the dividends to equal the investment. We have found that the development of the cotton manufacturing has increased mercantile business, enhanced the value of both town and country real estate, and figures actively to all kinds of trade and industry.

These statements are gratifying in the extreme and justify the belief that the principles of protection will in the future receive the indorsement of the majority of the voters of the old North State. North Carolina was a Whig State before the war, and a majority of the people of that State were educated to believe in the principle of protection for American industries. That sentiment has never changed, but has remained dormant in consequence of race and sectional prejudice resulting from the institution of slavery and the late civil war.

The election of McKinley as President, coupled with his magnanimous and patriotic policy in the conduct of the war with Spain, has completely obliterated the influences which I have mentioned, and under his wise and statesmanlike administration of the affairs of this Government a bright and prosperous future is in store, not only for North Carolina, but for the entire South.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON in the chair). The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Secretary will announce the first order of business.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

The bill (S. 3545) for the adjustment and payment of certain claims against the Government of the United States was announced as the first case in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state, for the information of the Senate, that this bill was put upon the House bill as an amendment, and it is very possible that it should be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], chairman of the Committee on Claims, not being present, I ask that the bill may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3546) for reference of certain claims against the Government of the United States to the Court of Claims was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be passed over, and I will look at it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, as requested by the Senator from Colorado.

JAMES T. HUGHES.

The bill (H. R. 6679) to repeal an act entitled "An act to perfect the military record of James T. Hughes" was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DESTRUCTION OF THE BATTLE SHIP MAINE.

Senate resolution No. 282, directing the Committee on Naval Affairs to make immediate and thorough inquiry into the cause of the destruction of the battle ship Maine, in Havana Harbor, was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. CARTER. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs does not seem to be present, and I suggest that the resolution be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is suggested by the Senator from Montana that the concurrent resolution be passed over. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

VIRGINIA I. MULLAN.

The bill (S. 2778) for the relief of Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md., was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NORTHRUP & CHICK.

The bill (S. 3181) for the relief of Northrup & Chick was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in line 7, after the word "determine," to strike out "the amount thereof;" in line 8, before the word "justly," to insert "whether anything is;" in line 9, after the word "Chick," to insert "and, if so, the amount thereof;" and after the word "him," in line 15, to insert "and the receipt by said Northrup & Chick, or their representatives, of any amount found due them shall operate as a waiver and relinquishment of any claim for interest;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to examine and adjudicate the claim of Northrup & Chick, late licensed Indian traders with the Pottawatomie Indians in Kansas, for supplies furnished said Indian band for their subsistence, and to determine whether anything is justly due said Northrup & Chick, and, if so, the amount thereof, and whether there is any fund belonging to said Indians which can be applied to the payment of such claim, and, if so determined, then to report and certify the amount found due to said Northrup & Chick, without interest, to be paid from the funds of said Indians to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be so paid by him; and the receipt by said Northrup & Chick, or their representatives, of any amount found due them shall operate as a waiver and relinquishment of any claim for interest.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE TENDERS.

Mr. McMILLAN. The next two bills on the Calendar are the bill (S. 3718) appropriating $100,000 for the construction of a light-house tender for use on Lake Erie and Lake Ontario and the bill (S. 3719) appropriating $100,000 for the construction of a light-house tender for use on Lakes Huron, Superior, and Michigan. The subject-matter of those bills was disposed of in the sundry civil appropriation bill. I move that the bills be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

OFFICERS INTERESTED IN CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 3380) to amend section 5498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order on the Calendar, and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that section 5498 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be construed to apply to any attorney or counselor specially appointed to assist the Attorney-General or a district attorney under sections 363 and 366 of the Revised Statutes, except as to claims having some bearing upon the matter with relation to which such appointment has been made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY STOREKEEPER.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3277) to authorize the appointment of a military storekeeper in the Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a military storekeeper in the Quartermaster's Department of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEROY POTTER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 3590) to remove the charge of desertion from the name of Leroy Potter was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. GRAHAM.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3703) for the relief of George W. Graham.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in section 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "two thousand," in the same line, after the word "and," to strike out "seventy-eight" and insert "eighty-four," and in line 7, after the word

"and," to strike out "fifty-three" and insert "ten;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George W. Graham the sum of $484.10, in full compensation for services and advances made as local agent of the Solicitor of the Treasury at Harpers Ferry, W. Va., from July 2, 1878, to November 30, 1880, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL McNULTY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 4756) for the relief of Michael McNulty.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the effect of the measure?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that this is a small piece of property in the District of Columbia which is tied up because of the act that restricts the ownership of real estate to American citizens. This man purchased it in good faith and is the real bona fide owner, and has an opportunity to sell it. We have passed several similar acts permitting this to be done in cases where there seemed to be no wrong to anyone. I understand that this man is now an American citizen, but he was not at the time the property was purchased.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

G. K. KNOWLTON.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1307) to correct the naval record of G. K. Knowlton, late of the United States Navy.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAMES OF STREETS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4090) relating to the names of streets in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PASCO. I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie over.

SCHOONER BERGEN.

The bill (S. 3173) for the relief of the owner or owners of the schooner Bergen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of the legal owner or owners of the schooner Bergen, of New York, Benjamin H. Moss, master, of her cargo, freight, tow, and personal effects, alleged to have been sunk by collision with the United States steamship Periwinkle, at the mouth of the Potomac River, on or about the 18th day of January, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 4704) extending franking privileges through the mails to officers and enlisted men in the Army and Navy of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I feel sure that the Senator from Connecticut who sits to my right [Mr. PLATT] is not fully satisfied in reference to that bill, and I think it ought not to be considered in his absence. I heard him make the suggestion that he thought he might want to be heard on the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. At the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, I will ask that the bill may lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be read.

EDWARD KOLB.

The bill (S. 3838) for the relief of Edward Kolb, of Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred" and insert "two hundred and eighty-six;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Edward Kolb, of Washington, D. C., $286, for boarding and lodging John Wadsworth, a delegate from the Peoria band of Indians in the Indian Territory, from November 23, 1896, to January 1, 1898.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW March 10, 1898, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3838) for the relief of Edward Kolb, of Washington, D. C., report the same back with a recommendation that it pass amended as follows:

In line 5 strike out the words "six hundred" and insert in their stead the words "two hundred and eighty-six," so that the bill will conform to the recommendation of the Interior Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUILDING LINES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, yesterday I reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia two bills—the bill (S. 4191) to readjust the boundary of the National Zoological Park and preserve its seclusion between Park road on the east and Cincinnati street and Connecticut avenue on the west, and the bill (S. 4457) to provide for the establishment of building lines on certain streets in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. I was not aware at the time when those reports were made that these two bills had gone to the Calendar previous to yesterday, but such seems to be the fact. So, notwithstanding the action of the Senate, the bills still remain on the Calendar. I move that the bill (S. 4457) to provide for the establishment of building lines on certain streets in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL ZOOLOGICAL PARK.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 4191) to readjust the boundary of the National Zoological Park and preserve its seclusion between Park road on the east and Cincinnati street and Connecticut avenue on the west was indefinitely postponed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 9414.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3414) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PETTUS, at the end of line 61, paragraph 8, section 7, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, It shall be unlawful for said bank to contract for or receive interest on any loan or forbearance at a greater rate than 6 per cent per annum.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, when this matter was up for consideration yesterday the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], a distinguished lawyer, was good enough to ridicule the proposition which had been made that the shares of a bank or any governmental agency could not be taxed except by leave of Congress, and he read many authorities which seemed satisfactory to him on that subject.

I acknowledge the great ability of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, but I must confess that in my opinion he has not fully and thoroughly examined the authorities on this subject. As great a lawyer as he is, he would not have come to that conclusion, I think, if he had examined them. I did not suppose such a proposition would be controverted, knowing that it had been expressly decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. I thought that, so far as that question was concerned, it was settled.

I have in my hand a decision directly on the question, not by inference, not by logical deduction, not even by that power of logic which the Senator from Ohio has in such a marked degree, and which will enable some men to cipher around the truth. Here it is. I cite the case of People vs. Weaver, in 100 United States Reports, and I read from page 543. In this case the direct question was as to a tax law of the State of New York, whether it discriminated against the shares of bank stock and whether that law could be sustained by the authority given by the United States to tax the shares. It was on the identical question which we had up before. I read:

The question we are called to decide is whether Congress, in passing the act which subjected these shares to taxation by the State, intended, by the very clause which was designed to prevent discrimination between national bank shares and other moneyed capital, to authorize such a result.

That the provision which we have cited was necessary to authorize the States to impose any tax whatever on these bank shares is abundantly established by the cases of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland (4 Wheat., 316), Osborn vs. Bank of the United States (9 Id., 739), Weston vs. The City Council of Charleston (2 Pet., 449).

As Congress was conferring a power on the States which they would not otherwise have had, to tax these shares, it undertook to impose a restriction on the exercise of that power, manifestly designed to prevent taxation which should discriminate against this class of property as compared with other moneyed capital. In permitting the States to tax these shares, it was foreseen—the cases we have cited from our former decisions showed too clearly—that the State authorities might be disposed to tax the capital invested in these banks oppressively.

Mr. President, there is an authority directly, squarely, and angularly on the point, and citing the authorities. There are many other cases to the same effect. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in reading them.

In looking into this question I came across another matter that was suggested in this debate, and it is a matter that Senators had well think of. The distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] called it up. It is asserted broadly and decided by Chief Justice Marshall that Congress has no power whatever to charter a bank simply. It is decided in the great McCulloch case that Congress has no such power unless the bank is chartered for governmental purposes. I know the common way is to pooh-pooh all these constitutional objections as belonging to the antique, a thing too long passed to be considered. But Senators had well, before they pass this act, examine some things that some of the wise old men said in other days.

Mr. President, I am not disputing that Congress can charter a national bank for the purposes of the Government, because that has been decided over and over again the other way. That is not the proposition. The proposition is that unless it is the main purpose of this bill to establish a governmental agency Congress has no power to establish the bank at all, and it so expressly held in Osborn vs. The Bank of the United States. I read from the case of Osborn against The United States Bank (9 Wheaton, pages 859 and 860):

Is this law constitutional?

That is, the law establishing the United States National Bank.

This point was argued with great ability, and decided by this court, after mature and deliberate consideration, in the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland. A revision of that opinion has been requested, and many considerations combine to induce a review of it.

The foundation of the argument in favor of the right of a State to tax a bank is laid in the supposed character of that institution. The argument supposes the corporation to have been originated for the management of an individual concern, to be founded upon contract between individuals having private trade and private profit for its great end and principal object.

If these premises were true, the conclusion drawn from them would be inevitable. This mere private corporation, engaged in its own business, with its own views, would certainly be subject to the taxing power of the State, as any individual would be, and the casual circumstance of its being employed by the Government in the transaction of its fiscal affairs would no more exempt its private business from the operation of that power than it would exempt the private business of any individual employed in the same manner. But the premises are not true. The bank is not considered as a private corporation, whose principal object is individual trade and individual profit, but as a public corporation, created for public and national purposes. That the mere business of banking is in its own nature a private business, and may be carried on by individuals or companies having no political connection with the Government, is admitted, but the bank is not such an individual or company. It was not created for its own sake or for private purposes. It has never been supposed—

I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to these words—

It has never been supposed that Congress could create such a corporation. The whole opinion of the court in the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland is founded on, and sustained by, the idea that the bank is an instrument which is "necessary and proper for carrying into effect the powers vested in the Government of the United States." It is not an instrument which the Government found ready made, and has supposed to be adapted to its purposes, but one which was created in the form in which it now appears, for national purposes only.

We could not get a direct assertion as to whether this was a national governmental agency or not, but if it is not, if this is a private corporation for private benefit—and I do not see that it is anything else—then Congress, according to that decision, has no authority whatever to establish it.

In reference to another point in this case, as to the reserve which this bank was required to keep on hand, I made a mistake. I said it must reserve one-fourth of its capital stock, when the charter says one-fourth of its deposits. But, Mr. President, that power merely of using all its money except one-fourth of its deposits, all of its own capital stock and all it can borrow to the amount of one-half its capital stock, and all that is deposited with it except one-fourth, it seems to me is making what is sometimes called a kite-flying machine.

It evidently is not a safe institution. It may be managed, and perhaps will be managed, for the profit of those who are trying to induce Congress to create this great monster. But, Mr. President, according to my view of it, according to my opinion as to what will be the effect of this corporation and others like it, it would be far better for the people of the United States that it should fail than that it should be so marvelously prosperous as Senators think it will be. It would be better to have all such institutions fail than to have all the authority and power of this Government monopolized by them.

Mr. MALLORY. I have an amendment to the bill, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 32 it is proposed to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 33. That the powers, rights, privileges, obligations, and duties conferred and imposed by this act shall not be exclusive, but shall be conferred and imposed on any citizens of the United States similar in number to the persons named in the first section of this act, who, for the purpose of incorporating an international bank, shall take the steps and follow the procedure prescribed by this act to be taken and followed by the persons named in the first section hereof, for the purpose of incorporating the said International American Bank, and said citizens of the United States shall have the right to adopt such corporate name as to them seems best.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to that amendment, and will accept it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President; the object of that amendment is simply to extend the provisions of this bill to such other citizens of the United States as may desire to avail themselves of the benefits of the bill. I have proposed the amendment because it occurred to me that, if this bill becomes a law, there will be incorporated a very large and powerful banking organization, with ramifications extending into foreign countries, with power to become stockholders in other banking corporations in those countries, and with a very extraordinary power as compared with banks heretofore incorporated in this country.

I am opposed, Mr. President, to anything that savors of monopoly; and I believe that without such an amendment as I have proposed, without something that will open the door to other organizations of equally reputable and capable men to form themselves into such corporations, we shall find hereafter that this organization is a monopoly that it will be very difficult to rid ourselves of.

But even though that amendment be adopted, I do not think that I can find sufficient reason in the ostensible purpose of the measure to justify me in voting for it. That ostensible purpose is to establish a bank in the United States, either in this city or in New York, with a right to establish branch banks in eight States of the Union, and also with the right to establish branch banks, or one branch bank, at least, in Mexico, one in the West Indies, and two in South America. It also has the right to increase the number of the branch banks.

When we come to analyze the condition of trade between this country and those countries referred to in the bill, it seems to me a little singular that this measure should be urged as being essentially necessary for that trade. We had an argument from the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] yesterday, going to show how absolutely essential the establishment of such a bank as this is for the promotion of trade between those countries and the United States.

Mr. President, as has been stated here by other Senators, the establishment of that bank alone will not open the avenues of trade. It may, in the event that we have an enlarged trade with those countries, be a very considerable adjunct to the promotion of trade, but of itself it will not create trade; and I do not think it is necessary to argue in order to demonstrate that fact.

If there was such a condition of commerce and trade between those countries and this country, why is it that we have not already, by private enterprise, by individual enterprise, established such branch banks or institutions in those countries as have been established by individual and by private enterprise in European countries? There is no question but what New York private bankers and national bankers have their correspondents in the countries of Europe, in Great Britain, and on the Continent upon whom they can draw at any time and for any amount. If it were necessary, by reason of the exigencies of our trade with Mexico, Central America, South America, or the West Indies, that such institutions should be established, the demand itself would, it seems to me, have, to some extent at least, furnished the facilities asked for. I therefore have very grave doubts whether this is such an essential as to call upon the Congress of the United States to incorporate this bank.

There undoubtedly would be a great advantage to those who engage in an international banking business to have their bank incorporated by the Government of the United States. The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] have both stated that that was the principal reason for the organization of this bank. The Senator from Ohio on Monday last, in response to an inquiry from me, stated:

But, however that may be, it was thought, aside from the question of power in a State so to authorize a bank to conduct that kind of business, that it was better policy, inasmuch as we were looking to the interests of the whole country and inasmuch as the bank was to do an international business, to incorporate the bank by the National Government and give it that credit and prestige and power and influence which could be given only by the United States Government, and could not be given by any State government.

It is not denied that a bank organized by a State government, or an ordinary national bank organized by Congress, may establish its connections in those countries, if the exigencies of trade require it; but from the remarks I have just quoted from the Senator from Ohio, and also the remark which I will quote from the Senator from Maine, made on yesterday, it would seem that the main object and purpose of Congress chartering this bank is to simply give the bank the prestige, the credit, the influence, and the power which its connection with the name of the United States and the knowledge that it was organized by the Government of the United States will give to it. The Senator from Maine yesterday said:

Every Senator knows that a bank clothed with power and authority by the United States of America carries with it ten times the influence, the respect, the confidence possessed by a bank authorized by any State of the United States.

Mr. President, that is a fact. I do not question that that prestige, derived from the name of the United States and the alleged connection of the United States, and from the fact that this bank was chartered by the United States, will be a very great thing for such a bank. Whether any trade is carried on between those countries and the United States or not, it would be a great boon to that bank. It will have behind it, implied from the fact that it was organized by the United States, the support and protection of the United States.

I do not mean to say that this bill undertakes to convey any intimation that the United States will be responsible for anything that the bank will do. The bill itself expressly denies that the United States will be responsible for anything that the bank may do; but the man living in a foreign country, the man living in the City of Mexico, or any other city of the Republic of Mexico in which a branch bank may be established, or the man living in Rio de Janeiro or in Buenos Ayres, does not know the fact that the United States is not responsible. He knows the fact, which is brought to his attention on all occasions, that this bank was chartered and organized under an act of the Congress of the United States, under the great seal of the United States; and he will necessarily assume that that bank, organized and sent forth to the world with the seal and approval of the Government of the United States, must necessarily have something in it which places it on a par with our governmental institutions.

If, however, the conditions of our trade were such as to make this bank an absolute necessity for the promotion of trade with those countries, there might possibly be some excuse for it. But it has been shown here that our trade, at least at present and for a few years past, has been languishing with those countries. There seems to be no pressing immediate necessity for the organization of such an institution as this; yet I can readily see how, with the indorsement and support of the Government of the United States that will be derived from the action of Congress in this matter, such a bank may launch forth upon a system of banking in the countries named that will be unsurpassed in the history of the world.

For this reason, Mr. President, I am opposed to lending the influence, the credit, the power, and the prestige of the United States Government to the gentlemen who are named in the first section of this bill. It is not denied that to a certain extent—and I believe I can assert it to be a fact—it can be done absolutely—

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator has just stated that perhaps after the incorporation of this bank it might do a very large business in South American countries where it is authorized to do business.

Mr. MALLORY. A banking business.

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir. Does the Senator think that it is an argument against the incorporation of this bank that it would do a large business, that it would facilitate trade between the United States and those countries?

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator from Louisiana has put a construction upon what I said which I do not think is justified by my language. I said it might do a large banking business in those countries, just as it might do a large banking business in this country; but doing a large banking business in those countries does not necessarily imply that it would do a large business connected with the United States. In other words, that is the very point I wish to make, that under the sanction of this charter, with the function which this charter proposes to give it—because Senators know the effect of the great seal of even a State upon a charter on the minds particularly of foreigners—with that power, credit, influence, and prestige conferred upon it by having the great seal of the United States attached to its charter, it can engage in the banking business in any one of those countries.

There is no limit upon the number of branches it may establish. There is a minimum limit requiring it to establish not less than a certain number, and with no control over it, no responsibility for it. I say no control over it. It is true, however, that the bill does provide for the Comptroller of the Currency exercising an occasional supervisory jurisdiction over the bank; but if it is to establish six, eight, ten, twelve, or fifteen banks in the South American countries and in Mexico and the West Indies, it will be very difficult for the Comptroller at all times to be able to say that there is not something happening in the management of those branch banks that will bring discredit upon the United States, if the United States Government is to vouch for them.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator permit me again for a moment?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes.

Mr. CAFFERY. The main business of this institution to be incorporated and its branches in the States named and its branches in foreign countries will be to deal in foreign exchange, will it not? That is the statement of the charter. If it deals in foreign exchange, which represents the business and trade relations between foreign countries and the United States, would it be at all objectionable that by reason of the bank that trade should augment and increase? If, on the other hand, the bank should succeed in more than rivaling the local banks in local trade, would that be any objection to it?

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the eighth paragraph of section 7 declares:

To carry on the business of banking by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, bills of exchange, drafts, and other evidences of debt; to receive deposits—

Not merely in the United States, but in whatever country these branches are established—to buy and sell exchange, coin, and bullion; to issue letters of credit to the order of the person therein named, and to loan money on personal security, subject to the limits hereinafter imposed; and to borrow money for use in its business in an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of its paid-up capital stock.

In addition to that it may have shares in other banking institutions. Without limitation as to where those banking institutions are, it may own and control the shares under this statute. In other words, it is a gigantic institution that is proposed to be organized here by the United States Government. In the act itself the United States Government washes its hands of all responsibility and proclaims the fact that it is not responsible, and yet sends it forth to the world with nothing to inform the world and those who deal with these banks that the United States is not responsible, other than the mere declaration of the charter itself. It seems to me, Mr. President, that that is a valid objection.

I appreciate the purpose of the Senator from Ohio, and I must say that I have decided sympathy with him, and that if a bill could be framed which could effect that purpose, I would cheerfully join with him and give it my vote; but I do not think this bill is in such shape as will justify us in passing it.

That, however, is only one objection to this measure which occurs to me. There is another which to my mind is much more serious, and is one which I regret has not attracted the attention of the Senate sufficiently to justify the attendance of a greater number of Senators during the discussions which have been held on this measure.

An objection, Mr. President, which to me is insuperable, unless there can be brought some argument to dissipate it, arises from the utterances of the Senator from Ohio himself when he was advocating this measure. On yesterday, in a colloquy which took place between the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], the Senator from Georgia used the following language:

The proposition is that so far as these eight States in which the branches are to be located are concerned, the corporation is to have the right to do business not by virtue of the comity of the States or by their consent, but by virtue of the command of the Federal Government that it shall have it.

The Senator from Ohio responded to that:

That is my view of it.

Subsequently the Senator from Ohio, in a further exposition of that view, stated:

My contention is what I have stated it to be, because, in my opinion, this bank is to discharge governmental functions in the sense in which I have explained. It is an agency established by the Government to be used in the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign countries, and therefore something that is within the purview of the powers conferred by the Constitution upon the Congress, and whenever it comes to the establishment of that kind of an agency, that being admitted, I think the Senator from Georgia will agree with me that that kind of an agency may go into any State.

The Senator from Georgia denied that this was that kind of an agency. The proposition, then, whereon the Senator from Ohio justifies this enactment is that the banking business provided for in this bill is of such a public character that it is a governmental function. In other words, to use his own expression—

It is an agency established by the Government to be used in the regulation of commerce among the States and with foreign countries.

Mr. President, I have given the matter some little thought since the utterances of the Senator, and I have looked into some of the authorities which he has cited, but I fail to see, if that plea be admitted as a sufficient ground for the passage of this bill, how we can consistently refuse to incorporate any manufacturing or commercial corporation at any time that desires to be incorporated in any State of the Union. I can see no more connection between a governmental agency and a national bank or an international bank than I can see between a cotton factory or a shoe factory in New England or an iron-ore plant in Pennsylvania and a governmental agency.

To a certain extent, undoubtedly, the product of the manufactory goes into commerce, and to a certain extent is an instrumentality of commerce; but I think, for the first time, Mr. President, it has been urged upon the Senate that a banking institution, the very kind of an institution which was referred to in the case of McCulloch vs. Maryland, and which the Supreme Court of the United States distinctly declared to be a private institution—a banking institution that is to do nothing connected with the Government, that, with all due respect to the Senator from Ohio, is not an agent of the Government in any particular—can be construed into such a governmental agency as to require the interposition of Congress in order to put it into existence.

The authorities which have been cited here in support of this position, I am free to admit, go to the full extent that was contended for. The case cited by the Senator from Ohio on yesterday from 135 United States Reports, of the Cherokee Nation vs. The Kansas Railway Company, does to a certain extent undoubtedly support the theory of the Senator. It supports it to this extent, that in the matter of building a railroad as one of the instrumentalities of interstate commerce the Government of the United States may organize such a railroad for that purpose and authorize it to pass from one State into another, and to exercise the right of eminent domain for that purpose.

It is true that that point was not directly involved in the case of the Cherokee Nation vs. The Kansas Railway Company, because it is very apparent to one who reads that case carefully that the Supreme Court of the United States need not have referred in any particular to interstate commerce. It could have done just as the States do with regard to railroads within the States—stated that this was a public purpose; that the Cherokee lands were under the sovereignty of the United States; that the United States was sovereign over those lands, and that, the railroad being for a public purpose, the lands could be subjected to the condemnation to which they were subjected, and which was the cause of the suit; but the Supreme Court in that case refers to a previous case decided by it, in which it went further and laid down the broad proposition—I refer to the case of the Pacific Railroad vs. The State of California—laid down the broad proposition that for the purpose of establishing such an instrumentality of interstate commerce as the Pacific railroads were, Congress had the power to authorize the building of those railroads, not only across the Territories, but even across the States, and to authorize the exercise of the right of eminent domain. But, Mr. President, there is a vast distinction between such an instrumentality of commerce as a national railway line from the Atlantic to the Pacific and such an institution as is proposed in this bill.

If I could satisfy myself that the argument of the Senator from Ohio is correct, that this is such an instrumentality of commerce as is contemplated when Congress is required to legislate and provide for the instrumentalities of commerce, I might be willing to waive some of the objections I have to this measure. But with that staring us in the face, and foreseeing the necessary and logical deduction that must flow from it, believing, as I do believe, that if I vote for this measure with the justification therefor set up which was set up by the Senator from Ohio, namely, that it is an instrumentality of commerce which justifies Congress in granting to the bank its charter, then, Mr. President, as I have already said, there is hardly any incorporation, any charter for a commercial, a trading, or a manufacturing purpose that can be presented to this Senate that we could logically and consistently refuse to vote for.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I have not been able to give to this bill the examination that it requires, but from hearing the debates on the question I am convinced that this bank undertakes to carry into execution such power of Government as will authorize its incorporation by an act of Congress. This bank is to deal in foreign exchanges principally. It is not a bank of issue, but a bank designed to facilitate trade and intercourse between the United States and foreign countries and between one State and another. If this bank can be brought under the category of subjects that are properly instrumentalities of commerce, foreign and interstate, I do not see where the constitutional objection lies.

The proposition advanced by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] yesterday to the Senator from Ohio that because this bank will only perform such functions as lay within the scope and power of a State bank; therefore it is not entitled to be incorporated by act of Congress, is an entire non sequitur. State banks can discount foreign bills of exchange. State banks formerly issued currency, and therefore it would be to argue that a bank inaugurated by an act of Congress to discount foreign bills and to issue currency could not do so because State banks could do so. The question is whether or not this is such an instrumentality of commerce as to fall within the scope of the decisions quoted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. President, what does a bill of exchange do? On what is it grounded? It is grounded upon the purchase and sale of a commodity. It transfers property or commodities. It is just as potent a factor in transferring the title of commodities as a railroad is in transferring the commodity itself. It is admitted on all hands that a railroad for international purposes can be incorporated by act of Congress. Congress has incorporated railroads, the trans-continental lines, not only in pursuance of its power to establish post roads, but in pursuance of its power to link States together by those roads. Congress has power to excavate canals to connect one State with another. That is a link to bind one State with another in a commercial sense. The present incorporation is a commercial link to bind the United States in trade relations with foreign countries or to bind one State to another, and Congress, having the power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and the Indian tribes, in my opinion has ample power to incorporate a bank of this kind.

I do not perceive the necessity, although the committee reporting the bill seem to dwell upon that point, of allowing this bank to purchase shares in foreign banks where it may be located. That looks as if there was authority given to this bank to absorb to some extent foreign banks in the locations where it shall do business. I do not see particularly what good can come of this, although that is a mere matter of policy.

But every argument that can be made to show that this bank will do an enormous business is just that much argument in its behalf and favor. I am afraid of no monopoly in this regard. If this bank succeeds and does a large business, other banks will spring up under the amendment offered and which was accepted by the Senator from Ohio in charge of the bill.

There is no danger of its absorbing the local banks in foreign countries unless it does business upon a better method, and there is no danger of this bank becoming the huge monstrosity, the terrible monopoly, that we have heard descanted upon. The business of this bank is to make its money in discounting and in selling foreign bills and in using its deposits to advantage. Now, where is the opportunity for this monopoly that is spoken of? Where is the opportunity for this trust that is spoken of? Where come in the features of this hideous monstrosity which we have heard in an institution chartered simply to make an ordinary per cent, an ordinary commission, upon the purchase and sale of bills and the receipt of deposits and using them for the purpose of buying bills and discounting them?

I am a great friend of banks. I am not one of those who would like to raise the popular fury and indignation against banks. I do not regard banks as any other than an instrumentality of great use and a powerful aid and benefit to trade. It may be that a bank incorporated to issue currency may under certain circumstances inflate or restrict the currency, but that has not happened yet with the national banks of the United States, and it is not likely to happen. Banks, of course, are interested in maintaining the par value of their notes. They are interested in keeping them out. The difficulty with the notes of the banks of the United States is that they are too good. They are not presented often enough for redemption. They are too well secured. There is no money to be made, with bonds at 115 and 117, with 1 per cent tax upon circulation, by the national banks issuing currency to 90 per cent of the bonds deposited for its security. Even if this bank had the power to issue currency, I would not withhold my vote from its charter.

I see nothing in this institution to alarm anybody. I see no threat, covert or open, against the welfare of the community in any direction. I see that it may be an instrument whereby the trade between the United States and these foreign countries may be augmented. If so, I hail it. If it is not such an instrument, if it is in that regard to disappoint the expectations of its supporters, no harm can come of it. The constitutional point is not met by stating that the functions which this bank is to perform can be performed by State banks, nor is it necessary that this bank perform every function of a governmental character. The national banks do not.

You may say that the function of the national banks incorporated under the general laws is to issue currency. Everybody knows that those banks were incorporated in order to procure a sale for the bonds of the United States. Their currency feature was incidental to the main purpose of securing a purchase of the bonds of the United States. But will anybody say that because the banks of the United States perform the governmental function of issuing currency, therefore they can not receive an individual deposit? They can perform every kind of function incident to a bank if they perform enough of a governmental function in order to get their charter from the United States.

The main function of this bank is to deal in an instrumentality of trade which the United States can regulate. Does anybody say or contend that an act of Congress could not regulate the manner and method of the protest of foreign bills? Does anybody say that the jurisdiction of Congress does not extend over those instrumentalities of trade? They are as potent instrumentalities as, and more potent even than, the currency issued by the banks of the United States. They perform more of the functions of money. They transfer the title to more property, for it is a well-known fact that the exchanges of commodities in this country and in advanced European countries are effected more by paper which has not the character of money than by money or by money substitutes.

Ninety-five per cent of the exchanges of the United States are effected without money, by notes, drafts, checks, bills of exchange, credit obligations of various kinds; and when a credit obligation like a foreign bill of exchange transferring the title of foreign goods is made the foundation of the charter of a bank by Congress, I see no flaw in the argument whereby Congress is authorized under the Constitution to incorporate such a bank.

I believe the time is going to come, Mr. President—I do not want to prophesy this morning, for I do not feel in a prophetic mood—and I will hail it from my standpoint, when the banking of this country will be done upon the wealth of the country. I believe the time will come when the currency of the country will be bottomed for its security and validity upon the wealth of the country and not by the deposit of United States bonds. I believe banking will come in the shape in which it existed in the best State banks before the war, and I believe that among those State banks the banks of my own State were unexcelled. They banked entirely upon commercial assets. One of the banks of Louisiana had more specie in its vaults when the war broke out than any other bank in the United States.

The Louisiana Bank had upward of $4,000,000 in specie, and its notes were secured by a deposit in coin of one-third of all the liabilities of the bank and two-thirds in paper running ninety days, and the bills receivable of that bank were nearly always more than its bills payable. Its commercial assets came in to fill the void of any draft upon its deposits or any draft upon its reserve, and that reserve was only one-third to cover every single liability of the bank—notes, deposits, and all. Those banks and this bank I mention particularly in my State went through the crisis of 1857 without a single default of payment. Their notes were redeemed over their counter in gold or silver, as the case might be, as they were presented. They were no instruments of harm. They effected no trust or monopoly. They transacted the business of the community upon a kind of an automatic scale. Every one in that State and in the neighboring States who dealt in New Orleans had implicit confidence in the stability of the banks and their ability to pay their notes on demand.

This bank, it appears, is to retain a quarter of its deposits as a reserve to secure its depositors, to secure its liabilities. It occurs to me that is quite sufficient. I am not banker enough to know, though. Senators upon the floor who know more about the operation of banks in that particular, if that is not enough, can easily suggest an amendment in that regard, so as to save all creditors of the bank against any liability of loss. Without going any further into this discussion—and I have only looked at it from the general standpoint—I will say that from the view which I take of the matter I see nothing in the impolicy of the bank, I see nothing in the unconstitutionality of the bank charter, and therefore I shall support it.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I have not been able to give very much consideration to the provisions of the bill; but as I have read it and as I am able to understand, its purpose is to grant a special private charter to the individuals named in the bill, or to such as may subscribe to stock as provided in the bill to carry on the ordinary business of banking in this country or in foreign countries. It is not proposed to vest in this corporation when it comes into existence any governmental function. It is not proposed to make it a fiscal agent of the United States. It contains no provision looking to its employment as a corporation as a means of strengthening the credit of the United States or of making any disposition of the securities of the Government of the United States. It is not an agent, and it is not proposed to make it an agent, of the United States.

As I understand, it is contended that Congress has authority to enact this bill by virtue of its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and that it comes within the power granted to Congress, because the corporation or bank, when it comes into existence, may, in connection with the domestic business which it may carry on, issue foreign bills of exchange, letters of credit, or make drafts upon foreign bankers or upon the agents of this bank which may come into existence in other countries than the United States.

That, Mr. President, is not a regulation of commerce. The bank is authorized by virtue of its charter to deal in an object which might be the subject of regulation by Congress. It is true that Congress might prescribe in regulation of commerce the conditions upon which such bills of exchange or drafts or letters of credit should be issued, and the conditions so prescribed and enforced would, to the extent to which they would go, be a regulation of that particular species of foreign commerce or trade. Nor does the bill confer upon the bank which is proposed to be created by this special charter authority to prescribe any conditions or regulations under which or by virtue of which these foreign bills of exchange may be issued.

Mr. President, to create corporations is not one of the enumerated objects of the Federal Government as defined in the Constitution. The convention, when it framed the Constitution, had under consideration the question as to whether the defined power should be given to the Federal Government to create corporations; and when that proposition was presented it was defeated in the convention, thus giving evidence that it was not one of the objects of the creation of the Federal Government to create corporations for their own sake or for private purposes.

I concede that it has been established by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States as well as by the practice of the Government that Congress may create a corporation which may be conducive as a means of carrying out some governmental function or object, but that power has been exercised very sparingly since the foundation of the Government. Congress created the old Bank of the United States, and it was held that it had power to do that because that bank was made a fiscal agent of the United States, substantially a part of the Department of the Treasury to aid in disposing of the securities of the United States and carrying on its financial operations. That was the subject of very grave controversy, and finally after considerable experience, in consideration of the mischiefs that grew out of the granting of the special charter and privilege, it was revoked, and no new charter of a similar description has been granted for more than fifty years.

It is true that Congress granted the Pacific railroads charters. Those roads were to be constructed through Territories belonging to the United States. It was not contemplated that they would pass through the States, but if they did, it was to subserve certain well defined and understood governmental purposes. They were to be used for the transportation of the troops, the armies of the United States, and to be used as postal roads, and telegraph companies had been incorporated by special act of Congress for the purpose of establishing telegraph lines to be used as a means of transmitting news.

All these corporations which thus far in the history of the United States have been created by special acts of Congress have had in view some great, some urgent governmental object or purpose. They were designed to subserve some great and useful governmental end. In no instance has Congress granted a special private charter to a corporation to be employed solely in the ordinary commercial or banking business of the country and where there was no great and imperious necessity for its incorporation in order to aid the Government itself in carrying out the very ends for which it was created.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if the contention made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, who has presented this bill to us for consideration, is sound, that we ought to grant this special charter to these private individuals engaged in the private business of banking, domestic and foreign, and that it is justified, because the bank which is thus created will deal in some of the objects of commerce, the instruments of trade or exchange between this and foreign countries—and he is enabled to show no other relation to any governmental purpose—then, by virtue of the same reasoning, we would, by special charters, cover the entire field of commercial enterprise.

There is not a merchant in the United States who, in the course of his trade, does not either buy some article outside of the State in which his business is located or send some article which he may own into some other State for disposal; and to that extent that individual is engaged in commerce among the States or in commerce with foreign countries. If we would grant to a number of gentlemen a special privilege or charter for banking purposes and gentlemen should come here and ask a special private charter from Congress to engage in the mercantile business wherein there may be an incidental connection or relationship with commerce with foreign countries or among the States, how could we deny to those gentlemen the right of such incorporation or such special privilege? If we can extend it to the mercantile business, we must extend it to the manufacturing business, to the telegraph business, to the telephone business, and to every conceivable line of industry in which the people of the United States may be engaged.

Mr. President, I think we ought to hesitate before entering upon this most extensive field in the way of the creation of corporations. We ought not to grant a special private charter to one set of individuals and refuse to grant to another set of individuals the like privilege, in case they also make application for this privilege. It is contended by those who support this bill that a charter granted in this way by the Congress of the United States to these gentlemen will be of advantage and of great benefit to the persons who may thus obtain the charter. It is because of the special privilege, the valuable franchise which they consider they are obtaining by this method of incorporation over and above an incorporation obtained by any other method, that they come to Congress and ask us to take the time to consider this measure and enact it into law.

If it does possess value by reason of the privilege thus conferred, the franchise which we thus grant, we ought not to confer this valuable privilege upon individuals. It is a special privilege; it is a valuable franchise. It gives to the persons who may be the beneficiaries of its advantages over all the other citizens of the United States not thus favored. It does not leave the entire field open to all the citizens of the United States, giving to all the same privilege, the same opportunity to gain to themselves the advantages which every citizen of the United States ought to possess under just and equal laws, and those are the only laws which should be enacted by the American Congress.

But there are other mischiefs growing out of it. There is no necessity for the conferring of this special privilege upon these gentlemen.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Utah will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that when he was perhaps out of the Chamber an amendment was offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] making this open to everybody, and it was accepted. So it is not any longer a franchise confined to the incorporators named in the bill, but the privilege of organizing an international bank according to the terms and provisions of the bill is to be extended to all who may see fit to apply and conform to the requirements. And I will say to the Senator, if he was not present when I made the statement before, I favored that proposition in committee, as did others, but that the majority of the committee were of the opinion that as it was a first endeavor in this direction we should confine it to one set of incorporators, and the one named.

Mr. RAWLINS. That modifies the provisions of this bill greatly, in my judgment, to its advantage, but still there are objections to the bill which, it seems to me, ought to prevent its enactment.

When interrupted by the Senator from Ohio I was about to invite attention to the fact that special grants of corporate franchises, which were formerly freely obtained from the State legislatures or from the Territorial legislatures, were very mischievous and corrupting in their tendencies. They led to speculation and jobbery. If the franchises which were granted were valuable, the persons seeking to obtain them would appeal to the legislatures of the States and Territories, and by various inducements under some circumstances they obtained the grants when they would not justly be entitled to them.

As a result of the mischief growing out of making such special grants of charters, in nearly all the States, I believe (it is true perhaps in all the States of the Union), the constitutions of the several States expressly prohibit the granting of any private special corporate franchise or privilege. Those constitutional provisions adopted in the States were the outgrowth of the corrupting tendencies, the mischief which grew out of the passing of special charters or the granting of these special privileges. In the various States, therefore, general acts prescribing certain conditions upon which incorporations for mercantile or various other industrial and legitimate enterprises may be formed are prescribed, and then it is open to any citizen of the United States desiring to engage in any such legitimate business to form a corporation by compliance with those conditions.

The right to create corporations was left to the States by the framers of the Constitution of the United States. That is evidenced by the fact that when it was proposed to confer the express authority upon Congress to create corporations the proposition was voted down. They designed to leave as a reserved power to the States this right to create corporations, and in doing so the States have finally adopted the method of procedure which I have indicated.

Mr. President, the pending bill, together with the amendment that has been accepted to it, making it somewhat general in its operations, looks to the enactment of a policy by Congress under which there may be created generally corporations to engage in the banking business. If this may be done in respect of this business, it may also be done in respect of other lines of business. The consequence will be that we shall have Congress engaged in granting special charters of incorporation for all sorts of purposes, contrary to the original intention, which was that the right and power to create these corporations should be exercised alone by the States.

It has already been pointed out that this banking corporation can serve no useful purpose in the facilitation of trade or commerce with foreign countries which a bank incorporated under the laws of a State may not do equally as well. When we have created this corporation and it undertakes the establishment of a branch of its business in any foreign country, it will not be able to do so except with the consent, implied or expressed, of the government in which the proposed branch is intended to be located. A banking corporation created under the laws of any of the States may also authorize the establishment of a branch bank outside the limits of the State in which it may be created; and when such banking corporation is thus incorporated under the laws of the State, it may do a branch business in a foreign country with the sanction or consent of that country, expressed or implied.

The consent of the foreign country is just as essential in respect of a corporation created by an act of Congress as it is in respect of a corporation created under the laws of the State, so that a State banking corporation and a Federal banking corporation stand precisely upon the same footing so far as that is concerned. Neither has the right to establish, nor can it establish, in a foreign country a bank without the consent of the foreign country. A State bank may establish branch banks in any or all of the States of the American Union with the consent of the States in which it is proposed to carry on that kind of business, and the States, I think, uniformly never refuse to give such consent.

The gentlemen who now apply to Congress for a special charter to engage in this kind of business may as well obtain their charter under the laws of any of the States, and when they have obtained the charter they have the same facilities for carrying on the business that they would have if they had obtained it from the Congress of the United States.

So, Mr. President, in the first place, it is very doubtful whether there is any power in Congress to create a corporation for this purpose; secondly, if the power does exist in Congress, it ought not to be exercised except in case of necessity, and the necessity for the conferring of this kind of corporate franchise ought to be made manifest. In the present instance no such showing, it seems to me, has been made. In the third place, if it can be justified under the power of Congress to regulate commerce, there is no limitation upon the number or kinds of corporations that may be created by special acts of Congress, and we may have numerous applications of this character.

While the provisions of this bill are limited and guarded, while the business in which these gentlemen propose to engage is perfectly legitimate, while there may be no mischief growing out of the exercise of the powers which we undertake to confer by the bill, still when Congress is pressed by numerous applications for special privileges and charters which may be justified in the exercise of this power of Congress to regulate commerce we may not always be able so carefully to limit and guard the powers which may thus be conferred. Great mischief may grow out of it. We ought not at this time to depart from the practice which has thus far prevailed since the foundation of the Government. We ought to refuse to grant any special charters of this description, and certainly we should refuse them unless there is some great and imperative need for them in order that some governmental end may be subserved by virtue of the franchise which may be thus granted.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to modify the amendment which I offered in reference to interest. I understand that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLOY] has been accepted and is therefore a part of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAY in the chair). The amendment of the Senator from Florida has been accepted.

Mr. PETTUS. It is the amendment that I offered yesterday in reference to interest which I desire to modify. It has been suggested that it did not conform to the national banking law. I now offer just the national banking law remodeled. Instead of saying "every association," I say "said bank and its branches," and in the line above the proviso I strike out "association" and put in "said bank and its branches." In other words, I offer the national banking law on the subject of interest.

Mr. FORAKER. As a substitute for what the Senator heretofore offered?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. Then the amendment offered yesterday is to be considered as withdrawn?

Mr. PETTUS. I ask leave to withdraw the amendment I offered yesterday and to have this substituted.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand. I ask to have it read as now offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the substitute.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That said bank and its branches may take, reserve, receive, and charge on any loan, or discount made, or upon any note, bill of exchange, or other evidence of debt, such rate of interest or discount as is for the time the established rate of interest for delay in the payment of money, in the absence of contract between the parties, by the laws of the several States in which the said bank and its branches are respectively located, and no more: Provided, however, That interest may be reserved or taken, in advance, at the time of making the loan or discount, according to the usual rules of banking; and the knowingly taking, reserving, or charging of a rate of interest greater than that allowed by this section shall be held and adjudged a forfeiture of the debt or demand on which the same is taken, reserved, or charged; but the purchase, discount, or sale of a bill of exchange, drawn on actually existing values, and payable at another place than the place of such purchase, discount, or sale, at the current discount or premium, shall not be considered as taking, reserving, or charging interest.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Senator if the amendment as reported applies to transactions outside the United States? I am not sure that I heard all of it. I have no objection to the amendment if it is limited to the United States. I do not know anything about the usury laws or interest laws in other countries. Therefore I would not want to commit myself as to foreign transactions. If the Senator will so amend it, if he will allow me to make that suggestion, as to confine it to this country in its operation, I have no objection to it and will accept it.

Mr. PETTUS. I think the statute is confined to this country.

Mr. FORAKER. I think this is. The national banks, of course, were confined in their operation to this country. Allow me to look at it and see.

Mr. PETTUS. It is the whole section—section 46—of the national banking act.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment as it is offered.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President—

Mr. FORAKER. Before the amendment is passed permanently, I wish to speak to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PETTUS. I move further to amend—

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PETTUS. If he desires it, certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] suggests how it may be amended so as to cover the difficulty I had in my mind. His suggestion is that we make it read "in the States or countries."

Mr. PETTUS. Very well; I will put in "the State or country."

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; "in the State or country."

Mr. PETTUS. I have no objection to that. It is at the top. After the word "State," insert "or country."

Mr. FORAKER. "Or country in which." Wherever the word "State" or "States" occurs, add the word "country" or "countries."

Mr. PETTUS. It occurs only once.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. Now, I propose to amend by striking out of the tenth paragraph, on the twelfth page, all after the word "act," about the middle of it.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the tenth paragraph, on page 12, by striking out all the paragraph after the word "act," as follows:

Including the power to purchase and hold shares of the capital stock of any foreign corporation authorized to transact banking business in foreign countries.

So that the tenth paragraph, as amended, would read:

Tenth. All such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking under the provisions and terms and for the purposes of this act.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to address the Senate?

Mr. PETTUS. I do not want to speak. I was going to ask for the yeas and nays; that is all.

Mr. BACON. Without entering into an argument upon the amendment, I wish to make the suggestion that that is a broader power than ought to be given to any corporation, State or Federal. As the clause now stands it gives to this corporation the power to own every other corporation in the United States.

Mr. PETTUS. Not in the United States—elsewhere.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Georgia—

Mr. BACON. I will not say in the United States, but in any other country.

Mr. FORAKER. It is limited to foreign countries.

Mr. BACON. Very well. I withdrew the remark, not because I was incorrect, but because I want to take one step at a time. I say that it ought not to have the power to hold the capital stock of all other corporations, even in foreign countries. It is a regular Credit Mobilier organization.

But I say further, Mr. President, that in strict legal language it will authorize it to hold the stocks in this country, for the reason that in technical language every corporation in any one of the States is, in contradistinction to a corporation located in the District of Columbia or one of the Territories, a foreign corporation. In other words, a corporation in Delaware is in Maryland a foreign corporation; so denominated in the law and so treated in the decisions of the courts. It is true that the Senator, I presume, is endeavoring to get around that construction by saying that this corporation is intended to have effect not only in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, but that it shall be at home in every State in the United States, a provision which I do not think can be maintained as constitutional.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that that is the view I have entertained in regard to that. I will say to him further that it was the intention of the committee that this should be limited to corporations in foreign countries.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. FORAKER. And if there can be any language suggested by the Senator from Georgia that will make that more distinct than it is, I will accept it.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt that was the intention. I am simply criticising the language, not the purpose of the framers of the bill. I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to subdivision 10, on page 12, ought to be adopted; but if not then the language ought to be changed to read "the capital stock of the corporation of any foreign country." That would exclude, of course, the technical construction to which I have alluded.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator repeat again his suggestion, so that I may write it in my copy of the bill?

Mr. BACON. I suggest to insert the words "the capital stock of any corporation of a foreign country."

Mr. FORAKER. "Of any corporation of a foreign country?"

Mr. BACON. Yes; "corporation of a foreign country." Then I think the concluding words in the sentence are surplusage.

Mr. FORAKER. If I understand the Senator from Georgia, he would amend by inserting after the word "corporation" the words "of a foreign corporation," and by striking out the words "authorized to transact banking business in foreign countries?"

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. PETTUS. That would make it refer to all corporations, instead of only banking corporations.

Mr. BACON. That is what this provision says. It does not limit it to banking corporations.

Mr. FORAKER. But the point made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] is, if you strike out the words which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has suggested to be stricken out, you then remove the limitation, namely, that it shall be authorized to purchase and hold shares in banking corporations. I see no objection to those words remaining in the clause. They are at most only surplusage, but they have the effect of making it more definite, and in that way working a limitation.

Mr. BACON. Very well. I understand, then, the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama is now amended; that is, if he accepts the amendment, the question will be upon the agreement—

Mr. PETTUS. I do not accept the amendment. I am willing that the Senator from Ohio should accept it, and then the Senate can act upon it afterwards.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. FORAKER. I suppose it is competent for me at this time, that amendment being offered by the Senator from Georgia, to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] accepts the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon of the Senator. I do not think I ought to make that suggestion prior to the motion to strike out.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; it is immaterial to me. I will accept it now or afterwards if the language remains in. I do not make any point on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] is to strike out the words which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. In the tenth subdivision of section 7, on page 12, line 77, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out "including the power to purchase and hold shares of the capital stock of any foreign corporation authorized to transact banking business in foreign countries;" so as to read:

Tenth. All such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking under the provisions and terms and for the purposes of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. As that Senator appears to be absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], but I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY], and therefore will not vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. RAWLINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA].

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BATE. I beg to state in that connection that my colleague [Mr. TURLEY] has been detained at home for several days on account of the sickness of his wife. He is paired, as has been stated, with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL (after having voted in the negative). I did not hear the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] with whom I am paired vote, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I voted, but I do not see in his seat the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], with whom I am paired. I will transfer that pair, however, to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and allow my vote to stand.

I will further announce that my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is unavoidably absent from the city. He has a standing pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY], who, I believe, has voted; but a transfer of the pair of the Senator from Louisiana with my colleague will be made, so that the vote of the Senator from Louisiana can stand.

Mr. McMILLAN. I inquire if the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am paired with that Senator, and will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], who is absent. I have already voted, but by arrangement with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is paired with my colleague [Mr. CLAY], we transfer our pairs, which will enable us each to vote. I therefore permit my vote to stand.

Mr. LODGE. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. When I voted I supposed that Senator was in the Chamber, but I find that he is absent. I will, however, transfer the pair to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], which will permit the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY], who is paired with that Senator, to vote, and I will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask to whom the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] transfers his pair?

Mr. PERKINS. I transfer my pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. PASCO. A pair has been announced with the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PETTUS. I understand that pair has already been transferred by the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GALLINGER. No, Mr. President; that is not correct. I announced that a transfer of pairs would be made which would protect my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER], who is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY], and the Senator from Louisiana voted; so that this transfer simply protects my colleague.

Mr. PETTUS. Is that the transfer the Senator made?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir; that is the transfer which I announced would be made.

Mr. NELSON. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that we transfer our pairs and both vote.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; then I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR. I vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY. I submit that Senators can do as they please, but by the arrangement just announced they thereby break the pairs, for the two Senators who changed their pairs voted one way and the two absent Senators would vote the other way. So they gain 4 votes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, on that statement I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GEAR. I withdraw my vote. I do not wish to violate the etiquette of pairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a matter for the Senators themselves to decide.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bacon,	Daniel,	McEnery,	Pettus,
Bate,	Gray,	Mallory,	Stewart,

So the amendment of Mr. PETTUS was rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not desire to say much more than I have already said upon this subject, and only do so because I regard as a very grave one the question which is now about to be settled.

When the bill came before the Senate it was for the incorporation of a particular banking company. By an amendment—and I hope I may have the serious consideration of Senators when I make the suggestion which I am now about to speak of—it has been practically made a general law, so that any other aggregation of individuals may make a similar association and be incorporated as a bank.

The effect of that is that we will have upon our statute books two national banking laws. We have upon the statute books a law by which national banks now existing have been incorporated and by which others may be incorporated. It is an elaborate system, in which all the details are arranged and perfected and through which the banking business of this country is carried on. It is now gravely proposed that, with one general banking law which answers every purpose that this banking law can possibly effect, we shall have upon the statute books another general banking law.

Mr. President, I challenge either one of the Senators to point to a single function with which it is proposed to clothe this new class of banks which can not be exercised by the banks under the present banking law. If that is true, if there is no function which could be exercised by the proposed banks which can not be exercised by the present banks, then for what purpose are these banks to be authorized?

The whole of the jurisdiction of Congress to charter these banks is endeavored to be hung upon the contention that there is included in the corporate powers of these banks the power to perform certain governmental functions. It might be possible, with the enumeration of powers in this charter, that the courts would hold that the act was constitutional, because the courts would say that they would not go back of the words of the Legislature to ascertain whether or not they meant what they said; that they would not construe the charter to have been granted in bad faith by Congress, and that, therefore, if the words used were susceptible of being construed as creating a governmental power, they would hold the act to be constitutional.

But the question I wish to submit to Senators is this: We have a responsibility in which we are directly charged with the necessity of good faith on our part. Now, what do we ourselves say as to whether or not this charter is intended for the purpose of carrying out the design of the performance of great governmental functions? The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] read a portion of the reply of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who is a member of the committee which reported this bill. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] contends that the purpose is that there may be the exercise of governmental functions by the bank, but the Senator from Maine distinctly said that the purpose was to give to the bank and to the parties who are the owners of it the prestige and the authority of this Government, and that that was the sole purpose. I read again what he said upon that subject; it was in a colloquy with myself:

Mr. BACON. Conceding what the Senator has stated to be true, in what respect would a bank chartered by the State of New York for this purpose lack all the power to accomplish what is desired?

Mr. FRYE. Every Senator knows that a bank clothed with power and authority by the United States of America carries with it ten times the influence, the respect, the confidence possessed by a bank authorized by any State of the United States.

Mr. BACON. And that is the purpose?

Mr. FRYE. That is the purpose, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. President, can we disguise from ourselves the fact that that is the purpose; and does any man doubt it? If it is the purpose, then it is not within the purview of the powers conferred upon us by the Constitution in this regard.

We have had some experience with a great colossal bank. It was for a long time a question whether the bank should control the Government or whether the Government should control the bank. I hold in my hand volume 1 of Benton's Thirty Years' View, and I ask that the Secretary read the part I have marked on page 189, in which he describes the operations and the power of the great United States Bank, which was overthrown in the Administration of Jackson.

The Secretary read as follows:

With its moneyed and political power and numerous interested affiliations and its control over other banks, brokers, and money dealers, it was truly a power, and a great one; and, in answer to a question put by General Smith, of Maryland, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate already mentioned (and appended with other questions and answers to that report), Mr. Biddle, the president, showed a power in the national bank to save, relieve, or destroy the local banks, which exhibited it as their absolute master, and, of course, able to control them at will. The question was put in a spirit of friendship to the bank, and with a view to enable its president to exhibit the institutions as great, just, and beneficent. The question was: "Has the bank at any time oppressed any of the State banks?" and the answer, "Never." And, as if that was not enough, Mr. Biddle went on to say: "There are very few banks which might not have been destroyed by an exertion of the power of the bank. None have been injured. Many have been saved. And more have been, and are constantly relieved, when it is found that they are solvent but are suffering under temporary difficulty." This was proving entirely too much. A power to injure and destroy—to relieve and to save the thousand banks of all the States and Territories was a power over the business and fortunes of nearly all the people of those States and Territories, and might be used for evil as well as for good; and was a power entirely too large to be trusted to any man with a heart in his bosom, or to any government responsible to the people, much less to a corporation without a soul, and irresponsible to heaven or earth. This was a view of the case which the parties to the question had not foreseen, but which was noted at the time, and which, in the progress of the Government's struggle with the bank, received exemplifications which will be remembered by the generation of that day while memory lasts, and afterwards known as long as history has power to transmit to posterity the knowledge of national calamities.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in the case of the old Bank of the United States there was the solemn declaration by the president of that bank that it was within the power of that bank to have destroyed any State bank that it had sought to destroy. He, in a Congressional investigation, deliberately made the statement that while they had never done it, they had the power to do it. This bank which we seek now to incorporate will have that power if this bill passes.

Mr. President, that bank is to be but one of a great many, if we are going into this field.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Georgia tell me how that could be done?

Mr. BACON. How it could destroy other banks?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. That is a very broad question, and it might take a very great length of time to answer it.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have one answer.

Mr. BACON. It seems to me it is a very simple suggestion, in response to the inquiry of the Senator, that a bank which is incorporated to the extent of $25,000,000, which shall have the power to go into any State of the Union, regardless of the consent of that State—

Mr. GRAY. And be at home there.

Mr. BACON. And be at home in any State; which shall be free from all control of State courts; which shall have the machinery of the Federal Government behind it; shall have the Federal courts open to it; shall have the prestige of the national name, and shall have the power not only to have a capital of $25,000,000, but to purchase and hold without limit a thousand million dollars or five thousand million dollars, if you please, of the corporate stocks of banks in other countries—for that is the authority given in this charter which has just been refused by the Senate to be stricken out—I say with such vast and unlimited powers, it is a very simple question as to how it can destroy small banks.

Mr. CAFFERY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask the Senator whether these very banks that Mr. Biddle stated the United States Bank had the power to destroy did not destroy themselves in about five years after the deposits were removed from the United States Bank?

Mr. BACON. Would the fact that there was a general panic and that banks failed show that they destroyed themselves? It may have been, and it was charged to have been, the result of the influence and acts of the United States Bank.

Mr. President, capital is like everything else. The greater power controls the lesser. The great danger is when we put in the hands of a few men such an aggregation of capital, in the shape of an artificial being, that it may be able not only to control other corporations and destroy them, if you please, but to control governments and say who shall be President, who shall be Senators, who shall be Representatives, and who shall be judges. That is the great danger.

Mr. President, I say this is but a beginning if we are going to go outside of the beaten path and incorporate great corporations by Federal act.

I hold in my hand a very remarkable bill, which is now pending before this body, yet to my mind no more objectionable than the bill which is now under consideration. I hold in my hand a bill which is now in order for action—it is upon the Calendar—to incorporate the National Association of Manufacturers. What does this bill propose? It proposes to incorporate all, if you please, of the manufacturers in the United States, certainly so many of them as choose to go into this corporation, and gives them unlimited power to own the stock in every corporation in the United States of any character whatsoever.

Mr. GRAY. Is it a House bill?

Mr. BACON. A Senate bill. It is pending on the Calendar now. I will read the very simple enumeration of powers in this very innocent-looking bill. I use it simply by way of illustration. The bill is not now before the Senate, but I am trying to show where we are drifting. I am trying to show what is the spirit that is coming over this body by which we do not start aghast as we ought to at the idea of erecting into life and being a power which shall be more not only than an individual can grapple with, but a power which will be sufficient to control the policy and the laws and their administration by this Government. Now, here is the illustration. After naming the incorporators, who are scattered all over the country, in twenty or thirty odd different States, I have forgotten which, it says:

And their associates, heretofore organized under the name of the National Association of Manufacturers, as now constituted, and such persons as shall hereafter be admitted members of the same, shall be, and are hereby declared to be, a body politic and corporate, in deed and in law, by the name, style, and title of "The National Association of Manufacturers of the United States."

Now listen to the enumeration of powers:

to have succession, to plead and be impleaded, sue and be sued in all courts of record and elsewhere, and to be capable to take, hold, and enjoy lands, tenements, and hereditaments, goods and chattels, and the same from time to time sell, grant, demise, alien, and dispose of, to have and use a common seal, and the same to break, alter, and renew at pleasure.

There is no limitation of capital.

Mr. QUAY. I was not paying attention to the remarks of the Senator from Georgia when he first adverted to this bill, which was before the Senate temporarily yesterday, and I do not understand how it is injected into the belly of his speech upon the bank bill. What I said yesterday, however, the Senator will remember, was that the Association of Manufacturers is already in existence. The bill really gives it no powers that it has not now. There was a question in my mind, at the time the Senator from Arkansas objected to it, as to the exact object of the corporation in regard to its powers to sell abroad, not to buy.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator please speak a little more distinctly? I can not hear him.

Mr. QUAY. So I telegraphed to Mr. Search, who is president of the National Association of Manufacturers, which this bill proposes to incorporate, and the following is his reply:

National Association of Manufacturers is not intended in any sense as a trading company, but in sending its men abroad in establishing foreign agencies to collect information and to show samples of American goods minor commercial transactions sometimes are necessary. For example, in Caracas, Venezuela, a large warehouse for the display of samples is maintained by our members on a cooperative basis. The establishment of similar warehouses in other countries is part of our plan. Provision in bill for sale of goods was made solely to give association legal standing in such transactions. The general sale of merchandise has never been contemplated nor is it desired. Wire me if further information is needed.

If there is any amendment which the Senator can suggest to limit that corporation to the objects which the gentleman who I suppose will be president of the corporation, as he is now of the association, sets forth, I have no objection to it.

Mr. SPOONER. By whom is the telegram signed?

Mr. QUAY. By Theodore C. Search, president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I said before, this bill is not now under consideration, and I am simply using it by way of illustration. We are proposing here in the bill now under consideration to charter a banking association which shall have a capital of $25,000,000, which shall have the right to impose itself upon the business of any State, regardless of the grant of any privilege by such State or the denial of the State, with the right to hold all the real estate in every State in this Union if it can acquire it in the natural order of its business, because that is in this charter. It can hold any real estate which it may acquire in the operation of its business, and, of course, in the operation of a business of such large extent it can acquire a very great deal in the course of a very few years. There is no limitation upon the amount it can hold. We are proposing to incorporate a company which shall not only have power to go into any State without asking its leave and imposing itself upon the State if the State says "you shall not come," but we are proposing to incorporate a company which shall have the right to own real estate in each and every State to an unlimited amount without the consent of the State. We are proposing to incorporate a company which shall have the right to own the corporate stock of every bank in all the world outside of the limits of this country. We are proposing to incorporate a bank the colossal proportions of which have never been equaled by any corporation that has ever been created in this country and, so far as I know, in any other.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] asks me if I include the national banks. Of course I include the national banks.

Mr. MORGAN. There are 4,500 of them.

Mr. BACON. Each one of them is a distinct corporation, and a very different condition of affairs attends them from what must accompany the operations of this bank, and those banks are banks in the performance of governmental functions. But I will not be diverted.

I am answering the Senator from Pennsylvania. We are now proposing to incorporate this great bank. We are proposing to put a power here that no man can cope with and very few aggregations of corporations can cope with, and I am simply, by illustration, saying that we do not propose to stop at this. We have launched upon a new sea, one boundless, and I am offering, in illustration, the fact that here we have this corporation which, while of course I grant to the Senator from Pennsylvania the utmost sincerity in the statement made by him that it is not intended to be a trading corporation, nevertheless is one that in its terms is unlimited in its power to trade and its power to hold property of all kinds, real and personal.

Mr. President, that was not the object for which this Government was organized, and our Supreme Court has said so. This Government was not organized for the purpose of creating corporations. This Government was organized for an entirely different purpose, and the Supreme Court has said, and said so not once, but repeatedly, that the only authority to grant corporate powers—of course speaking outside of the District of Columbia and the Territories—must be found in the necessity for the creation of a corporation to have some important governmental function properly exercised. We are under a great moral obligation not to refine away that restriction. It is not for us, by putting words which mean nothing or which are not intended to mean what they say into a charter, to assume a jurisdiction which the Constitution did not intend to confer upon us. If the words which are sought in this as the basis for this authority are legitimately here used, then the restriction means nothing, because any other corporation which men may desire may come here and get a charter by the use of words which are intended as a device and not as a real practical means by which governmental functions may be performed.

Mr. President, in the absence of any necessity for this wide departure, why should we venture upon such a sea as this? As I had occasion to say yesterday, and I beg pardon for repeating it, in every function of foreign exchange the banks of this country have now every facility which a bank can have. It can not in any manner advance the interests of this country. It is not designed for the purpose of enabling the Government to perform any great public function. The purpose, and the sole purpose—and I desire it rung in the ears of every man, and let him deny who can—is to give to some few private individuals the advantage of the name and the authority and the prestige of the United States Government in a colossal corporation dangerous to the interests of the public, and in a way that the Constitution of the United States never designed and that the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly condemned.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to call his attention to a point in connection with the branch of the question he is now discussing? I call his attention to section 24 of the bill, in connection with the claim that it is intended as a governmental agency, which has been commented on here to some extent. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that this is a public purpose and that the bank is to figure somewhat in the capacity of a governmental agency. Section 24 expressly says:

That the Government of the United States shall not be, and shall not be assumed to be, responsible for the debts, obligations, contracts, or liabilities of said corporation, or for any claims that may in any manner arise or be asserted against it.

In other words, the principal in this case declares that the agent which it is said the principal is appointing here shall not do anything of any character connected with the agency for which the principal will in any way be responsible.

Mr. BACON. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Florida is entirely pertinent. I do not desire, however, longer to detain the Senate with any further remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. DANIEL. I hope the bill may be allowed to go over until to-morrow. I have been absent, necessarily, for a day or two, and I should like to submit some remarks upon it.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to discommode the Senator from Virginia, but I will be very greatly inconvenienced myself if I have to be here to-morrow. I had hoped, therefore, that we could reach a vote on the bill to-night. However, if the Senator from Virginia wants to speak upon the bill, I would not think of inconveniencing him.

Mr. DANIEL. I should dislike very much to inconvenience the Senator who has charge of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I only hope that he can speak now instead of to-morrow, and that we can get a vote to-night, and he be accommodated by speaking and I by getting a vote on the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I should be very much gratified if I could accommodate myself to the convenience of the Senator who has charge of the bill, but, as I have stated, I have been unavoidably absent two days on very long and confining duties upon an important committee of this body which have engrossed my time from other matters and rendered it impossible for me to give to this measure the attention which I otherwise would have bestowed upon it. I feel that it is a very great measure, and one that deserves the fullest consideration this body can give it. It is a late hour in the afternoon, and I do not feel prepared to state my views to-night.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator any objection to the bill being engrossed and read a third time, and making his speech on the question of the passage of the bill?

Mr. DANIEL. I may wish to offer some amendments.

Mr. BACON. I have one or two to offer.

Mr. MORGAN. Let them be offered now.

Mr. FORAKER. Can the Senator from Georgia offer his amendments now?

Mr. BACON. I will state one of them, if Senators desire. I am not prepared to say that it is the only one. On page 15, section 11, beginning at the bottom of page 14, it says:

That the principal office and place of business of said corporation shall be in the city of Washington, D. C., or in the city of New York, in the State of New York, as the board of directors shall determine.

I propose to ask the Senate to amend that by striking out all after the word "Columbia" to the semicolon, upon the ground that this is not a bill the design of which is the performance of any public function; that, as expressed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], it is a bill designed to give to private parties the advantage of the prestige and the name of the Government of the United States, and therefore the Government has no right to incorporate a company and fix its home outside of the District of Columbia or the Territories of the United States. I do not propose to argue that. I simply give the Senator the benefit of the suggestion, as he asked me to do so.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the ground upon which such an amendment is offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia offer the amendment now?

Mr. BACON. I give notice of my intention to offer it.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Virginia insists upon it, I am willing that the bill shall go over. Do I understand that the Senator from Virginia has an amendment to offer?

Mr. DANIEL. I have no amendments now to offer, but I contemplate offering some probably. I have not had time to prepare them.

Mr. FORAKER. I merely intended to ask, if the amendment was prepared, that we might have the benefit of having it offered now.

Mr. DANIEL. I have not prepared an amendment.

Mr. CAFFERY. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to paragraph 9, on page 11. The Senator from Georgia said that this corporation could acquire all the real estate in the United States.

Mr. BACON. The Senator ought to state it a little more fully. I said all the real estate it could acquire in its ordinary business. In other words, it has a right to hold title to real estate that it may acquire in the transaction of the banking business. That is the statement I made.

Mr. CAFFERY. I thought it was broader than that. But I want to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to paragraph 8, line 59, where one of the powers of the company is stated to be "to loan money on personal security." That is an affirmative predicated upon the negative that it can not loan money on real estate. In paragraph 9 it is provided that the corporation may—

Acquire, purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes, and for no others.

And so in line 65:

Such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith as security for debts previously contracted.

Does that mean that the bank can take real estate as security for a loan? If so, it conflicts with the previous provision.

Mr. FORAKER. It does not mean that at all. If the Senator from Louisiana will allow me to answer him now, that has reference to cases where persons become indebted to the bank and are unable to pay, and then give as security real estate. That is the only case, I believe, in which national banks can take a mortgage upon real estate now. They loan upon personal security, but if the party to whom the loan is made should prove unable to pay—

Mr. CAFFERY. It is for past debts.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. CAFFERY. Secured on personal property.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I think that is the intention of the committee.

Mr. CAFFERY. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that in the clause beginning on page 13, line 71, down to the end of paragraph 9, the bank is prohibited from holding any real estate for a longer term than five years. That would prevent the bank from acquiring any considerable property in real estate.

Mr. PETTUS obtained the floor.

Mr. CARTER. I rose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PETTUS. I am perfectly willing that the motion shall be made. I was merely going to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Montana withhold his motion until the amendment can be offered? I should like to have the benefit of it, if it can be offered now.

Mr. PETTUS. I will offer the amendment and then yield the floor to the Senator from Montana. Commencing on page 11, line 51, I move to strike out all after the word "person" down to the end of paragraph 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in paragraph 7, on page 11, line 51, after the word "person," to strike out:

And to act as trustee in any mortgage given to secure such bonds, and to countersign the same as trustee.

Mr. PETTUS. I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to submit a conference report on the bill (S. 1035) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States. I ask that it be printed as a document and also in the RECORD. I will not ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1035) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: (Exhibit A, hereto annexed and made a part of this report.)

And the House agree to the same.

EXHIBIT A.

CHAPTER I.

DEFINITIONS.

SECTION 1. Meaning of words and phrases.—a The words and phrases used in this act and in proceedings pursuant hereto shall, unless the same be inconsistent with the context, be construed as follows: (1) "A person against whom a petition has been filed" shall include a person who has filed a voluntary petition; (2) "adjudication" shall mean the date of the entry of a decree that the defendant, in a bankruptcy proceeding, is a bankrupt, or if such decree is appealed from, then the date when such decree is finally confirmed; (3) "appellate courts" shall include the circuit courts of appeals of the United States, the supreme courts of the Territories, and the Supreme Court of the United States; (4) "bankrupt" shall include a person against whom an involuntary petition or an application to set a composition aside or to revoke a discharge has been filed, or who has filed a voluntary petition, or who has been adjudged a bankrupt; (5) "clerk" shall mean the clerk of a court of bankruptcy; (6) "corporations" shall mean all bodies having any of the powers and privileges of private corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships, and shall include limited or other partnership associations organized under laws making the capital subscribed alone responsible for the debts of the association; (7) "court" shall mean the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending, and may include the referee; (8) "courts of bankruptcy" shall include the district courts of the United States and of the Territories, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the United States court of the Indian Territory, and of Alaska; (9) "creditor" shall include anyone who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy, and may include his duly authorized agent, attorney, or proxy; (10) "date of bankruptcy," or "time of bankruptcy," or "commencement of proceeding," or "bankruptcy," with reference to time, shall mean the date when the petition was filed; (11) "debt" shall include any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy; (12) "discharge" shall mean the release of a bankrupt from all of his debts which are provable in bankruptcy, except such as are excepted by this act; (13) "document" shall include any book, deed, or instrument in writing; (14) "holiday" shall include Christmas, the Fourth of July, the 22d of February, and any day appointed by the President of the United States or the Congress of the United States as a holiday or as a day of public fasting or thanksgiving; (15) a person shall be deemed insolvent within the provisions of this act whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder or delay his creditors, shall not at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts; (16) "judge" shall mean a judge of a court of bankruptcy, not including the referee; (17) "oath" shall include affirmation; (18) "officer" shall include clerk, marshal, receiver, referee, and trustee, and the imposing of a duty upon or the forbidding of an act by any officer shall include his successor and any person authorized by law to perform the duties of such officer; (19) "persons" shall include corporations, except where otherwise specified, and officers, partnerships, and women, and when used with reference to the commission of acts which are herein forbidden shall include persons who are participants in the forbidden acts, and the agents, officers, and members of the board of directors or trustees, or other similar controlling bodies of corporations; (20) "petition" shall mean a paper filed in a court of bankruptcy or with a clerk or deputy clerk by a debtor praying for the benefits of this act, or by creditors alleging the commission of an act of bankruptcy by a debtor therein named; (21) "referee" shall mean the referee who has jurisdiction of the case or to whom the case has been referred, or anyone acting in his stead; (22) "conceal" shall include secrete, falsify, and mutilate; (23) "secured creditor" shall include a creditor who has security for his debt upon the property of the bankrupt of a nature to be assignable under this act, or who owns such a debt for which some indorser, surety, or other person secondarily liable for the bankrupt has such security upon the bankrupt's assets; (24) "States" shall include the Territories, the Indian Territory, Alaska, and the District of Columbia; (25) "transfer" shall include the sale and every other and different mode of disposing of or parting with property, or the possession of property, absolutely or conditionally, as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security; (26) "trustee" shall include all of the trustees of an estate; (27) "wage-earner" shall mean an individual who works for wages, salary, or hire, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $1,500 per year; (28) words importing the masculine gender may be applied to and include corporations, partnerships, and women; (29) words importing the plural number may be applied to and mean only a single person or thing; (30) words importing the singular number may be applied to and mean several persons or things.

CHAPTER II.

CREATION OF COURTS OF BANKRUPTCY AND THEIR JURISDICTION.

SEC. 2. That the courts of bankruptcy as hereinbefore defined, viz, the district courts of the United States in the several States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the district courts of the several Territories, and the United States courts in the Indian Territory and the District of Alaska, are hereby made courts of bankruptcy, and are hereby invested, within their respective territorial limits as now established or as they may be hereafter changed, with such jurisdiction at law and in equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings, in vacation in chambers and during their respective terms, as they are now or may be hereafter held, to (1) adjudge persons bankrupt who have had their principal place of business, resided, or had their domicile within their respective territorial jurisdictions for the preceding six months, or the greater portion thereof, or who do not have their principal place of business, reside, or have their domicile within the United States, but have property within their jurisdictions, or who have been adjudged bankrupts by courts of competent jurisdiction without the United States and have property within their jurisdictions; (2) allow claims, disallow claims, reconsider allowed or disallowed claims, and allow or disallow them against bankrupt estates; (3) appoint receivers or the marshals, upon application of parties in interest, in case the courts shall find it absolutely necessary, for the preservation of estates, to take charge of the property of bankrupts after the filing of the petition and until it is dismissed or the trustee is qualified; (4) arraign, try, and punish bankrupts, officers, and other persons, and the agents, officers, members of the board of directors or trustees, or other similar controlling bodies, of corporations for violations of this act, in accordance with the laws of procedure of the United States now in force, or such as may be hereafter enacted regulating trials for the alleged violation of laws of the United States; (5) authorize the business of bankrupts to be conducted for limited periods by receivers, the marshals, or trustees, if necessary in the best interests of the estates; (6) bring in and substitute additional persons or parties in proceedings in bankruptcy when necessary for the complete determination of a matter in controversy; (7) cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money and distributed, and determine controversies in relation thereto, except as herein otherwise provided; (8) close estates, whenever it appears that they have been fully administered, by approving the final accounts and discharging the trustees, and reopen them whenever it appears they were closed before being fully administered; (9) confirm or reject compositions between debtors and their creditors, and set aside compositions and reinstate the cases; (10) consider and confirm, modify or overrule, or return with instructions for further proceedings, records, and findings certified to them by referees; (11) determine all claims of bankrupts to their exemptions; (12) discharge or refuse to discharge bankrupts and set aside discharges and reinstate the cases; (13) enforce obedience by bankrupts, officers, and other persons to all lawful orders, by fine or imprisonment or fine and imprisonment; (14) extradite bankrupts from their respective districts to other districts; (15) make such orders, issue such process, and enter such judgments in addition to those specifically provided for as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act; (16) punish persons for contempts committed before referees; (17) pursuant to the recommendation of creditors, or when they neglect to recommend the appointment of trustees, appoint trustees, and upon complaints of creditors, remove trustees for cause upon hearings and after notices to them; (18) tax costs, whenever they are allowed by law, and render judgments therefor against the unsuccessful party, or the successful party for cause, or in part against each of the parties, and against estates, in proceedings in bankruptcy; and (19) transfer cases to other courts of bankruptcy.

Nothing in this section contained shall be construed to deprive a court of bankruptcy of any power it would possess were certain specific powers not herein enumerated.

CHAPTER III.

BANKRUPTCY.

SEC. 3. Acts of bankruptcy.—a Acts of bankruptcy by a person shall consist of his having (1) conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them; or (2) transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors; or (3) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged such preference; or (4) made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; or (5) admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground.

b A petition may be filed against a person who is insolvent and who has committed an act of bankruptcy within four months after the commission of such act. Such time shall not expire until four months after (1) the date of the recording or registering of the transfer or assignment when the act consists in having made a transfer of any of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors or for the purpose of giving a preference as hereinbefore provided, or a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, if by law such recording or registering is required or permitted, or, if it is not, from the date when the beneficiary takes notorious, exclusive, or continuous possession of the property unless the petitioning creditors have received actual notice of such transfer or assignment.

c It shall be a complete defense to any proceedings in bankruptcy instituted under the first subdivision of this section to allege and prove that the party proceeded against was not insolvent as defined in this act at the time of the filing of the petition against him, and if solvency at such date is proved by the alleged bankrupt the proceedings shall be dismissed, and under said subdivision 1 the burden of proving solvency shall be on the alleged bankrupt.

d Whenever a person against whom a petition has been filed as hereinbefore provided under the second and third subdivisions of this section takes issue with and denies the allegation of his insolvency, it shall be his duty to appear in court on the hearing, with his books, papers, and accounts, and submit to an examination, and give testimony as to all matters tending to establish solvency or insolvency, and in case of his failure to so attend and submit to examination the burden of proving his solvency shall rest upon him.

e Whenever a petition is filed by any person for the purpose of having another adjudged a bankrupt, and an application is made to take charge of and hold the property of the alleged bankrupt or any part of the same, prior to the adjudication and pending a hearing on the petition, the petitioner or applicant shall file in the same court a bond, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, who shall reside within the jurisdiction of said court, to be approved by the court or a judge thereof, in such sum as the court shall direct, conditioned for the payment, in case such petition is dismissed, to the respondent, his or her personal representatives, all costs, expenses, and damages occasioned by such seizure, taking, and detention of the property of the alleged bankrupt.

If such petition be dismissed by the court or withdrawn by the petitioner, the respondent or respondents shall be allowed all costs, counsel fees, expenses, and damages occasioned by such seizure, taking, or detention of such property. Counsel fees, costs, expenses, and damages shall be fixed and allowed by the court and paid by the obligors in such bond.

SEC. 4. Who may become bankrupts.—a Any person who owes debts, except a corporation, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act as a voluntary bankrupt.

b Any natural person, except a wage-earner or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil, any unincorporated company, and any corporation engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, or mercantile pursuits, owing debts to the amount of $1,000 or over, may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt upon default or an impartial trial, and shall be subject to the provisions and entitled to the benefits of this act. Private bankers, but not national banks or banks incorporated under State or Territorial laws, may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts.

SEC. 5. Partners.—a A partnership during the continuation of the partnership business, or after its dissolution and before the final settlement thereof, may be adjudged a bankrupt.

b The creditors of the partnership shall appoint the trustee; in other respects so far as possible the estate shall be administered as herein provided for other estates.

c The court of bankruptcy which has jurisdiction of one of the partners may have jurisdiction of all the partners and of the administration of the partnership and individual property.

d The trustee shall keep separate accounts of the partnership property and of the property belonging to the individual partners.

e The expenses shall be paid from the partnership property and the individual property in such proportions as the court shall determine.

f The net proceeds of the partnership property shall be appropriated to the payment of the partnership debts and the net proceeds of the individual estate of each partner to the payment of his individual debts. Should any surplus remain of the property of any partner after paying his individual debts, such surplus shall be added to the partnership assets and be applied to the payment of the partnership debts. Should any surplus of the partnership property remain after paying the partnership debts, such surplus shall be added to the assets of the individual partners in the proportion of their respective interests in the partnership.

g The court may permit the proof of the claim of the partnership estate against the individual estates, and vice versa, and may marshal the assets of the partnership estate and individual estates so as to prevent preferences and secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates.

A In the event of one or more but not all of the members of a partnership being adjudged bankrupt, the partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy, unless by consent of the partner or partners not adjudged bankrupt; but such partner or partners not adjudged bankrupt shall settle the partnership business as expeditiously as its nature will permit, and account for the interest of the partner or partners adjudged bankrupt.

SEC. 6. Exemptions of bankrupts.—a This act shall not affect the allowance to bankrupts of the exemptions which are prescribed by the State laws in force at the time of the filing of the petition in the State wherein they have had their domicile for the six months or the greater portion thereof immediately preceding the filing of the petition.

SEC. 7. Duties of bankrupts.—a The bankrupt shall (1) attend the first meeting of his creditors, if directed by the court or a judge thereof to do so, and the hearing upon his application for a discharge, if filed; (2) comply with all lawful orders of the court; (3) examine the correctness of all proofs of claims filed against his estate; (4) execute and deliver such papers as shall be ordered by the court; (5) execute to his trustee transfers of all his property in foreign countries; (6) immediately inform his trustee of any attempt, by his creditors or other persons, to evade the provisions of this act, coming to his knowledge; (7) in case of any person having to his knowledge proved a false claim against his estate, disclose that fact immediately to his trustee; (8) prepare, make oath to, and file in court within ten days, unless further time is granted, after the adjudication, if an involuntary bankrupt, and with the petition if a voluntary bankrupt, a schedule of his property, showing the amount and kind of property, the location thereof, its money value in detail, and a list of his creditors, showing their residences, if known, if unknown, that fact to be stated, the amounts due each of them, the consideration thereof, the security held by them, if any, and a claim for such exemptions as he may be entitled to, all in triplicate, one copy of each for the clerk, one for the referee, and one for the trustee; and (9) when present at the first meeting of his creditors, and at such other times as the court shall order, submit to an examination concerning the conducting of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, the amount, kind, and whereabouts of his property, and, in addition, all matters which may affect the administration and settlement of his estate; but no testimony given by him shall be offered in evidence against him in any criminal proceeding.

Provided, however: That he shall not be required to attend a meeting of his creditors, or at or for an examination at a place more than 150 miles distant from his home or principal place of business, or to examine claims except when presented to him, unless ordered by the court or a judge thereof for cause shown, and the bankrupt shall be paid his actual expenses from the estate when examined or required to attend at any place other than the city, town, or village of his residence.

SEC. 8. Death or insanity of bankrupts.—a The death or insanity of a bankrupt shall not abate the proceedings, but the same shall be conducted and concluded in the same manner, so far as possible, as though he had not died or become insane: Provided, That in case of death the widow and children shall be entitled to all rights of dower and allowance fixed by the laws of the State of the bankrupt's residence.

SEC. 9. Protection and detention of bankrupts.—a A bankrupt shall be exempt from arrest upon civil process except in the following cases: (1) When issued from a court of bankruptcy for contempt or disobedience of its lawful orders; (2) when issued from a State court having jurisdiction, and served within such State, upon a debt or claim from which his discharge in bankruptcy would not be a release, and in such case he shall be exempt from such arrest when in attendance upon a court of bankruptcy, or engaged in the performance of a duty imposed by this act.

b The judge may, at any time after the filing of a petition by or against a person, and before the expiration of one month after the qualification of the trustee, upon satisfactory proof by the affidavits of at least two persons that such bankrupt is about to leave the district in which he resides or has his principal place of business to avoid examination, and that his departure will defeat the proceedings in bankruptcy, issue a warrant to the marshal directing him to bring such bankrupt forthwith before the court for examination. If upon hearing the evidence of the parties it shall appear to the court, or a judge thereof, that the allegations are true and that it is necessary, he shall order such marshal to keep such bankrupt in custody not exceeding ten days, but not imprison him, until he shall be examined and released, or give bail conditioned for his appearance for examination, from time to time, not exceeding in all ten days, as required by the court, and for his obedience to all lawful orders made in reference thereto.

SEC. 10. Extradition of bankrupts.—a Whenever a warrant for the apprehension of a bankrupt shall have been issued, and he shall have been found within the jurisdiction of a court other than the one issuing the warrant, he may be extradited in the same manner in which persons under indictment are now extradited from one district within which a district court has jurisdiction to another.

SEC. 11. Suits by and against bankrupts.—a A suit which is founded upon a claim from which a discharge would be a release, and which is pending against a person at the time of the filing of a petition against him, shall be stayed until after an adjudication or the dismissal of the petition; if such person is adjudged a bankrupt, such action may be further stayed until twelve months after the date of such adjudication, or, if within that time such person applies for a discharge, then until the question of such discharge is determined.

b The court may order the trustee to enter his appearance and defend any pending suit against the bankrupt.

c A trustee may, with the approval of the court, be permitted to prosecute as trustee any suit commenced by the bankrupt prior to the adjudication with like force and effect as though it had been commenced by him.

d Suits shall not be brought by or against a trustee of a bankrupt estate subsequent to two years after the estate has been closed.

SEC. 12. Compositions, when confirmed.—a A bankrupt may offer terms of composition to his creditors after, but not before, he has been examined in open court or at a meeting of his creditors and filed in court the schedule of his property and list of his creditors, required to be filed by bankrupts.

b An application for the confirmation of a composition may be filed in the court of bankruptcy after, but not before, it has been accepted in writing by a majority in number of all creditors whose claims have been allowed, which number must represent a majority in amount of such claims, and the consideration to be paid by the bankrupt to his creditors, and the money necessary to pay all debts which have priority and the cost of the proceedings, have been deposited in such place as shall be designated by and subject to the order of the judge.

c A date and place, with reference to the convenience of the parties in interest, shall be fixed for the hearing upon each application for the confirmation of a composition and such objections as may be made to its confirmation.

d The judge shall confirm a composition if satisfied that (1) it is for the best interests of the creditors; (2) the bankrupt has not been guilty of any of the acts or failed to perform any of the duties which would be a bar to his discharge; and (3) the offer and its acceptance are in good faith and have not been made or procured except as herein provided, or by any means, promises, or acts herein forbidden.

e Upon the confirmation of a composition, the consideration shall be distributed as the judge shall direct, and the case dismissed. Whenever a composition is not confirmed, the estate shall be administered in bankruptcy as herein provided.

SEC. 13. Compositions, when set aside.—a The judge may, upon the application of parties in interest filed at any time within six months after a composition has been confirmed, set the same aside and reinstate the case if it shall be made to appear upon a trial that fraud was practiced in the procuring of such composition, and that the knowledge thereof has come to the petitioners since the confirmation of such composition.

SEC. 14. Discharges, when granted.—a Any person may, after the expiration of one month and within the next twelve months subsequent to being adjudged a bankrupt, file an application for a discharge in the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending; if it shall be made to appear to the judge that the bankrupt was unavoidably prevented from filing it within such time, it may be filed within but not after the expiration of the next six months.

b The judge shall hear the application for a discharge, and such proofs and pleas as may be made in opposition thereto by parties in interest, at such time as will give parties in interest a reasonable opportunity to be fully heard, and investigate the merits of the application and discharge the applicant unless he has (1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided; or (2) with fraudulent intent to conceal his true financial condition and in contemplation of bankruptcy, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which his true condition might be ascertained.

c The confirmation of a composition shall discharge the bankrupt from his debts, other than those agreed to be paid by the terms of the composition and those not affected by a discharge.

SEC. 15. Discharges, when revoked.—a The judge may, upon the application of parties in interest who have not been guilty of undue laches, filed at any time within one year after a discharge shall have been granted, revoke it upon a trial if it shall be made to appear that it was obtained through the fraud of the bankrupt, and that the knowledge of the fraud has come to the petitioners since the granting of the discharge, and that the actual facts did not warrant the discharge.

SEC. 16. Creditors of bankrupts.—a The liability of a person who is a co-debtor with, or guarantor or in any manner a surety for, a bankrupt shall not be altered by the discharge of such bankrupt.

SEC. 17. Debts not affected by a discharge.—a A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, except such as (1) are due as a tax levied by the United States, the State, county, district, or municipality in which he resides; (2) are judgments in actions for frauds, or obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations, or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another; (3) have not been duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy; or (4) were created by his fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity.

CHAPTER IV.

COURTS AND PROCEDURE THEREIN.

SEC. 18. Process, pleadings, and adjudications.—a Upon the filing of a petition for involuntary bankruptcy, service thereof, with a writ of subpoena, shall be made upon the person therein named as defendant in the same manner that service of such process is now had upon the commencement of a suit in equity in the courts of the United States, except that it shall be returnable within fifteen days, unless the judge shall for cause fix a longer time; but in case personal service can not be made, then notice shall be given by publication in the same manner and for the same time as provided by law for notice by publication in suits in equity in courts of the United States.

b The bankrupt, or any creditor, may appear and plead to the petition within ten days after the return day, or within such further time as the court may allow.

c All pleadings setting up matters of fact shall be verified under oath.

d If the bankrupt, or any of his creditors, shall appear within the time limited, and controvert the facts alleged in the petition, the judge shall determine, as soon as may be, the issues presented by the pleadings, without the intervention of a jury, except in cases where a jury trial is given by this act, and makes the adjudication or dismiss the petition.

e If on the last day within which pleadings may be filed none are filed by the bankrupt or any of his creditors, the judge shall on the next day, if present, or as soon thereafter as practicable, make the adjudication or dismiss the petition.

f If the judge is absent from the district, or the division of the district in which the petition is pending, on the next day after the last day on which pleadings may be filed, and none have been filed by the bankrupt or any of his creditors, the clerk shall forthwith refer the case to the referee.

g Upon the filing of a voluntary petition the judge shall hear the petition and make the adjudication or dismiss the petition. If the judge is absent from the district, or the division of the district in which the petition is filed, at the time of the filing, the clerk shall forthwith refer the case to the referee.

SEC. 19. Jury trials.—a A person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed shall be entitled to have a trial by jury, in respect to the question of his insolvency, except as herein otherwise provided, and any act of bankruptcy alleged in such petition to have been committed, upon filing a written application therefor at or before the time within which an answer may be filed. If such application is not filed within such time, a trial by jury shall be deemed to have been waived.

b If a jury is not in attendance upon the court, one may be specially summoned for the trial, or the case may be postponed, or, if the case is pending in one of the district courts within the jurisdiction of a circuit court of the United States, it may be certified for trial to the circuit court sitting at the same place, or by consent of parties when sitting at any other place in the same district, if such circuit court has or is to have a jury first in attendance.

c The right to submit matters in controversy, or alleged offenses under this act, to a jury shall be determined and enjoyed except as provided by this act, according to the United States laws now in force or such as may be hereafter enacted in relation to trials by jury.

SEC. 20. Oaths, affirmations.—a Oaths required by this act, except upon hearings in court, may be administered by (1) referees; (2) officers authorized to administer oaths in proceedings before the courts of the United States, or under the laws of the State where the same are to be taken; and (3) diplomatic or consular officers of the United States in any foreign country.

b Any person conscientiously opposed to taking an oath may, in lieu thereof, affirm. Any person who shall affirm falsely shall be punished as for the making of a false oath.

SEC. 21. Evidence.—a A court of bankruptcy may, upon application of any officer, bankrupt, or creditor, by order require any designated person, including the bankrupt, who is a competent witness under the laws of the State in which the proceedings are pending, to appear in court or before a referee or the judge of any State court, to be examined concerning the acts, conduct, or property of a bankrupt whose estate is in process of administration under this act.

b The right to take depositions in proceedings under this act shall be determined and enjoyed according to the United States laws now in force, or such as may be hereafter enacted relating to the taking of depositions, except as herein provided.

c Notice of the taking of depositions shall be filed with the referee in every case. When depositions are to be taken in opposition to the allowance of a claim notice shall also be served upon the claimant, and when in opposition to a discharge notice shall also be served upon the bankrupt.

d Certified copies of proceedings before a referee or of papers, when issued by the clerk or referee, shall be admitted as evidence with like force and effect as certified copies of the records of district courts of the United States are now or may hereafter be admitted as evidence.

e A certified copy of the order approving the bond of a trustee shall constitute conclusive evidence of the vesting in him of the title to the property of the bankrupt, and if recorded shall impart the same notice that a deed from the bankrupt to the trustee if recorded would have imparted had not bankruptcy proceedings intervened.

f A certified copy of an order confirming or setting aside a composition or granting or setting aside a discharge, not revoked, shall be evidence of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of the proceedings, and of the fact that the order was made.

g A certified copy of an order confirming a composition shall constitute evidence of the revesting of the title of his property in the bankrupt, and if recorded shall impart the same notice that a deed from the trustee to the bankrupt if recorded would impart.

SEC. 22. Reference of cases after adjudication.—a After a person has been adjudged a bankrupt the judge may cause the trustee to proceed with the administration of the estate, or refer it (1) generally to the referee or specially with only limited authority to act in the premises or to consider and report upon specified issues; or (2) to any referee within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, if the convenience of parties in interest will be served thereby, or for cause, or if the bankrupt does not do business, reside, or have his domicile in the district.

b The judge may, at any time, for the convenience of parties or for cause, transfer a case from one referee to another.

SEC. 23. Jurisdiction of United States and State courts.—a The United States circuit courts shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy, between trustees as such, and adverse claimants concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustees, in the same manner and to the same extent only as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted and such controversies had been between the bankrupts and such adverse claimants.

b Suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt, whose estate is being administered by such trustee, might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant.

c The United States circuit courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of bankruptcy, within their respective territorial limits, of the offenses enumerated in this act.

SEC. 24. Jurisdiction of appellate courts.—a The Supreme Court of the United States, the circuit courts of appeals of the United States, and the supreme courts of the Territories, in vacation in chambers and during their respective terms, as now or as they may be hereafter held, are hereby invested with appellate jurisdiction of controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings from the courts of bankruptcy from which they have appellate jurisdiction in other cases. The Supreme Court of the United States shall exercise a like jurisdiction from courts of bankruptcy not within any organized circuit of the United States and from the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

b The several circuit courts of appeals shall have jurisdiction in equity, either interlocutory or final, to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy within their jurisdiction. Such power shall be exercised on due notice and petition by any party aggrieved.

SEC. 25. Appeals and writs of error.—a That appeals, as in equity cases, may be taken in bankruptcy proceedings from the courts of bankruptcy to the circuit court of appeals of the United States, and to the supreme court of the Territories, in the following cases, to wit: (1) from a judgment adjudging or refusing to adjudge the defendant a bankrupt; (2) from a judgment granting or denying a discharge; and (3) from a judgment allowing or rejecting a debt or claim of $500 or over. Such appeal shall be taken within ten days after the judgment appealed from has been rendered, and may be heard and determined by the appellate court in term or vacation, as the case may be.

b From any final decision of a court of appeals, allowing for rejecting a claim under this act, an appeal may be had under such rules and within such time as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the following cases, and no other:

1. Where the amount in controversy exceeds the sum of $2,000, and the question involved is one which might have been taken on appeal or writ of error from the highest court of a State to the Supreme Court of the United States; or

2. Where some justice of the Supreme Court of the United States shall certify that in his opinion the determination of the question or questions involved in the allowance or rejection of such claim is essential to a uniform construction of this act throughout the United States.

c Trustees shall not be required to give bond when they take appeals or sue out writs of error.

SEC. 26. Arbitration of controversies.—a The trustee may, pursuant to the direction of the court, submit to arbitration any controversy arising in the settlement of the estate.

b Three arbitrators shall be chosen by mutual consent, or one by the trustee, one by the other party to the controversy, and the third by the two so chosen, or if they fail to agree in five days after their appointment the court shall appoint the third arbitrator.

c The written finding of the arbitrators, or a majority of them, as to the issues presented, may be filed in court and shall have like force and effect as the verdict of a jury.

SEC. 27. Compromises.—a The trustee may, with the approval of the court, compromise any controversy arising in the administration of the estate upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the estate.

SEC. 28. Designation of newspapers.—a Courts of bankruptcy shall by order designate a newspaper published within their respective territorial districts, and in the county in which the bankrupt resides or the major part of his property is situated, in which notices required to be published by this act and orders which the court may direct to be published shall be inserted. Any court may in a particular case, for the convenience of parties in interest, designate some additional newspaper in which notices and orders in such case shall be published.

SEC. 29. Offenses.—a A person shall be punished, by imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently appropriated to his own use, embezzled, spent, or unlawfully transferred any property or secreted or destroyed any document belonging to a bankrupt estate which came into his charge as trustee.

b A person shall be punished, by imprisonment for a period not to exceed two years, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently (1) concealed while a bankrupt, or after his discharge, from his trustee any of the property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy; or (2) made a false oath or account in, or in relation to, any proceeding in bankruptcy; (3) presented under oath any false claim for proof against the estate of a bankrupt, or used any such claim in composition personally or by agent, proxy, or attorney, or as agent, proxy, or attorney; or (4) received any material amount of property from a bankrupt after the filing of the petition, with intent to defeat this act; or (5) extorted or attempted to extort any money or property from any person as a consideration for acting or forbearing to act in bankruptcy proceedings.

c A person shall be punished by fine, not to exceed $500, and forfeit his office, and the same shall thereupon become vacant, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly (1) acted as a referee in a case in which he is directly or indirectly interested; or (2) purchased, while a referee, directly or indirectly, any property of the estate in bankruptcy of which he is referee; or (3) refused, while a referee or trustee, to permit a reasonable opportunity for the inspection of the accounts relating to the affairs of, and the papers and records of, estates in his charge by parties in interest when directed by the court so to do.

d A person shall not be prosecuted for any offense arising under this act unless the indictment is found or the information is filed in court within one year after the commission of the offense.

SEC. 30. Rules, forms, and orders.—a All necessary rules, forms, and orders as to procedure and for carrying this act into force and effect shall be prescribed, and may be amended from time to time, by the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 31. Computation of time.—a Whenever time is enumerated by days in this act, or in any proceeding in bankruptcy, the number of days shall be computed by excluding the first and including the last, unless the last fall on a Sunday or holiday, in which event the day last included shall be the next day thereafter which is not a Sunday or a legal holiday.

SEC. 32. Transfer of cases.—a In the event petitions are filed against the same person, or against different members of a partnership, in different courts of bankruptcy each of which has jurisdiction, the cases shall be transferred by order of the courts relinquishing jurisdiction, to and be consolidated by the one of such courts which can proceed with the same for the greatest convenience of parties in interest.

CHAPTER V.

OFFICERS, THEIR DUTIES AND COMPENSATION.

SEC. 33. Creation of two offices.—a The offices of referee and trustee are hereby created.

SEC. 34. Appointment, removal, and districts of referees.—a Courts of bankruptcy shall, within the territorial limits of which they respectively have jurisdiction, (1) appoint referees, each for a term of two years, and may, in their discretion, remove them because their services are not needed or for other cause; and (2) designate, and from time to time change, the limits of the districts of referees, so that each county, where the services of a referee are needed, may constitute at least one district.

SEC. 35. Qualifications of referees.—a Individuals shall not be eligible to appointment as referees unless they are respectively (1) competent to perform the duties of that office; (2) not holding any office of profit or emolument under the laws of the United States or of any State other than commissioners of deeds, justices of the peace, masters in chancery, or notaries public; (3) not related by consanguinity or affinity, within the third degree as determined by the common law, to any of the judges of the courts of bankruptcy or circuit courts of the United States, or of the justices or judges of the appellate courts of the districts wherein they may be appointed; and (4) residents of, or have their offices in, the territorial districts for which they are to be appointed.

SEC. 36. Oaths of office of referees.—a Referees shall take the same oath of office as that prescribed for judges of United States courts.

SEC. 37. Number of referees.—a Such number of referees shall be appointed as may be necessary to assist in expeditiously transacting the bankruptcy business pending in the various courts of bankruptcy.

SEC. 38. Jurisdiction of referees.—a Referees respectively are hereby invested, subject always to a review by the judge, within the limits of their districts as established from time to time, with jurisdiction to (1) consider all petitions referred to them by the clerks and make the adjudications or dismiss the petitions; (2) exercise the powers vested in courts of bankruptcy for the administering of oaths to and the examination of persons as witnesses and for requiring the production of documents in proceedings before them, except the power of commitment; (3) exercise the powers of the judge for the taking possession and releasing of the property of the bankrupt in the event of the issuance by the clerk of a certificate showing the absence of a judge from the judicial district, or the division of the district, or his sickness, or inability to act; (4) perform such part of the duties, except as to questions arising out of the applications of bankrupts for compositions or discharges, as are by this act conferred on courts of bankruptcy and as shall be prescribed by rules or orders of the courts of bankruptcy of their respective districts, except as herein otherwise provided; and (5) upon the application of the trustee during the examination of the bankrupts, or other proceedings, authorize the employment of stenographers at the expense of the estates at a compensation not to exceed 10 cents per folio for reporting and transcribing the proceedings.

SEC. 39. Duties of referees.—a Referees shall (1) declare dividends and prepare and deliver to trustees dividend sheets showing the dividends declared and to whom payable; (2) examine all schedules of property and lists of creditors filed by bankrupts and cause such as are incomplete or defective to be amended; (3) furnish such information concerning the estates in process of administration before them as may be requested by the parties in interest; (4) give notices to creditors as herein provided; (5) make up records embodying the evidence, or the substance thereof, as agreed upon by the parties in all contested matters arising before them, whenever requested to do so by either of the parties thereto, together with their findings therein, and transmit them to the judges; (6) prepare and file the schedules of property and lists of creditors required to be filed by the bankrupts, or cause the same to be done, when the bankrupts fail, refuse, or neglect to do so; (7) safely keep, perfect, and transmit to the clerks the records, herein required to be kept by them, when the cases are concluded; (8) transmit to the clerks such papers as may be on file before them whenever the same are needed in any proceedings in courts, and in like manner secure the return of such papers after they have been used, or, if it be impracticable to transmit the original papers, transmit certified copies thereof by mail; (9) upon application of any party in interest, preserve the evidence taken or the substance thereof as agreed upon by the parties before them when a stenographer is not in attendance; and (10) whenever their respective offices are in the same cities or towns where the courts of bankruptcy convene, call upon and receive from the clerks all papers filed in courts of bankruptcy which have been referred to them.

b Referees shall not (1) act in cases in which they are directly or indirectly interested; (2) practice as attorneys and counselors at law in any bankruptcy proceedings; or (3) purchase, directly or indirectly, any property of an estate in bankruptcy.

SEC. 40. Compensation of referees.—a Referees shall receive as full compensation for their services, payable after they are rendered, a fee of $10 deposited with the clerk at the time the petition is filed in each case, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt, and from estates which have been administered before them 1 per cent commissions on sums to be paid as dividends and commissions, or one-half of 1 per cent on the amount to be paid to creditors upon the confirmation of a composition.

b Whenever a case is transferred from one referee to another, the judge shall determine the proportion in which the fee and commissions therefor shall be divided between the referees.

c In the event of the reference of a case being revoked before it is concluded, and when the case is specially referred, the judge shall determine what part of the fee and commissions shall be paid to the referees.

SEC. 41. Contempts before referees.—a A person shall not, in proceedings before a referee, (1) disobey or resist any lawful order, process, or writ; (2) misbehave during a hearing or so near the place thereof as to obstruct the same; (3) neglect to produce, after having been ordered to do so, any pertinent document; or (4) refuse to appear after having been subpoenaed, or, upon appearing, refuse to take the oath as a witness, or, after having taken the oath, refuse to be examined according to law: Provided, That no person shall be required to attend as a witness before a referee at a place outside of the State of his residence, and more than 100 miles from such place of residence, and only in case his lawful mileage and fee for one day's attendance shall be first paid or tendered to him.

b The referee shall certify the facts to the judge, if any person shall do any of the things forbidden in this section. The judge shall thereupon, in a summary manner, hear the evidence as to the acts complained of, and, if it is such as to warrant him in so doing, punish such person in the same manner and to the same extent as for a contempt committed before the court of bankruptcy, or commit such person upon the same conditions as if the doing of the forbidden act had occurred with reference to the process of, or in the presence of, the court.

SEC. 42. Records of referees.—a The records of all proceedings in each case before a referee shall be kept as nearly as may be in the same manner as records are now kept in equity cases in circuit courts of the United States.

b A record of the proceedings in each case shall be kept in a separate book or books, and shall, together with the papers on file, constitute the records of the case.

c The book or books containing a record of the proceedings shall, when the case is concluded before the referee, be certified to by him, and, together with such papers as are on file before him, be transmitted to the court of bankruptcy and shall there remain as a part of the records of the court.

SEC. 43. Referee's absence or disability.—a Whenever the office of a referee is vacant, or its occupant is absent or disqualified to act, the judge may act, or may appoint another referee, or another referee holding an appointment under the same court may, by order of the judge, temporarily fill the vacancy.

SEC. 44. Appointment of trustees.—a The creditors of a bankrupt estate shall, at their first meeting after the adjudication or after a vacancy has occurred in the office of trustee, or after an estate has been reopened, or after a composition has been set aside or a discharge revoked, or if there is a vacancy in the office of trustee, appoint one trustee or three trustees of such estate. If the creditors do not appoint a trustee or trustees as herein provided, the court shall do so.

SEC. 45. Qualifications of trustees.—a Trustees may be (1) individuals who are respectively competent to perform the duties of that office, and reside or have an office in the judicial district within which they are appointed, or (2) corporations authorized by their charters or by law to act in such capacity and having an office in the judicial district within which they are appointed.

SEC. 46. Death or removal of trustees.—a The death or removal of a trustee shall not abate any suit or proceeding which he is prosecuting or defending at the time of his death or removal, but the same may be proceeded with or defended by his joint trustee or successor in the same manner as though the same had been commenced or was being defended by such joint trustee alone or by such successor.

SEC. 47. Duties of trustees.—a Trustees shall respectively (1) account for and pay over to the estates under their control all interest received by them upon property of such estates; (2) collect and reduce to money the property of the estates for which they are trustees, under the direction of the court, and close up the estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of the parties in interest; (3) deposit all money received by them in one of the designated depositories; (4) disburse money only by check or draft on the depositories in which it has been deposited; (5) furnish such information concerning the estates of which they are trustees and their administration as may be requested by parties in interest; (6) keep regular accounts showing all amounts received and from what sources and all amounts expended and on what accounts; (7) lay before the final meeting of the creditors detailed statements of the administration of the estates; (8) make final reports and file final accounts with the courts fifteen days before the days fixed for the final meetings of the creditors; (9) pay dividends within ten days after they are declared by the referees; (10) report to the courts, in writing, the condition of the estates and the amounts of money on hand, and such other details as may be required by the courts, within the first month after their appointment and every two months thereafter, unless otherwise ordered by the courts; and (11) set apart the bankrupt's exemptions and report the items and estimated value thereof to the court as soon as practicable after their appointment.

b Whenever three trustees have been appointed for an estate, the concurrence of at least two of them shall be necessary to the validity of their every act concerning the administration of the estate.

SEC. 48. Compensation of trustees.—a Trustees shall receive, as full compensation for their services, payable after they are rendered, a fee of $5 deposited with the clerk at the time the petition is filed in each case, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt, and from estates which they have administered, such commissions on sums to be paid as dividends and commissions as may be allowed by the courts, not to exceed 3 per cent on the first $5,000 or less, 2 per cent on the second $5,000 or part thereof, and 1 per cent on such sums in excess of $10,000.

b In the event of an estate being administered by three trustees instead of one trustee or by successive trustees, the court shall apportion the fees and commissions between them according to the services actually rendered, so that there shall not be paid to trustees for the administering of any estate a greater amount than one trustee would be entitled to.

c The court may, in its discretion, withhold all compensation from any trustee who has been removed for cause.

SEC. 49. Accounts and papers of trustees.—a The accounts and papers of trustees shall be open to the inspection of officers and all parties in interest.

SEC. 50. Bonds of referees and trustees.—a Referees, before assuming the duties of their offices, and within such time as the district courts of the United States having jurisdiction shall prescribe, shall respectively qualify by entering into bond to the United States in such sum as shall be fixed by such courts, not to exceed $5,000, with such sureties as shall be approved by such courts, conditioned for the faithful performance of their official duties.

b Trustees, before entering upon the performance of their official duties, and within ten days after their appointment, or within such further time, not to exceed five days, as the court may permit, shall respectively qualify by entering into bond to the United States, with such sureties as shall be approved by the courts, conditioned for the faithful performance of their official duties.

c The creditors of a bankrupt estate, at their first meeting after the adjudication, or after a vacancy has occurred in the office of trustee, or after an estate has been reopened, or after a composition has been set aside or a discharge revoked, if there is a vacancy in the office of trustee, shall fix the amount of the bond of the trustee; they may at any time increase the amount of the bond. If the creditors do not fix the amount of the bond of the trustee as herein provided the court shall do so.

d The court shall require evidence as to the actual value of the property of sureties.

e There shall be at least two sureties upon each bond.

f The actual value of the property of the sureties, over and above their liabilities and exemptions, on each bond shall equal at least the amount of such bond.

g Corporations organized for the purpose of becoming sureties upon bonds, or authorized by law to do so, may be accepted as sureties upon the bonds of referees and trustees whenever the courts are satisfied that the rights of all parties in interest will be thereby amply protected.

h Bonds of referees, trustees, and designated depositories shall be filed of record in the office of the clerk of the court and may be sued upon in the name of the United States for the use of any person injured by a breach of their conditions.

i Trustees shall not be liable, personally or on their bonds, to the United States for any penalties or forfeitures incurred by the bankrupts under this act of whose estates they are respectively trustees.

j Joint trustees may give joint or several bonds.

k If any referee or trustee shall fail to give bond as herein provided and within the time limited, he shall be deemed to have declined his appointment, and such failure shall create a vacancy in his office.

l Suits upon referees' bonds shall not be brought subsequent to two years after the alleged breach of the bond.

m Suits upon trustees' bonds shall not be brought subsequent to two years after the estate has been closed.

SEC. 51. Duties of clerks.—a Clerks shall respectively (1) account for, as for other fees received by them, the clerk's fee paid in each case and such other fees as may be received for certified copies of records which may be prepared for persons other than officers; (2) collect the fees of the clerk, referee, and trustee in each case instituted before filing the petition, except the petition of a proposed voluntary bankrupt which is accompanied by an affidavit stating that the petitioner is without, and can not obtain, the money with which to pay such fees; (3) deliver to the referees upon application all papers which may be referred to them, or, if the offices of such referees are not in the same cities or towns as the offices of such clerks, transmit such papers by mail, and in like manner return papers which were received from such referees after they have been used; (4) and within ten days after each case has been closed pay to the referee, if the case was referred, the fee collected for him, and to the trustee the fee collected for him at the time of filing the petition.

SEC. 52. Compensation of clerks and marshals.—a Clerks shall respectively receive as full compensation for their service to each estate a filing fee of $10, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt.

b Marshals shall respectively receive from the estate where an adjudication in bankruptcy is made, except as herein otherwise provided, for the performance of their services in proceedings in bankruptcy, the same fees, and account for them in the same way, as they are entitled to receive for the performance of the same or similar services in other cases in accordance with laws now in force, or such as may be hereafter enacted, fixing the compensation of marshals.

SEC. 53. Duties of Attorney-General.—a The Attorney-General shall annually lay before Congress statistical tables showing for the whole country, and by States, the number of cases during the year of voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy; the amount of the property of the estates; the dividends paid and the expenses of administering such estates; and such other like information as he may deem important.

SEC. 54. Statistics of bankruptcy proceedings.—a Officers shall furnish in writing and transmit by mail such information as is within their knowledge, and as may be shown by the records and papers in their possession, to the Attorney-General, for statistical purposes, within ten days after being requested by him to do so.

CHAPTER VI.

CREDITORS.

SEC. 55. Meetings of creditors.—a The court shall cause the first meeting of the creditors of a bankrupt to be held, not less than ten nor more than thirty days after the adjudication, at the county seat of the county in which the bankrupt has had his principal place of business, resided, or had his domicile; or if that place would be manifestly inconvenient as a place of meeting for the parties in interest, or if the bankrupt is one who does not do business, reside, or have his domicile within the United States, the court shall fix a place for the meeting which is the most convenient for parties in interest. If such meeting should by any mischance not be held within such time, the court shall fix the date, as soon as may be thereafter, when it shall be held.

b At the first meeting of creditors the judge or referee shall preside, and, before proceeding with the other business, may allow or disallow the claims of creditors there presented, and may publicly examine the bankrupt or cause him to be examined at the instance of any creditor.

c The creditors shall at each meeting take such steps as may be pertinent and necessary for the promotion of the best interests of the estate and the enforcement of this act.

d A meeting of creditors, subsequent to the first one, may be held at any time and place when all of the creditors who have secured the allowance of their claims sign a written consent to hold a meeting at such time and place.

e The court shall call a meeting of creditors whenever one-fourth or more in number of those who have proven their claims shall file a written request to that effect; if such request is signed by a majority of such creditors, which number represents a majority in amount of such claims, and contains a request for such meeting to be held at a designated place, the court shall call such meeting at such place within thirty days after the date of the filing of the request.

f Whenever the affairs of the estate are ready to be closed a final meeting of creditors shall be ordered.

SEC. 56. Voters at meetings of creditors.—a Creditors shall pass upon matters submitted to them at their meetings by a majority vote in number and amount of claims of all creditors whose claims have been allowed and are present, except as herein otherwise provided.

b Creditors holding claims which are secured or have priority shall not, in respect to such claims, be entitled to vote at creditors' meetings, nor shall such claims be counted in computing either the number of creditors or the amount of their claims, unless the amounts of such claims exceed the values of such securities or priorities, and then only for such excess.

SEC. 57. Proof and Allowance of Claims.—a Proof of claims shall consist of a statement under oath, in writing, signed by a creditor setting forth the claim, the consideration therefor, and whether any, and, if so, what securities are held therefor, and whether any, and, if so, what payments have been made thereon, and that the sum claimed is justly owing from the bankrupt to the creditor.

b Whenever a claim is founded upon an instrument of writing such instrument, unless lost or destroyed, shall be filed with the proof of claim. If such instrument is lost or destroyed, a statement of such fact and of the circumstances of such loss or destruction shall be filed under oath with the claim. After the claim is allowed or disallowed, such instrument may be withdrawn by permission of the court upon leaving a copy thereof on file with the claim.

c Claims after being proved may, for the purpose of allowance, be filed by the claimants in the court where the proceedings are pending or before the referee if the case has been referred.

d Claims which have been duly proved shall be allowed, upon receipt by or upon presentation to the court, unless objection to their allowance shall be made by parties in interest, or their consideration be continued for cause by the court upon its own motion.

e Claims of secured creditors and those who have priority may be allowed to enable such creditors to participate in the proceedings at creditors' meetings held prior to the determination of the value of their securities or priorities, but shall be allowed for such sums only as to the courts seem to be owing over and above the value of their securities or priorities.

f Objections to claims shall be heard and determined as soon as the convenience of the court and the best interests of the estates and the claimants will permit.

g The claims of creditors who have received preferences shall not be allowed unless such creditors shall surrender their preferences.

h The value of securities held by secured creditors shall be determined by converting the same into money according to the terms of the agreement pursuant to which such securities were delivered to such creditors or by such creditors and the trustee, by agreement, arbitration, compromise, or litigation, as the court may direct, and the amount of such value shall be credited upon such claims, and a dividend shall be paid only on the unpaid balance.

i Whenever a creditor, whose claim against a bankrupt estate is secured by the individual undertaking of any person, fails to prove such claim, such person may do so in the creditor's name, and if he discharge such undertaking in whole or in part he shall be subrogated to that extent to the rights of the creditor.

j Debts owing to the United States, a State, a county, a district, or a municipality as a penalty of forfeiture shall not be allowed, except for the amount of the pecuniary loss sustained by the act, transaction, or proceeding out of which the penalty of forfeiture arose, with reasonable and actual costs occasioned thereby and such interest as may have accrued thereon according to law.

k Claims which have been allowed may be reconsidered for cause and re-allowed or rejected in whole or in part, according to the equities of the case, before but not after the estate has been closed.

l Whenever a claim shall have been reconsidered and rejected, in whole or in part, upon which a dividend has been paid, the trustee may recover from the creditor the amount of the dividend received upon the claim if rejected in whole, or the proportional part thereof if rejected only in part.

m The claim of any estate which is being administered in bankruptcy against any like estate may be proved by the trustee and allowed by the court in the same manner and upon like terms as the claims of other creditors.

n Claims shall not be proved against a bankrupt estate subsequent to one year after the adjudication; or if they are liquidated by litigation and the final judgment therein is rendered within thirty days before or after the expiration of such time, then within sixty days after the rendition of such judgment: Provided, That the right of infants and insane persons without guardians, without notice of the proceedings, may continue six months longer.

Sec. 58. Notices to creditors.—a Creditors shall have at least ten days' notice by mail, to their respective addresses as they appear in the list of creditors of the bankrupt, or as afterwards filed with the papers in the case by the creditors, unless they waive notice in writing, of (1) all examinations of the bankrupt; (2) all hearings upon applications for the confirmation of compositions or the discharge of bankrupts; (3) all meetings of creditors; (4) all proposed sales of property; (5) the declaration and time of payment of dividends; (6) the filing of the final accounts of the trustee, and the time when and the place where they will be examined and passed upon; (7) the proposed compromise of any controversy; and (8) the proposed dismissal of the proceedings.

b Notice to creditors of the first meeting shall be published at least once and may be published such number of additional times as the court may direct; the last publication shall be at least one week prior to the date fixed for the meeting. Other notices may be published as the court shall direct.

c All notices shall be given by the referee, unless otherwise ordered by the judge.

Sec. 59. Who may file and dismiss petitions.—a Any qualified person may file a petition to be adjudged a voluntary bankrupt.

b Three or more creditors who have provable claims against any person which amount in the aggregate, in excess of the value of securities held by them, if any, to $300 or over, or if all of the creditors of such person are less than twelve in number, then one of such creditors whose claim equals such amount may file a petition to have him adjudged a bankrupt.

c Petitions shall be filed in duplicate, one copy for the clerk and one for service on the bankrupt.

d If it be averred in the petition that the creditors of the bankrupt are less than twelve in number, and less than three creditors have joined as petitioners therein, and the answer avers the existence of a larger number of creditors, there shall be filed with the answer a list under oath of all the creditors, with their addresses, and thereupon the court shall cause all such creditors to be notified of the pendency of such petition and shall delay the hearing upon such petition for a reasonable time, to the end that parties in interest shall have an opportunity to be heard; if, upon such hearing it shall appear that a sufficient number have joined in such petition, or if prior to or during such hearing a sufficient number shall join therein, the case may be proceeded with, but otherwise it shall be dismissed.

e In computing the number of creditors of a bankrupt for the purpose of determining how many creditors must join in the petition, such creditors as were employed by him at the time of the filing of the petition or are related to him by consanguinity or affinity within the third degree, as determined by the common law, and have not joined in the petition, shall not be counted.

f Creditors other than original petitioners may at any time enter their appearance and join in the petition, or file an answer and be heard in opposition to the prayer of the petition.

g A voluntary or involuntary petition shall not be dismissed by the petitioner or petitioners or for want of prosecution or by consent of parties until after notice to the creditors.

Sec. 60. Preferred creditors.—a A person shall be deemed to have given a preference if, being insolvent, he has procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class.

b If a bankrupt shall have given a preference within four months before the filing of a petition, or after the filing of the petition and before the adjudication, and the person receiving it, or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, shall have had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee, and he may recover the property or its value from such person.

c If a creditor has been preferred, and afterwards in good faith gives the debtor further credit without security of any kind for property which becomes a part of the debtor's estate, the amount of such new credit remaining unpaid at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy may be set off against the amount which would otherwise be recoverable from him.

d If a debtor shall, directly or indirectly, in contemplation of the filing of a petition by or against him, pay money or transfer property to an attorney and counselor at law, solicitor in equity, or proctor in admiralty for services to be rendered, the transaction shall be reexamined by the court on petition of the trustee or any creditor and shall only be held valid to the extent of a reasonable amount to be determined by the court, and the excess may be recovered by the trustee for the benefit of the estate.

CHAPTER VII.

ESTATES.

Sec. 61. Depositories for money.—a Courts of bankruptcy shall designate, by order, banking institutions as depositories for the money of bankrupt estates, as convenient as may be to the residences of trustees, and shall require bonds to the United States, subject to their approval, to be given by such banking institutions, and may from time to time, as occasion may require, by like order increase the number of depositories or the amount of any bond or change such depositories.

Sec. 62. Expenses of administering estates.—a The actual and necessary expenses incurred by officers in the administration of estates shall, except where other provisions are made for their payment, be reported in detail, under oath, and examined and approved or disapproved by the court. If approved, they shall be paid or allowed out of the estates in which they were incurred.

Sec. 63. Debts which may be proved.—a Debts of the bankrupt may be proved and allowed against his estate which are (1) a fixed liability, as evidenced by a judgment or an instrument in writing, absolutely owing at the time of the filing of the petition against him, whether then payable or not, with any interest thereon which would have been recoverable at that date or with a rebate of interest upon such as were not then payable and did not bear interest; (2) due as costs taxable against an involuntary bankrupt who was at the time of the filing of the petition against him plaintiff in a cause of action which would pass to the trustee and which the trustee declines to prosecute after notice; (3) founded upon a claim for taxable costs incurred in good faith by a creditor before the filing of the petition in an action to recover a provable debt; (4) founded upon an open account, or upon a contract express or implied; and (5) founded upon provable debts reduced to judgments after the filing of the petition and before the consideration of the bankrupt's application for a discharge, less costs incurred and interests accrued after the filing of the petition and up to the time of the entry of such judgments.

b Unliquidated claims against the bankrupt may, pursuant to application to the court, be liquidated in such manner as it shall direct, and may thereafter be proved and allowed against his estate.

Sec. 64. Debts which have priority.—a The court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, State, county, district, or municipality in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors, and upon filing the receipts of the proper public officers for such payment he shall be credited with the amount thereof, and in case any question arises as to the amount or legality of any such tax the same shall be heard and determined by the court.

b The debts to have priority, except as herein provided, and to be paid in full out of bankrupt estates, and the order of payment shall be (1) the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate subsequent to filing the petition; (2) the filing fees paid by creditors in involuntary cases; (3) the cost of administration, including the fees and mileage payable to witnesses as now or hereafter provided by the laws of the United States, and one reasonable attorney's fee, for the professional services actually rendered, irrespective of the number of attorneys employed, to the petitioning creditors in involuntary cases, to the bankrupt in involuntary cases while performing the duties herein prescribed, and to the bankrupt in voluntary cases, as the court may allow; (4) wages due to workmen, clerks, or servants which have been earned within three months before the date of the commencement of proceedings, not to exceed $300 to each claimant; and (5) debts owing to any person who by the laws of the States or the United States is entitled to priority.

c In the event of the confirmation of a composition being set aside, or a discharge revoked, the property acquired by the bankrupt in addition to his estate at the time the composition was confirmed or the adjudication was made shall be applied to the payment in full of the claims of creditors for property sold to him on credit, in good faith, while such composition or discharge was in force, and the residue, if any, shall be applied to the payment of the debts which were owing at the time of the adjudication.

Sec. 65. Declaration and payment of dividends.—a Dividends of an equal per cent shall be declared and paid on all allowed claims, except such as have priority or are secured.

b The first dividend shall be declared within thirty days after the adjudication if the money of the estate in excess of the amount necessary to pay the debts which have priority and such claims as have not been, but probably will be, allowed equals 5 per cent or more of such allowed claims. Dividends subsequent to the first shall be declared upon like terms as the first and as often as the amount shall equal 10 per cent or more and upon closing the estate. Dividends may be declared oftener and in smaller proportions if the judge shall so order.

c The rights of creditors who have received dividends, or in whose favor final dividends have been declared, shall not be affected by the proof and allowance of claims subsequent to the date of such payment or declarations of dividends; but the creditors proving and securing the allowance of such claims shall be paid dividends equal in amount to those already received by the other creditors if the estate equals so much before such other creditors are paid any further dividends.

d Whenever a person shall have been adjudged a bankrupt by a court without the United States and also by a court of bankruptcy, creditors residing within the United States shall first be paid a dividend equal to that received in the court without the United States by other creditors before creditors who have received a dividend in such court shall be paid any amount.

e A claimant shall not be entitled to collect from a bankrupt estate any greater amount than shall accrue pursuant to the provisions of this act.

Sec. 66. Unclaimed dividends.—a Dividends which remain unclaimed for six months after the final dividend has been declared shall be paid by the trustee into court.

b Dividends remaining unclaimed for one year shall, under the direction of the court, be distributed to the creditors whose claims have been allowed but not paid in full, and after such claims have been paid in full the balance shall be paid to the bankrupt: Provided, That in case unclaimed dividends belong to minors such minors may have one year after arriving at majority to claim such dividends.

SEC. 67. Liens.—a Claims which for want of record or for other reasons would not have been valid liens as against the claims of the creditors of the bankrupt shall not be liens against his estate.

b Whenever a creditor is prevented from enforcing his rights as against a lien created, or attempted to be created, by his debtor, who afterwards becomes a bankrupt, the trustee of the estate of such bankrupt shall be subrogated to and may enforce such rights of such creditor for the benefit of the estate.

c A lien created by or obtained in or pursuant to any suit or proceeding at law or in equity, including an attachment upon mesne process or a judgment by confession, which was begun against a person within four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy by or against such person shall be dissolved by the adjudication of such person to be a bankrupt if (1) it appears that said lien was obtained and permitted while the defendant was insolvent and that its existence and enforcement will work a preference, or (2) the party or parties to be benefited thereby had reasonable cause to believe the defendant was insolvent and in contemplation of bankruptcy, or (3) that such lien was sought and permitted in fraud of the provisions of this act; or if the dissolution of such lien would militate against the best interests of the estate of such person the same shall not be dissolved, but the trustee of the estate of such person, for the benefit of the estate, shall be subrogated to the rights of the holder of such lien and empowered to perfect and enforce the same in his name as trustee with like force and effect as such holder might have done had not bankruptcy proceedings intervened.

d Liens given or accepted in good faith and not in contemplation of or in fraud upon this act, and for a present consideration, which have been recorded according to law, if record thereof was necessary in order to impart notice, shall not be affected by this act.

e That all conveyances, transfers, assignments, or incumbrances of his property, or any part thereof, made or given by a person adjudged a bankrupt under the provisions of this act subsequent to the passage of this act and within four months prior to the filing of the petition, with the intent and purpose on his part to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them, shall be null and void as against the creditors of such debtor, except as to purchasers in good faith and for a present fair consideration; and all property of the debtor conveyed, transferred, assigned, or encumbered as aforesaid shall, if he be adjudged a bankrupt, and the same is not exempt from execution and liability for debts by the law of his domicile, be and remain a part of the assets and estate of the bankrupt and shall pass to his said trustee, whose duty it shall be to recover and reclaim the same by legal proceedings or otherwise for the benefit of the creditors. And all conveyances, transfers, or incumbrances of his property made by a debtor at any time within four months prior to the filing of the petition against him, and while insolvent, which are held null and void as against the creditors of such debtor by the laws of the State, Territory, or District in which such property is situated, shall be deemed null and void under this act against the creditors of such debtor if he be adjudged a bankrupt, and such property shall pass to the assignee and be by him reclaimed and recovered for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt.

f That all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, shall be deemed null and void in case he is adjudged a bankrupt; and the property affected by the levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien shall be deemed wholly discharged and released from the same and shall pass to the trustee as a part of the estate of the bankrupt, unless the court shall on due notice order that the right under such levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien shall be preserved for the benefit of the estate; and thereupon the same may pass to and shall be preserved by the trustee for the benefit of the estate as aforesaid. And the court may order such conveyance as shall be necessary to carry the purposes of this section into effect: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall have the effect to destroy or impair the title obtained by such levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien of a bona fide purchaser for value who shall have acquired the same without notice or reasonable cause for inquiry.

SEC. 68. Sets-offs and counterclaims.—a In all cases of mutual debts or mutual credits between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor the account shall be stated and one debt shall be set off against the other, and the balance only shall be allowed or paid.

b A set-off or counterclaim shall not be allowed in favor of any debtor of the bankrupt which (1) is not provable against the estate; or (2) was purchased by or transferred to him after the filing of the petition, or within four months before such filing, with a view to such use and with knowledge or notice that such bankrupt was insolvent, or had committed an act of bankruptcy.

SEC. 69. Possession of property.—a A judge may, upon satisfactory proof, by affidavit, that a bankrupt against whom an involuntary petition has been filed and is pending has committed an act of bankruptcy, or has neglected or is neglecting, or is about to neglect his property that it has thereby deteriorated or is thereby deteriorating or is about thereby to deteriorate in value, issue a warrant to the marshal to seize and hold it subject to further orders. Before such warrant is issued the petitioners applying therefor shall enter into a bond in such an amount as the judge shall fix, with such sureties as he shall approve, conditioned to indemnify such bankrupt for such damages as he shall sustain in the event such seizure shall prove to have been wrongfully obtained. Such property shall be released if such bankrupt shall give bond in a sum which shall be fixed by the judge, with such sureties as he shall approve, conditioned to turn over such property, or pay the value thereof in money to the trustee, in the event he is adjudged a bankrupt pursuant to such petition.

SEC. 70. Title to property.—a The trustee of the estate of a bankrupt, upon his appointment and qualification, and his successor or successors, if he shall have one or more, upon his or their appointment and qualification, shall in turn be vested by operation of law with the title of the bankrupt, as of the date he was adjudged a bankrupt, except in so far as it is to property which is exempt, to all (1) documents relating to his property; (2) interests in patents, patent rights, copyrights, and trade-marks; (3) powers which he might have exercised for his own benefit, but not those which he might have exercised for some other person; (4) property transferred by him in fraud of his creditors; (5) property which prior to the filing of the petition he could by any means have transferred or which might have been levied upon and sold under judicial process against him: Provided, That when any bankrupt shall have any insurance policy which has a cash surrender value payable to himself, his estate, or personal representatives, he may within thirty days after the cash surrender value has been ascertained and stated to the trustee by the company issuing the same, pay or secure to the trustee the sum so ascertained and stated, and continue to hold, own, and carry such policy free from the claims of the creditors participating in the distribution of his estate under the bankruptcy proceedings, otherwise the policy shall pass to the trustee as assets; and (6) rights of action arising upon contracts or from the unlawful taking or detention of, or injury to, his property.

b All real and personal property belonging to bankrupt estates shall be appraised by three disinterested appraisers; they shall be appointed by, and report to, the court. Real and personal property shall, when practicable, be sold subject to the approval of the court; it shall not be sold otherwise than subject to the approval of the court for less than 75 per cent of its appraised value.

c The title to property of a bankrupt estate which has been sold, as herein provided, shall be conveyed to the purchaser by the trustee.

d Whenever a composition shall be set aside, or discharge revoked, the trustee shall, upon his appointment and qualification, be vested as herein provided with the title to all of the property of the bankrupt as of the date of the final decree setting aside the composition or revoking the discharge.

e The trustee may avoid any transfer by the bankrupt of his property which any creditor of such bankrupt might have avoided, and may recover the property so transferred, or its value, from the person to whom it was transferred, unless he was a bona fide holder for value prior to the date of the adjudication. Such property may be recovered or its value collected from whoever may have received it, except a bona fide holder for value.

f Upon the confirmation of a composition offered by a bankrupt, the title to his property shall thereupon revert in him.

THE TIME WHEN THIS ACT SHALL GO INTO EFFECT.

a This act shall go into full force and effect upon its passage: Provided, however, That no petition for voluntary bankruptcy shall be filed within one month of the passage thereof, and no petition for involuntary bankruptcy shall be filed within four months of the passage thereof.

b Proceedings commenced under State insolvency laws before the passage of this act shall not be affected by it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 16, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 15, 1898.

NAVY PAYMASTER.

Fred K. Perkins, a citizen of California, to be an assistant paymaster in the Navy (subject to examinations required by law), to fill a vacancy existing in that grade.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONIES.

John C. W. Rhode, of Chicago, Ill., to be receiver of public moneys at Nulato, Alaska, to fill an original vacancy created under provisions of section 12 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898 (Public—No. 95).

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

Boetious H. Sullivan, of Plankinton, S. Dak., to be register of the land office at Nulato, Alaska, to fill an original vacancy created under provisions of section 12 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898 (Public—No. 95).

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 15, 1898.

MARSHAL.

Thomas B. Reid, of Wisconsin, to be marshal of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

To be brigadier-general.

James H. Barkley, of Illinois.

To be paymaster.

Thaddeus P. Varney, of New Jersey.

To be captain.

Charles T. McIntire, of Indiana.

FIFTH UNITED STATES INFANTRY.

Capt. Frank D. Baldwin, to be inspector-general.

POSTMASTERS.

Lewis O. Cooper, to be postmaster at Middleport, in the county of Meigs and State of Ohio.

William Budge, to be postmaster at Grand Forks, in the county of Grand Forks and State of North Dakota.

C. T. Barksdale, to be postmaster at Danville, in the county of Pittsylvania and State of Virginia.

James T. Pickering, to be postmaster at Lancaster, in the county of Fairfield and State of Ohio.

John L. Clark, to be postmaster at Kenton, in the county of Hardin and State of Ohio.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 15, 1898.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by Mr. DALZELL as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1898.

I hereby name Mr. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, to act as Speaker until the adjournment.

T. B. REED, Speaker.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AMERICAN REGISTERS FOR STEAMERS SPECIALIST AND UNIONIST.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call up this morning, if the gentleman will allow it, a bill to grant American registers to a couple of vessels to be used as transports.

Mr. HITT. Will it lead to any debate?

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I will have to ask for the regular order. We have given this time all out.

Mr. PAYNE. It will take but a moment. I have a very urgent letter from the Secretary of War urging the passage of this bill.

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman withdraw it if it leads to any discussion?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly I will.

Mr. DINSMORE. Very well.

Mr. PAYNE. It is a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4763) to provide American registers for steamers Specialist and Unionist.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamers Specialist and Unionist to be registered as vessels of the United States, provided that they shall not engage in the coastwise trade of this Republic.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HAWAII.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I shall cast my vote against the annexation of Hawaii for various reasons.

I have always understood it to be one of the fundamental principles of the Democratic party that government should rest upon the consent of the governed; yet I think I am safe in saying that in Hawaii but 2,700 persons—out of a population of 100,000—have been consulted in regard to the annexation of that country to the United States. There are upward of 40,000 of native Hawaiians in these islands now, but they have never been given an opportunity to express their views in regard to this annexation question.

There has always been a question in my mind as to the justice and patriotism of those who dethroned the Queen in 1893, and the fact that Secretary Foster, in the treaty which he prepared in the closing days of the Harrison Administration, provided for the payment of $20,000 annually to the Queen during her life, as well as for the payment to the princes of $150,000 outright, if these women should in good faith submit to the authority of the Government of the United States and the local government of the islands, showed the personal rights of the Queen and the right of succession to the dynasty of which she was the head.

It seems to me nothing more nor less than the alliance of the United States Government with a band of men, American citizens, if you are pleased to term them such, who deliberately and willfully overthrew the legalized machinery of the Government in the Hawaiian Islands, dethroned its Queen, and appropriated the government property of all the people to their own use.

The American people were horrified a few years ago when the news of the attack of Jameson and his English mercenaries upon the Transvaal country was made known; yet we submit to the spectacle of so-called American citizens deliberately overthrowing and capturing this Hawaiian territory, and then ask that it be annexed to the United States. I listened very patiently yesterday and to-day for some substantial reasons why these islands should be annexed, but I must confess that I have yet to hear such a reason.

Some of the Republican members, notably those from my own State, have changed their minds radically about this problem the past four or five weeks.

I have been surprised to hear some of them say on the floor of this Chamber that the United States Government was to inaugurate a policy of colonial expansion—that the Philippine Islands were to be kept by this Government after peace had been declared, and that this country must at last take its place side by side with the nations of Europe and Asia in the aggrandizement of empire.

I very much mistake the opinion of the American people if this policy will meet with their approval.

The present struggle was dictated wholly through humane motives, and was never intended to be a contest for empire.

Our men are in the field and upon the sea ready to fight and to die if necessary for the success of American arms in their legitimate mission of driving the Spanish flag forever from American shores, Puerto Rico as well as Cuba; but I doubt very much, if the temper of the American people could be tested, if even any great number could be found who would assent to the policy now being advocated by some of using the Army and Navy for the addition of insular possessions to our country.

Let us suppose for a moment that Hawaii was in our possession when the present hostilities broke out. It must be admitted that we have found use for every vessel in our Navy in the prosecution of the struggle in and about Cuba, with the exception of those ships under Admiral Dewey at Manila.

Hawaii is at least 2,500 miles from our shores, with a coast line as extensive as that comprised in the New England States. It would require a squadron equally as large and powerful as Dewey's to give proper protection to that island, and we simply could not do it without exposing ourselves to extreme and hazardous danger on this side of the water.

Who are the people inhabiting these islands we are going to annex? Forty thousand of them are native Hawaiians, 25,000 Japanese, 21,000 Chinese, 15,000 Portuguese, 3,000 Americans, and about 4,000 British, Germans, and French combined.

Are we to have a Mongolian State in this Union, or are the Japanese and Chinese to be exported, thus bringing us into difficulties with each of these Governments?

Where is the consistence of the junior Senator from my own State and the Representatives of that Commonwealth on this floor who have strongly advocated this exclusion of honest and hard-working Irish, German, Jewish, and Italian immigrants from our shores because they can not read or write, yet they are willing that the heterogeneous mass enumerated above should become part and parcel of the citizenship of this country? What has become of their oft-repeated professions of loyalty to the policy of our fathers, who have defeated every proposition for the acquisition of insular possession?

This very same proposition of the acquisition of the Sandwich Islands was made to the peerless statesman from Massachusetts, Daniel Webster, when he was Secretary of State in the year 1852, and was declined by him.

An attempt was made to annex St. Thomas in President Johnson's Administration and Santo Domingo in President Grant's Administration, but both treaties failed in the Senate.

I think that the history of our country has shown the wisdom of our action in these cases.

We have not been bothered with the intestinal trouble that follows a policy of territorial expansion, but have been allowed to pursue the development of our own natural and tremendous resources, with the result that our country is the greatest and richest upon the face of God's earth.

What great object is to be accomplished by a departure from our former wise and conservative policy in this direction? Some say that we are to have an offensive and defensive alliance with Great Britain, and that when this is accomplished our combined navies will rule the world. God forbid that this Government ever should leave the record behind her that England has obtained in her acquisition of territory.

It is true that the sun never sets upon British possession, but it is also true that history does not record one instance of greater oppression enacted in the pursuit of territorial expansion than has been exercised by England upon the Irish, the Boers, the Maltese, the Hindoos, the Burmese, and the Chinese. She finds herself to-day beset by foreign foes in the East. Her wicked aggressions upon national rights and her continued assaults on weaker nations, resulting in the absorption of their territory, has left her without a friend or an ally among the nations of Europe. Who else can she look to for aid or comfort but the United States? What position should the American people take in this condition of affairs?

The two nations which England must clash with are Russia and France. The friendship of both these Governments, of Russia particularly, has always been extended to this country. England, on the other hand, has been our traditional enemy in every struggle since the Republic was instituted, and yet there are a great many people in this country to-day, if the opportunity presented itself, who would advocate an alliance with England against Russia.

I have had a very strong suspicion for some time that strong English influences here are at work in favor of the annexation of Hawaii. England realizes full well that we will not stop with Hawaii. She wishes us to hold the Philippines. She realizes full well that after we establish our flag over these islands that we will be brought right into the midst of the contest that is soon to take place when the partition of the Chinese Empire takes place. It is then that England will need an active and alert ally to stand out against the claims of Russia, Germany, France, and Japan, and her only opportunity rests with the entrance of the United States into that field. The whole matter is very clearly stated by Lord Brassey, one of Great Britain's colonial governors, who said in an interview a short time ago:

In the present anxious position of affairs we shall not relax our efforts to create such naval forces as will insure the safety of the Empire, but if in the process of time we can accomplish a closer union between ourselves and the United States, if we can establish a perpetual league of all English-speaking countries for settling their differences by arbitration, nay, more, for mutual defense if threatened by external foes, then we shall have changed the circumstances. Our latent resources would be too overwhelming to be challenged or contested. Let us cherish the hope that a consummation so happy may some day be reached by the sagacity of our statesmen and the growing wisdom and good will of our kindred people.

It can readily be seen that the friendship of England in our present struggle is not an honest one, but is dictated by selfishness and greed and an anxiety that we should come to her assistance in pulling her Chinese chestnuts out of the fire.

Apart from any interest England may have in this conflict and looking at the question purely from an American standpoint, I think the conclusion is irresistible that this annexation should not take place.

The possession of noncontiguous territories is bound to result in constant and repeated friction with other nations.

Great Britain's possessions in North America have occasioned all our troubles with England, except in the Venezuelan matter, for the past fifty years. The seal-fishery question is only now being settled, and there has been constant friction about our herring fisheries the past twenty years. Constant difficulties between both Governments are now taking place in the Klondike region and other parts of Alaska, while difficulties are repeatedly encountered between authorities in the State of Washington and British Columbia. I bring these matters to the attention of the House at this time to indicate how impossible it is for any nation that pursues a policy of absorption of noncontiguous territory to keep itself from getting into constant difficulties.

It has been said during the course of this debate that the vast majority of the people of this country favor the annexation of Hawaii. Inasmuch as the great proportion of our people are wage earners and the annexation of these islands would bring the 50,000 Japanese and Chinese into competition with our labor, I can not believe this statement to be true. The Japanese at home at the present time are threatening our industrial supremacy, and if we admit these islands as part of our domain, our ambitious and thrifty manufacturers, who as a general rule employ the cheapest labor they can obtain, will build and establish factories in Hawaii, with Japanese and Chinese help, and easily undersell in the market made by American labor.

Then, again, these large coolie colonies, under the management of the gigantic sugar and tobacco combinations, would produce those articles so cheaply as to close up all of our sugar industries, both beet and cane, and reduce tobacco culture to such a condition as to make it absolutely impossible to raise at a profit even though the lowest wage should be paid. I would like at this time to quote that eminent lawyer of international reputation who, when asked his opinion as to whether we should keep the Philippines or not, replied:

We started to accomplish one single, declared, definite object, a most noble one, based purely upon humanitarian grounds. Our sincerity in our philanthropic profession is the only possible excuse for war. To maintain good faith and our reputation with the rest of the world is worth a dozen Philippines and millions of coolie Chinamen and Malays.

[Applause.]

The policy of colonial expansion means a large increase in our standing Army, and I am strongly opposed to the development of our Army on European lines. It would mean the loss of that feeling of citizenship and entity which is the pride of every American, when half-breeds and Malays are made part of our nation. It would breed corruption and suspicion in the management of colonies in different parts of the world, and it would provoke antagonism and violent discussion in our legislative chambers as to the government of these possessions.

The country is confronted now with many and serious problems. Our banking system is notoriously inefficient, our merchant marine a disgrace to a sixth-rate nation, our postal system can be vastly improved, and the condition of our working people all over this country is serious enough to demand the best thought and attention of our wisest statesmen. The addition to the English navy estimates as necessary for the present year amount to $175,000,000, and if we are to vie with England, as some of our Representatives say we should, we must surely spend as much money as she does for the building up of a navy.

I do not wish to be understood as one of those who do not believe in an adequate naval force, because since I have been a member of Congress I have favored liberal appropriations for the building of our Navy, but I do think that our Government can secure itself against any possible danger with a great many less ships than Great Britain possesses unless we branch out as that Government has done. The annexation of Hawaii is the first step in a policy to admit colonies speaking a foreign tongue, governed by military satraps as against self-governing States. It will mean the neglect of our Constitution and people.

It will cause entangling alliances with other nations and the fear of war, thus continually disturbing our home business affairs. It will result in the abandonment of economy and simple government ordained by Washington and Jefferson and the utter annihilation of the principle of the Monroe doctrine.

It will bring the intelligent American laborer into direct competition with the Japanese and Chinese laborer, who, when he is absorbed as part of the Hawaiian Republic into the United States, will be entitled to the protection offered him by our laws. The climatic conditions of this country are such as to produce the highest intellectual, moral, and physical development, and it is absurd to suppose that the inhabitants of Hawaii, situated as it is in the tropical zone, can begin to keep pace with the magnificent civilization of this nation; rather must they always stifle our growth and impede our progress.

My colleague [Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts], in his remarks the other day emphasized the pleasure that he felt in voting for annexation because of the fact that the islands had been redeemed from savagery by the devotion of American missionaries. In thinking this matter over I have come to the conclusion that the native Hawaiian's idea of the Almighty and justice must be a little bit shaken when he sees these men, who pretend to be the exemplars of Christianity and honor, take possession of these islands by force, destroy the Government that has existed for years, and set up a sovereignty for themselves. Not only that, but when they also witness the spectacle of the sugar and tobacco (Christian?) barons import coolies, Japanese and Chinese, both, until they outnumber the native Hawaiians in order to fatten the dividends of these trusts by their cheap labor, their ideas of the all-seeing justice of the Almighty must be somewhat dimmed.

The great argument that has been advanced for the possession of these islands is their advantage in time of war. They are said to be the key to the Pacific Ocean. This same argument was used when the proposition to purchase St. Thomas, in President Johnson's time, and Santo Domingo, in President Grant's Administration. There are innumerable islands on our eastern coast much nearer us than Hawaii on our western coast, yet nobody has ever seriously thought our Atlantic coast was in any great danger from their nonpossession.

Why, Europe herself is nearer to us than the Hawaiian Islands, yet nobody suggests that we should annex Europe. There are conditions, everybody must admit, under which these islands would be a valuable possession; but the question to my mind is, Are these conditions such as to justify our departing from our traditional policy of noninterference with the political affairs of the rest of the world?

Will anyone say that the possession of the Philippine Islands were of advantage to Spain in this struggle, and is not a magnificent advantage for the United States in the present struggle that she has no insular possessions to protect thousands of miles away from her base of supplies? We are told that the islands are a military necessity from coal supply standpoint. Who can tell what a few years will develop in the line of naval architecture and advancement? Russia has just contracted for war ships that will sail 17,000 miles without recoaling.

What trouble will it be for vessels of that kind to carry coal enough to attack almost any point in the world and then be able to return to her home port without recoaling? With the tremendous advance in electrical science, who can tell but that battle ships may be built within a few years which can traverse the oceans for weeks, perhaps months, without being compelled to stop for supplies. With all these possibilities it is wise, is it a sound plan to embark in this policy of territorial aggrandizement. I think not, and I venture the opinion when this matter is brought to the attention of the people of this country that they will endorse the words of Washington when he said:

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient Government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantage of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

Supplementing this, Jefferson, in his inaugural address in 1801, laid down the following rule of action:

"Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations—entangling alliances with none."

[Loud and long-continued applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the importance of the question now under consideration. Perhaps none of more gravity has ever been presented to the consideration of the American Congress in many years. I am an advocate of the annexation of the Republic of Hawaii—of the Newlands resolutions, which contemplate the indorsement of the treaty recommended to the Senate by President McKinley. I dislike very much to disagree with any portion of my party associates, but after patient and careful consideration I am satisfied they are in error who oppose this increase of territory, recommended by the best minds of America, and we are willing to trust to time to vindicate the wisdom of our action.

Never, sir, has there been one foot of territory added to the thirteen little colonies that first formed this Government along the Atlantic seaboard, up to this hour, when our territory is more than 3,000,000 square miles, that there was not violent opposition to the annexation. The apostle of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson, who has been quoted so much in this discussion, said himself when he gave his adherence to the purchase of the Louisiana territory from Napoleon, that there was no constitutional right for it, but that its advocates must appeal to the American people for an indorsement of the proposition.

Think of it, sir, in 1803, we were about 5,000,000 people. We had just emerged from a fearful struggle. Our garments were torn and bloody. Scarcely knowing whether we had a national existence, and only by the aid of a foreign power could we have achieved our independence. The mouth of the Mississippi was owned by foreign powers, and its commerce would be largely controlled by them. The first intention was to purchase what was known as the Island of New Orleans, where the city is now situated, as a resting place for the craft navigating that stream, which would of necessity be rapidly augmented.

We were represented at the court of France by a man who had administered the oath of office to George Washington as the first President of the United States, Mr. Livingston. He was instructed to negotiate for the Island of New Orleans at a price not exceeding $2,000,000. The proposition was laid before the French minister, Marbois, who, under the direction of Napoleon, fearing the English might get it by conquest, said he would not only sell us the island, but all the extensive territory they possessed on the continent. Eighty million dollars was the price asked.

Mr. Monroe, afterwards President of the United States, was sent over to aid Mr. Livingston in arranging the terms, which negotiation laid in his mind the doctrine which will ever bear his name, and the price was fixed at $15,000,000. There were many representative men in 1803, as there are in 1898, who declaimed against this Louisiana purchase—a wise and patriotic move. Mr. Livingston became alarmed, receiving information of the opposition to this new acquisition, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean. Mr. Livingston said to his countrymen, "If we have more than we need, we can dispose of a part." But not one foot has ever been sold. That was Democratic doctrine then, as it is now, and the Democratic orators of to-day love to proclaim on the stump that our broad domain is to the credit of the party that followed Thomas Jefferson.

When the State of Louisiana came into the Union, there was found in the State of Massachusetts a distinguished man by the name of Josiah Quincy, who made a speech very much like those I have heard on the floor during this discussion, in which he said that the country was now going to pieces, that we were entering upon an imperial course, and that it was ruin to the country. Listen how much this sounds like my friend CLARK's speech, or that of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DENSMORE].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will not attribute to me borrowing Josiah Quincy's ideas, for I take no stock in them.

Mr. BERRY. But they both violate the idea of Democracy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Nothing of the sort. Josiah Quincy was a secessionist, and always was, and I never was.

Mr. BERRY. But I will show you better Democratic authority than you ever had in Missouri that the Democratic party has always been for the annexation of territory to the United States, and even the man that the Republican party sought to impeach, and a better Democrat never lived on this continent than Andrew Johnson, under whose auspices the Territory of Alaska was added to this country, and not contiguous territory, as some gentlemen have been arguing here.

Now, what did Josiah Quincy say when Louisiana was going to be admitted as a State? I would like to call my distinguished friend's attention, the gentleman from Louisiana, to this. Josiah Quincy says:

Under the sanction of this rule of conduct I am compelled to declare it as my deliberate opinion that if this bill passes the bonds of this Union are virtually dissolved; that the States which compose it are free from their moral obligations, and that as it will be the right of all, so it will be the duty of some, to prepare definitely for a separation—amicably if they can, violently if they must.

Again:

If this bill pass, it is my deliberate opinion that it is virtually a dissolution of this Union; that it will free the States from their moral obligations, and as it will be the right of all, so it will be the duty of some, definitely to prepare for a separation—amicably if they must.

Now, how much that sounds like speeches made upon this floor in this discussion that I have listened to on this side—"that we are going on an imperial course" and "we are changing the principles of the Government." Why, gentlemen, we have been wooing the little Republic of Hawaii for more than half a century. We have been wooing it under Democratic Administration, under Republican Administration, under every Administration from 1843, when Tyler was at the head of this Government, to the present time. Every Democrat except Grover Cleveland—you can not find a single announcement up to this hour coming from the Democratic party that has not been in favor of the annexation of Hawaii. Mr. Buchanan—was he a Democrat? Mr. Legaré—was he a Democrat? Mr. Bayard—was he a Democrat?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No.

Mr. BERRY. Why, you supported him and he was elected and was the mouthpiece of the Democratic party until he became associated with Grover Cleveland. Was Pierce a Democrat? Was Buchanan, his Secretary of State (afterwards himself a Democratic President, at the head of the Government when the civil war came upon us)—was he a Democrat? All these men have alike expressed their opinion that ultimately the Hawaiian Islands would become a part of the United States. Mr. Bayard said that whenever the apple was ripe it would naturally fall into the lap of the United States. And so it is coming now.

Mr. BAIRD. If the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands is Democratic policy and has always been such, why is it that to-day it is indorsed by the Republican Administration and will receive the almost unanimous vote of the Republicans in this House?

Mr. BERRY. Well, I will tell you. The Hawaiian Islands occupy a peculiar position; they are a sort of derelict out in the North Pacific, waving a flag of distress. Naturally as those islands became known they became an object worthy of attention and consideration from this country. In the first place, about 1820, when the Americans sent missionaries there for the purpose of civilizing the natives, they found them in an almost barbarous condition and set to work to bring about a condition of civilization. Those missionaries took the native language, which was then without form, and gave it form—printed it in grammars and other books; and it has been taught for years upon the islands under the influence and inspiration of the American missionaries.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. BERRY. Not a particle. Let me say that if anybody wants to ask me any questions during the delivery of this speech I am ready to answer them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true historically and absolutely that the action of William L. Marcy, Franklin Pierce, James Buchanan, and that whole crowd of Democrats prior to 1861 in advocating this annexation policy was part and parcel of the African slavery propaganda of which the Ostend manifesto was another manifestation? Is not that true?

Mr. BERRY. I will answer the gentleman's question. All along through the history of the admission of States to this Union, up to and including the time of the civil war, the question of slavery had a good deal to do with whether men in political life were for or against the admission. The men from the cotton States were in favor of the annexation of such territory as would give to them representation in favor of the Democracy; and the people of the North, as my distinguished friend [Mr. GROW] who is now looking at me knows full well, whenever there arose an occasion when territory proposed to be admitted was likely to be represented by old Whigs or Republicans on this floor, they were advocates of such annexation. But that question has gone by. The institution of slavery went down with the war. That question no longer enters into this proposition at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But if that is true, ought not the arguments which those men used to go down with the question itself?

Mr. BERRY. That is a question which the gentleman can settle for himself. If he does not like these arguments, he need not adopt them. The arguments I like I propose to adopt in the course of this speech, showing that the Democracy of this country has stood for annexation at all times.

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROW. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, I would like, before he leaves this historical recital, to call his attention to a fact which of course he knows, but has inadvertently passed over.

Mr. BERRY. What is that?

Mr. GROW. When the Louisiana purchase was under consideration, Mr. Livingston, representing this country, proposed only in the first instance to purchase from France all her territory east of the Mississippi River, but the French insisted that we should take it all.

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir; and it grew out of the idea that Napoleon Bonaparte had found he could not hold the territory, and rather than let it go into the hands of England he gave it to the American people for a very small consideration; and he said when he did so that he would raise up a power on this continent that would threaten the position of England. And such has been the effect. To-day England extends her hand in anxiety to join her Anglo-Saxon kin on this side of the water for the control of the policy of the world.

Not only that. Do we not all recollect the circumstances connected with the annexation of Texas? And, by the bye, I believe there is not a Texas man on this floor who now favors annexation. Yet we wooed her for a while, and Texas wooed us for admission to the Union; and we admitted her. Out of that grew the Mexican war, which resulted in our obtaining the magnificent territory leading out to the Pacific. From Kentucky and all over the South we unsheathed our swords to defend the honor of the American flag in Mexico, and we followed that flag successfully until we saw it wave over the halls of the Montezumas, and we shall see it waving over Morro Castle and wherever else the American people feel disposed to plant it. It shall kiss the breezes of the Tropics as it is sure to wave over the Hawaiian Islands.

What was the effect upon those who opposed annexation? Tom Corwin, of Ohio, was the opponent of the war with Mexico. He was a great man, a great lawyer. He said he trusted that whenever Americans crossed the Rio Grande they would be welcomed with bloody hands to hospitable graves. And he was welcomed to a political grave, for he could never hold up his political head after making that declaration.

Mr. GROW. Will it interrupt the gentleman—

Mr. BERRY. Not a particle, sir. I am making a random sort of a speech upon a subject that I think I understand.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Corwin's declaration was that if he was a Mexican, as he was an American, he would welcome our soldiers with bloody hands to a hospitable grave.

Mr. BERRY. That is the same idea. I do not pretend to give the exact phraseology. I recollect the circumstances. So, sir, if we had been contentious then, as we ought to have been, instead of Vancouver and the country from Vancouver to Sitka being under the control of the English Government the Louisiana purchase justly entitled us to that territory, in order that we might be connected with the Alaskan country in the far North, and it would not now be declared not to be contiguous territory. We all remember that controversy in our history, and we recollect the ride of Dr. Whitman, which saved Oregon to us. Why, there was a time when even men like our old friend Benton, the apostle of Democracy, said that it would never do to extend this country much beyond the Mississippi River, that the Rocky Mountains were the natural boundary, and that it would never do to go beyond the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that that is a historical mistake?

Mr. BERRY. Let us see whether it is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Tom Benton always clamored for that line up to 54° 40'.

Mr. BERRY. Later in life he did.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And he drew the most remarkable picture of the teeming population of the Oregon Valley that was ever drawn since the world began.

Mr. BERRY. That was later in life. Why, my friend, the Democrats and Whigs up to that time announced that the whole country running from Mexico north to the British possessions, west of the Mississippi River, was a barren desert, and you as a boy knew it on the map as the Staked Plain that nobody could travel across except with camels or something of that kind. Now the locomotive shrieks in wild triumph to the Pacific through the common territory of the United States, and that very land that was described as a desert is to-day the granary of the world.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That was what Mr. Webster said, as representing the New England idea.

Mr. BERRY. Let us see what Mr. Webster said. Mr. Webster did not want the State of Texas in the Union. Let us read what Webster says about it. I do not like to have Democratic principles laid down to me that controvert every position that the fathers of the party have ever taken, and I do not believe that the Democracy of America, when the matter is brought to their attention, will go wrong upon this. I believe nine out of ten of the Democrats of America are for the annexation of Hawaii, and therefore I do not propose to be controlled by a Democratic caucus each of whose members only represents the same number of people upon this floor that I do. But when my party acts, I follow its platform.

Mr. BAIRD. I should like to suggest to the gentleman that there was no attempt in the Democratic caucus to bind its individual members upon this matter.

Mr. BERRY. I do not know whether there was an attempt or not. It certainly did not succeed.

Mr. BAIRD. Was it not so stated in the caucus, that there was no desire to bind individual members?

Mr. BERRY. I think it was. I saw it so stated in the newspapers. I did not remain during the entire caucus. And I am not ashamed to go for a thing because a Republican now and then is for it, if I believe it is right. Once in a while the Republican party does get right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very seldom.

Mr. BERRY. I heard the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] make an argument on this side, saying that the proposed annexation would have the effect of destroying the principle of the high protective tariff, which I think has been one of the curses of this Government, and I should be very glad if it had that result. It can not come too soon.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I hope it will.

Mr. BERRY. I will tell you what it will do. And I intend to discuss this before I complete this argument. It will show to the world that property like the Hawaiian Islands, lying close to our shores, 2,000 miles closer than to any other great body of land, comes within the Monroe doctrine, and belongs to the United States whenever she can get it by fair means. I would not advocate the sending of an army from the United States to take Hawaii from any people who were in possession of it against their will, but here comes a government that for three years has maintained itself, with representatives at nearly every court of the great nations of the world, and says to us, "We want to give you the territory that we own and make it a part of the United States, because we believe it will be useful to you and because we believe it will be better for us, fearing that some other power will disturb us." Now, I want to give these gentlemen from Texas a little piece of history. Mr. Webster arose and addressed the Senate in the session of 1845-46 upon the resolution for the admission of Texas. He said:

I am quite aware, Mr. President, that this resolution will pass this House. It has passed the other House of Congress by a large majority.

We are doing now just what they did then. A little complication on money matters and one thing and another have divided up the Senate, and the Republicans do not know exactly how many votes they have, and the Democrats do not know exactly where they stand. It takes two-thirds of the Senate to ratify a treaty, and the President has not been able to secure an indorsement by the Senate, and so he comes now, as they came in the case of the admission of Texas, to ask that both bodies representing the American people act upon this subject, as was done in that case. Continuing, Mr. Webster said:

There are members of this body, sir, who opposed the measures which came before Congress at its last session for the annexation of Texas who, nevertheless, will very probably feel themselves now, in consequence of the resolutions of last session, and in consequence of the proceedings of Texas upon those resolutions, bound to vote for her admission to the Union.

In the first place, I have, on the deepest reflection, long ago come to the conclusion that it was of very dangerous tendency and doubtful consequences to enlarge the boundaries of this Government or the Territories over which our laws are now established.

There was the distinguished Mr. Webster, who is succeeded on this floor by my friend Mr. FITZGERALD, and I have no doubt that he has read that speech and probably it has influenced him. Yet, in spite of Mr. Webster's opposition, the State of Texas is to-day perhaps one of the greatest empires in the world in its wealth of soil, in the character of its population, in its location, and in its possibilities for the future. And yet Mr. Webster said we ought never to admit Texas, that the country was getting so large that we should go to pieces and the country would dissolve.

Gentlemen refer us to the history of the past. They dwell with pleasure upon the history of Rome and of the Spanish Empire. Why, gentlemen, they were wholly different from this Government. Wherever we raise the flag of the United States we propose to give a better condition to the people, as we always have wherever we have extended our territory given a better condition to the people than they had before. We do not propose to take Hawaii with the intention to draw from its resources money to be spent here at the Capitol in Washington, and to oppress them as Spain has oppressed Cuba and Puerto Rico and the Philippines, but we propose to give them the benefit of the great and glorious Government under which we live, to give them liberty, which is the purpose of this Government upon this earth, if it has any great distinctive purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, one question more, and then I will quit you.

Mr. BERRY. All right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. While Webster opposed annexation as long as he opposed slavery, is it not true that as soon as he came to the conclusion that he wanted the Southern slaveholders to give him a Presidential nomination, he flopped on the slave question on the 7th day of March, 1850, and then, in accordance with the behest of the slave propaganda, he advocated the annexation of the Sandwich Islands?

Mr. BERRY. It would be very difficult for me to tell what passes through the mind of every great statesman who has his eye fixed upon the White House or what has passed through the minds of such men in the past. Many things were said about Henry Clay. I do not propose to comment upon the dead. I do not know whether Webster had that purpose in view or not. In 1825, when an effort was being made in Congress to secure against the claims of Great Britain the territory now constituting the States of Idaho, Oregon, and Washington, Mr. Dickerson, of New Jersey, who represented that State in the Senate, opposed that proposition and pronounced it absurd. He said:

A member of Congress, traveling from his home to Washington and return, would cover a distance of 9,200 miles; at the rate of 30 miles per day, and allowing him forty-four days for Sundays, three hundred and fifty days would be consumed, and the member would have fourteen days in Washington before he started home; it would be quicker to come around Cape Horn, or by Bering Straits, Baffin Bay and Davis Strait, to the Atlantic, and so to Washington. True, the passage is not yet discovered, except upon our maps, but it will be as soon as Oregon is made a State.

Now, that sounds very much like the argument of my friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in talking about Representatives from distant islands upon this floor—a Representative with gleaming teeth and savage eyes, who, he said, would look upon the Speaker as being good to eat, and he got a little mixed, because Mr. REED was not in the chair. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was trying to alarm the American people, for fear that, because they take a small piece of territory in the Pacific, somebody from the Fiji Islands will be a Representative here.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you think it would really alarm the American people very much if the cannibals did get Mr. REED? [Laughter.]

Mr. BERRY. Well, that is a question you and Mr. REED can settle for yourselves. You and Mr. REED being together upon this proposition, I suppose you can determine that question better than I can. [Laughter.]

All along the line, it does not make any difference, where you have added territory to this country there has been some loud-mouthed people who said it would not do. They said on the eastern seaboard of Massachusetts that if we were to open territory anywhere beyond the Mississippi, the people of Massachusetts and New Hampshire would move out there and hunt bear with the people in that country, and the fellows who had been used to fishing on the eastern seaboard and the hunters could not get along together, and it would ultimately result in a division of the country. All of these arguments have been made; some of them so absurd that people will hardly recognize them now.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I would like to ask my colleague a question, if he will yield to me.

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is it not true that the public press of this country that have been advocating the annexation of Hawaii have also demanded the annexation of the Philippine Islands and Puerto Rico and increasing the Army of the United States to 100,000 and doubling the Navy? Is not that true?

Mr. BERRY. Gentlemen, when I consider a resolution before this body, I do not consider it with a view that something else will come on hereafter that will complicate the matter. I am considering the resolution introduced by Mr. NEWLANDS for the purpose of accepting the Hawaiian Islands as part of the American Government. The Philippine Islands are not yet ours. We will settle that question when it is presented.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me one further question?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is it not the duty of every legislator not only to consider the matter then before the body, but also to take into consideration the resulting effect?

Mr. BERRY. Oh, yes; what the gentleman says, I suppose, is true; but this country of 75,000,000 people has got past that point of having to be scared like a child to go to sleep because it is informed that the bogey man is behind the door. [Laughter.] Why, sir, these gentlemen pretend to talk about Mr. Marcy. Mr. Marcy was one of the great men in the Democratic party, who wrote its platforms and formulated its policy. He had carried on the correspondence for annexation along in the fifties, to admit the Hawaiian Islands into the United States, and a treaty had been agreed upon, which only failed of consummation because the King died when he was about to sign it. And to show how solicitous other countries were to obtain the islands at that time, when the King died of measles, Great Britain put the remains on board a ship and carried them to his home. Great Britain has had possession of the islands once, France twice, and Russia once.

Mr. BODINE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. BODINE. Is it true that a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate voted for the annexation of Hawaii?

Mr. BERRY. A Democratic House and a Democratic Senate? No, sir. It was the State Department, where the treaty-making power belongs under the Constitution. They did not know that it would have the approval of their party.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If Mr. Marcy and such men believed that that was Democratic doctrine, why did they not put it in the platforms? You say Marcy was a man who wrote the platforms of his party.

Mr. BERRY. I do not know why they did not do it, unless they were afraid it might lead to some trouble and they did not want to talk about the acquisition. They left it until an authorized Government offered it as a gift.

Mr. SULZER. I suppose, no doubt, they did not want to make it a party question.

Mr. BERRY. No; they were not afraid to. About that time the Democratic party was well ensconced in power.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It did not stay ensconced in power very long after that transaction.

Mr. BERRY. Here is President Tyler; he was in favor of annexation of Hawaii. Buchanan did the same. Was he a Democrat?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He had softening of the brain. [Laughter.]

Mr. BERRY. Well, I suppose every man who is for annexation has softening of the brain. These are very distinguished gentlemen who advocated annexation, and do you propose to so characterize everybody who is opposed to it? I do not pretend to be a very wise man, but I have read the history of my country and of my party, and I say right here that the Democrats upon this floor will do a great wrong to their party whenever they plant themselves against the annexation of Hawaii.

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him before he leaves reference to Mr. Marcy?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROW. It is a well-known fact to those familiar with the inside politics at the time the Missouri Compromise was before Congress that Marcy was opposed to it because it was an extension of slavery.

Mr. BERRY. Yes. Now, Grant was not a Democrat, but he came pretty near it. We thought of nominating him for President, but Republicans got at him first. Harrison was for it, McKinley is for it, Admiral Dupont, General Schofield, Mahan, Secretary of State Webster, Marcy, Buchanan, Bayard, Sherman, Day—all for it. It seems to have been a universal sentiment up to this time, and now they come, because they are following Grover Cleveland—oh, it is a beautiful picture I have of my friend CLARK of Missouri, who always denounced him, now holding him up as the only example he had to follow—he and the distinguished gentleman, Mr. BLAND, from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is the only thing I regret—where I am. [Laughter.]

Mr. BERRY. Well, get down on your knees and pray for forgiveness. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZIELL). The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I only want two or three minutes more, and then I will close. Coming down to the question of Hawaii, ever since 1820, when the little colony of American missionaries went to the island for the purpose of civilizing the people, down to the present moment, the tendency of that little bunch of islands has been toward the United States. When King Kalakaua died after four Kamehamehas had been on the throne—the first Kamehameha was the man that gave the country its freedom and authorized the holding of private estates, destroying the feudal system that had existed on the island before 1840—the country went along smoothly until Kalakaua came on the throne,

The debt of the country was nearly all made after King Kalakaua ascended the throne, and he attempted to oppress the people. In the meantime there had gone to the island a large number of Americans, so that to-day they own three-quarters of all the property of the Hawaiian Islands. After his death—and he died at San Francisco—the United States Government in its regard for that little power that had been standing there begging so long to be a part of this country, ordered the U. S. S. Charleston to carry his remains back to Honolulu for interment.

Mrs. Dominis was placed on the throne, and in 1893 she proposed to overturn the whole republican system as it existed on that island and had been growing up for fifty years and establish again an absolute monarchy with herself at the head and everything at her disposal without a legislative branch of government. The American people owning three-quarters of the property of the island said, "This shall not be done," and they undertook to stop it. The U. S. S. Boston was in port, and finding that our American people's property was in danger, she moved up to the wharf and put her marines into the streets and without molesting anybody went to a hall and said, "We shall see that the property of the American people is not injured."

Well, Mrs. Dominis went off the throne by compulsion. The Republic was announced; a legislative body was elected very similar to the Constitution of our own States. Under a constitution the Republic of Hawaii, after three years of successful administration, a country able to pay its expenses, that has in the last year collected $676,000 of revenue and paid $70,000 of its debt, comes to the United States and says:

Assume the little public debt that stands over us of $3,900,000, and we will turn over to you $9,000,000 worth of public property if you will take us under the folds of your flag.

Is there anything wrong in that? What nation on the face of the earth has a right to come and object that the United States shall accept property tendered to her gratuitously and which the best minds of her country say is indispensable for the defense of her Pacific seaports?

My friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was talking about the Hawaiian Islands of the olden time, before 1848. There was no such necessity arising on the Pacific Ocean at that time, for we had not reached the Pacific Ocean by California. We then had no Pacific coast communication with Honolulu; but now the trade between San Francisco and Honolulu amounts to $24,000,000 a year.

Some gentlemen say it is going to interfere with the sugar trust. Why, gentlemen, the sugar trust is against annexation, and I will tell you why. Because the Hawaiian planter sells his sugar to the trust at $2.50 a ton less than New York or London prices. If they do not sell it to the sugar trust, they will have to carry it around the Horn and take it to England, with all the insurance and loss of time, and so they are obliged to discount this $2.50 on every ton of sugar made, out of which the trust makes about five hundred thousand a year, with an addition of about $3,000,000 for refining.

Mr. BALL. Would not the case be the same if those islands were a part of the United States?

Mr. BERRY. Of course not. The high grades of sugar—refined sugar—coming from Honolulu to the United States pay a duty. Every particle of sugar that grades above 97 per cent comes in with a duty. It is shipped directly to the United States. I have seen it rolled out from the refinery; it is almost as white as refined sugar, and of a most delightful flavor. That is the reason the sugar trust is against annexation, because if annexation can be defeated it is $3,000,000 a year in their pockets. Another reason is that the younger Spreckels owns 40,000 acres of the best land of the Hawaiian Islands—a magnificent plantation—and it is cultivated by contract labor brought from China and Japan. Spreckels knows that whenever the American flag goes up over Hawaii the laws of the United States apply to it, and that contract labor must come to an end. That is one reason for opposition to annexation; it is very easily explained; it does not take very many words.

I listened with attention yesterday to a discussion of this question by my distinguished friend from Georgia. Listening to his argument, as well as that of my friend from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], one would suppose that the people of Hawaii are a lot of heathens. I want to say that education is more universal in the Hawaiian Islands than it is in the State of Georgia. There is not a child reared on those islands 10 years of age who can not read and write. I question whether a single cotton State can boast of the same thing. Fourteen dollars a head is set apart by the Hawaiian Islands for the education of children. The country is dotted over with schoolhouses. The city of Honolulu has excellent kindergartens and primary schools, and an elegant college, with beautiful grounds embracing 15 acres, an edifice built of stone, which would be a credit to any State of this Union. The people there are honest. You can sleep in Honolulu with your doors wide open without apprehension of trouble. They are not the savages whichever of our friends here would have us believe. If brought here for the purpose of representing that country, they would not scare our Speaker, as my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] seems to imagine.

I want to say to my distinguished friend from the State of Kentucky that in Honolulu and in the whole of the Hawaiian Islands education is more thorough and more money is spent per capita for the education of the children than in the State of Kentucky.

As to the military necessity of these islands, whose opinion are we to take? Are we going to take that of some of these young gentlemen who never heard a gun fire in real war?

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman will allow me to say that the Chinese contract laborers of that country constitute a very large majority of the people.

Mr. BERRY. I want to say to the gentleman that the Chinamen and the Japanese are not naturalized citizens of that country, and under its constitution can not be; and when the flag of our country goes over Hawaii no Chinaman and no Japanese of that country can come to the United States by virtue of his being a resident of Hawaii.

Mr. CLARDY. If those islands are annexed to the United States, do not those people become citizens?

Mr. BERRY. No; they can not become citizens under the laws of the United States, and the Hawaiian treaty prohibits it, which the Newlands resolution purposes to approve.

Mr. CLARDY. Then the fourteenth amendment does not mean anything.

Mr. BERRY. The Chinaman, when he gets together a few hundred dollars, will go back to die in the happy Land of the Sun from which he came. There are not so many of them there as there are to-day in the city of San Francisco.

On this question of military necessity I am glad to see that map displayed there, because I think it is the best argument that can be made on this floor. Why, sir, my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] has become a great navigator. In spite of the fact that there are hundreds of men, embracing some of the brightest minds of this country, devoting themselves to the exploration of the trackless ocean, and in spite of the fact that such men have been endeavoring for hundreds of years to find out the best, the most expeditious, the safest lines for ocean travel, we have discovered an Arkansas Congressman who, ahead of all these navigators, has found a new route better than any previous one from America westward to Asia.

Mr. DINSMORE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he controverts or denies any statement of fact which I made with reference to that?

Mr. BERRY. The only thing I complain of in the gentleman's remarks is that there was sometimes, as the lawyers say, a supposition.

Mr. DINSMORE. The gentleman does well to express himself in a foreign language.

Mr. BERRY. Well, I will talk in Kanaka, if it will suit the gentleman better.

We have heard about the immoral forms of amusement practiced in Honolulu. Why, sir, I was one of the "visiting statesmen" of whom the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] talked. I saw the hula-hula dance in the city of Honolulu; and I have no hesitation in saying that I can go to Kernan's Theater in the city of Washington and see a much more indecent performance than the hula-hula dance in Honolulu.

A MEMBER. How do you know?

Mr. BERRY. Because I have been there, and have seen a woman plant herself on a trapeze and undress herself, garment by garment, while Congressmen sitting about were getting very nervous with apprehension. [Laughter.]

Now, another great bugaboo which I want to answer is the statement in regard to leprosy. Why, gentlemen, you admit into this country all the Swedes who want to come here, and they make some of our best citizens. They are workers in iron, good mechanics, etc. You admit them freely, yet there is more leprosy in Sweden than in Hawaii. The leprosy will be the same distance from us after annexation that it is now, and such subjects are excluded under our laws.

It has been stated here (and the statement shows how little some gentlemen know about this matter) that an island has been devoted to the treatment of leprosy. What is the fact? They have simply cut off a little tongue of land, about 5,000 acres, with mountains just behind it and a wall running down each side, making it like a penitentiary, with the broad Pacific Ocean around it. And there the leprosy patients are sequestered. They are fed by the Government, they are attended by good physicians, and there is good moral care for them in every particular. And it is gradually dying out. Why, when Captain Cook discovered those islands there were supposed to be 300,000 natives on them. And yet in the last few years they have dwindled down at the rate of 1 or 2 per cent a year. The race is gradually becoming extinct.

Now, what do you people want? You say there ought to be a vote. Why, gentlemen, there is not a Kanaka that I talked with on the island who had anything but a sentiment about this old monarchy. They thought or seemed to think that if Queen Liliuokalani could be put upon the throne again they would all have a happy-go-lucky time, as they had during her reign. What has the Republic of Hawaii done for this queen? They agreed to pay her $10,000 a year as long as she remained quiet, and they did pay it to her for three or four months; but when she started in to overthrow the Government they said, "Not another dollar goes from our treasury to pay a woman who wants to overturn a republican form of government." But they have been paying Kaulani, who is the heir apparent to the throne, $2,500 a year from the treasury of the Republic, and a few weeks ago they increased it to $3,000 in a spirit of magnanimity.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Have we got to do that if we take the island?

Mr. BERRY. No; I do not think we have got to do it, but I think it would be a magnanimous thing to do.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Are they going to steal all these people's property and give them nothing in return?

Mr. BERRY. We will give them the blessings of American Government in return. There is not an acre of land in Kentucky that will produce one-half what the land in those islands will produce. They have marvelous wealth of soil. I have seen 14 tons of sugar produced from 1 acre of land in the Hawaiian Islands, and that sugar was worth $60 a ton. You can not equal such a product as that on the land in Kentucky or any other State. Standing there, as it does, upon the line of the Tropics, bathing one foot in the waters of the Tropics and the other in the waters of the Temperate Zone, it is the most beautiful and lovable spot upon which I have ever seen the sun shine.

A MEMBER. Does it beat the blue grass of Kentucky?

Mr. BERRY. It beats everything that I have ever seen. You may stand at the base of the mountain with every variety of tropical verdure about you and look up to the peaks crowned with perpetual snow. You can have any climate you please without going more than 4 or 5 miles. Now, I have a document here containing some information which I have obtained from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and I should like to call the attention of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] to it, but I understand that some opponents of this treaty say that all the Departments here are on the side of this scheme, as though every man connected with the Government was trying to do a wrong, and that nothing can be believed that comes from any Department.

Mr. DINSMORE. You do not mean that I said that, do you?

Mr. BERRY. No; but I have heard it talked around here that the Army and Navy people want to build up a great imperial government like Rome.

Mr. DINSMORE. The gentleman mentioned my name. Did he ever hear me make any such statement?

Mr. BERRY. No, I did not; but I want to talk to you now about your new route over to the Asiatic coast.

Mr. DINSMORE. I wish you would.

Mr. BERRY. I want to test you upon the question of seamanship. Speaking of the Aleutian Islands, the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, in this communication to me, says:

We know little more than the mere fact of their existence, for they had not been studied and charted; neither do any accurate surveys of those islands exist. The Hawaiian Islands are a midway station between California and the Australian continent, which is peopled by an English-speaking race. They are not far distant from the Marshall Islands and other groups of islands which are controlled by other than English-speaking nations. They are already the center of commercial enterprise. It must not be forgotten that between us and the vast trade of China lie Japan and Formosa, and until recently the Philippine Islands formed a continuation of these barriers. A good sailing route from Hawaii to China exists at all seasons of the year along the parallel on which Hawaii is situated.

Up in the region of which the gentleman from Arkansas speaks, in the extension of the Aleutian Islands toward the Asiatic shore, there are heavy currents. There is the great ocean tide that sweeps from Japan toward the Bering Sea, which, striking the lower temperature of that region, makes it so densely foggy that navigation in that country is not at all safe. Consequently it is very rarely used. That accounts for the milk in the cocoanut. Yet the gentleman brings in here a sort of triangle to demonstrate that to go from San Francisco up to the Aleutian Islands and down toward the Asiatic coast would be better than any other route. I think he had better communicate that to the department in the Treasury which has charge of such matters of navigation. It might become very useful to the Government and to our seafaring interests.

The guns that opened in Manila Bay the other day meant something to this country. Suppose that we had been fighting a stronger power than Spain and that our vessels had been defeated in that fight and been compelled to return to the United States for protection or repairs. How gladly would they have welcomed the little Hawaiian Islands, with the flag of the United States above them, as a harbor to which they could go in their distress.

And it is not improbable that such a contingency may arise before the conclusion of existing hostilities. I have great respect for our naturalized Germans. They are good citizens and soldiers and have contributed much to the glory of American arms. I would not question their loyalty for a moment.

Germany is assembling a large fleet about the Philippines. Suggestions are being made that she might protest against our actions in that quarter, and as we have our fighting clothes on, I do not know that there will be any more auspicious time to settle with Bill Hohenzollern than just now. We have 158 ships in commission; and if she feels disposed to interfere with the legitimate rights of Uncle Sam, let her come on—75,000,000 free men are ready to meet him. [Applause.] I saw in the paper this morning a picture of the Philippine Islands with Uncle Sam's hat hanging on the corner of a sign, and down below the Kaiser Wilhelm looking toward it, while Uncle Sam was there with a box of goods that he was going to sell to the natives to increase the commerce of this country. I would commend it to my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] simply as an illustration of what may happen within the next few years.

Mr. DINSMORE. I have thought for some time that my friend was getting his political convictions from the cartoons in the newspapers.

Mr. BERRY. Well, you will find before I get through that I have some better basis than that if you will listen with attention.

Now, I want to say that when we look at the map and see the journey of 13,000 miles that the Oregon made and remember that the dispatches were announcing every day that perhaps the enemy would meet her and destroy her, the necessity for the Nicaragua Canal becomes plainly apparent. It must be built; it will be built. The intelligence of the American people will build that canal. With the island of Cuba lying in the mouth of the Gulf of Mexico, with the Windward Passage one side, the island of Puerto Rico lying a little farther down, with the Mona Passage lying upon one side, and another passage upon the other side, those islands become indispensable, either as a part of our country or in the hands of a people who are friendly to the future of this country.

With the Nicaragua Canal constructed, the Hawaiian Islands under our flag, lying directly in the track of commerce with Asia, whether from our country or Europe, a commerce the magnitude of which can scarcely be estimated will be ours under liberal maritime laws, pouring untold wealth into our coffers, making our people rich and prosperous.

This being true, let us construct the Nicaragua Canal and annex the Hawaiian Republic freely offered us as a resting place in the Pacific for military and commercial considerations. These purposes accomplished, the future of this country is bright almost beyond conception. [Applause.]

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL) laid before the House the credentials of Hon. William S. Greene, member-elect from the Thirteenth district of Massachusetts.

The credentials were read.

Mr. Greene appeared at the bar of the House, accompanied by Mr. LOVERING, and the Speaker pro tempore administered the oath of office.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 10691) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10683. An act making appropriations to pay the Bering Sea awards.

HAWAII.

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SPALDING].

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I had allotted to me by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs fifteen minutes, which I surrendered to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY]. Inasmuch as he was making a speech in opposition to the caucus of the Democratic party, I thought his remarks of more value than anything that I could say upon this subject. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I want to correct that statement. My colleague [Mr. BERRY] did not hear that statement. He was not making a speech in opposition to the Democratic caucus; he was making a speech defining his own views. The gentleman said—

Mr. SPALDING. Excuse me.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I think you ought to withdraw that statement.

Mr. SPALDING. I say that the caucus had recommended it; not that it was binding—

Mr. ERMENTROUT. It did nothing of the kind. It did not recommend anything.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not a fit subject for discussion. Even if it does not offend the rules of the House, it does offend common decency to bring the action of the Democratic caucus upon this floor.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. RHEA].

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, when the ardor of my colleague from Kentucky has cooled and he comes to the hour of reflection, I am sure he will share in common the regret with which his Democratic associates listened to his assault upon them for their action in attempting to define a policy and enforce it with their views upon the floor of this House. He summons the ghost of "King Caucus" in the ardor of his speech, only to face it with a declaration of his manly independence and want of fear. The time has been, Mr. Speaker, when the efficacy of Democratic expression of principle and the saving grace thereof was beautifully illustrated, and in the case of my colleague from Kentucky—

Mr. BERRY. As the gentleman has referred to my action, I suppose he refers to the fact that I was an advocate of the Blair bill for the education of the people of the United States, distributed according to illiteracy; but my party having taken a position upon it, or at least Mr. Watterson and Mr. Carlisle having done so, I abandoned it, although I believed in it.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. To ease the conscience of my colleague, I will state it had no reference to old Granny Blair's education bill, but to more recent occurrences in the history of the Democratic party in Kentucky.

Mr. BERRY. It is not a matter of easing my conscience.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose in opposing the pending resolution to annex the Hawaiian Islands to the United States to enter upon the discussion of any real or fancied constitutional objections that lie in the way. I am moved by other considerations, founded in prudence and based upon interest, I trust and believe. There is nothing in common in the habits, customs, or civilization of those native to the islands and the people of the United States. Years of missionary effort from the standpoint of commercial endeavor or religious advancement demonstrate the fact that hope in either direction is abandoned.

Indeed, the descendants of the missionaries sent there to save souls, seeing the utter futility of further effort in that line, for some years seem to have been and still are engaged in a frantic attempt to swap the original stock of piety carried over to the natives for their property, and by this legislation to coin what is left on hand into pennies.

The annexation of these islands invites to this country and makes a part of it a race of people, tried by every standard of moral and physical well-being, wholly undesirable, and which can satisfy no want of ours, unless it be that greedy spirit of commercialism which threatens the foundation of our social organism and civil government.

I do not overdraw or add color to the picture, Mr. Speaker. I quote from an author whose opportunity to observe and know has been ample, whose reliability none will dispute, and whose intelligence all will admit. He writes in no unfriendly spirit to the people of the islands, and is the avowed friend and advocate of the policy of annexation. I refer to naval officer Lieut. Lucien Young, a gallant Kentuckian. He says the Hawaiian religion is the embodiment of bestiality and malignity that frequently lapses into crimes of lust and revenge. The various legends of their gods abound in attributes of the most excessive animalism and cruelty. Lewdness, prostitution, and indecency are exalted into virtues.

One feature of the religion, or idolatrous worship of these people, he says, is the hula dance, which, he tells us, is "accompanied with chants of unspeakable foulness of diction and description, elaborated with foul wit and jest, and extolling impurity. A dancing debauch usually lasts all night, and as a rule ends in a promiscuous drunk."

Mr. BERRY. This allusion of Lieut. Lucien Young, United States Navy, whom I know very well, refers to the condition of that country previous to 1840, when idolatry was abolished.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. I shall cite Lieutenant Young, because, while it has been said that this sort of fetich has been abolished by law, he says that the people secretly cherish and continue in this practice.

Mr. BERRY. Well, Lieut. Lucien Young is one of the most earnest advocates of annexation in America.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. I was conceding that, and I gave an author entirely friendly to your scheme. So much this author bespeaks for the moral status of the natives of these islands. As to their intelligence, he declares them to be entirely superstitious. They believe in sorcery, and are wont to make sacrifices of beasts and fowls to remove spells and eradicate disease. Such is the statement of this naval officer, based upon months of careful study and investigation of the condition and customs of these people.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from my own State who has just taken his seat makes a comparison between these people and the people of Georgia—naming that great Commonwealth—the people of the entire cotton belt of this Union, and even includes my own beloved Kentucky. He makes this comparison only that he may draw a contrast and declare that for educational facilities afforded, general diffusion of educational attainments and intelligence, the balance is in favor of the native islander.

His statement is based upon observation and information gained during a stay of four or five days on the islands and in Honolulu, the most of which time, by inference from his speech, was spent in witnessing the delights of the hula dance, which, if he does not commend as altogether charming, he has not condemned. The statement is monstrous, and for Kentucky and Kentuckians I repudiate it. Naval Officer Young again says the retrogression of the common people is everywhere in evidence on these islands, and further tells us that in a little over one hundred years the native population has decreased from 250,000 to less than 30,000 pure natives at the present time.

This certainly does not denote a vigorous race or one calculated to benefit this country. And there exists to-day upon these islands, Mr. Speaker, a population for the most part a mixture of the Chinese with the islanders, thus making a homogenous whole of moral vipers and physical lepers. This same author summarizes the entire situation and deplorable condition of these native islanders in this strong and thoughtful language:

Chastity has no recognition in the social organism, and, unlike other races, the female is aggressive in solicitation.

Mr. BERRY. I want to say to the gentleman if he would look about the streets of the capital of Washington he would see that there is more immorality south of Pennsylvania avenue than there is in the whole Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, as an American Representative, if I knew that to be true, I would blush to herald it upon the floor of this House. I would not blazon to the world the degradation of the most vicious of American women. But I deny it, Mr. Speaker. I deny that here in the capital city of the greatest Government in the world American womanhood has fallen to such a standard. Oh, for shame, that you should speak such words!

Mr. BERRY. I did not know that the gentleman ever blushed. Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Well, the gentleman from Kentucky will find that my cheek is not so hard as his, and that it does not take the same motives and influences to bring me around to the right thing. I sincerely believe the occasion will never arise when my aspersions upon the women of my own land should bring the blush to my face, but for you I can and do. I dismiss this feature of the discussion, not because it is unimportant or unworthy serious consideration, but because time and the steady progress of Christianity and civilization might ameliorate, if not cure, these radical defects.

From a commercial standpoint, Mr. Speaker, our interest can not induce us to annex these islands and assume the heavy money burdens their proper policing and regulating would entail upon the people of this country. We now have treaty relations with them that give to us the fullest benefits to be derived from mutual trade. We buy largely more from them than we sell, and if it is proposed to take them and colonize them with American citizens, we gain no new customers and open no new fields for American products or manufactures to find a market in, with all the disadvantages of competition of cheap Chinese labor with our own workmen. Will this treaty last? Most assuredly it will, for every dictate of prudence and self-interest will impel the islanders to wish to adhere to it, and under its stipulations the right of entrance to Pearl Harbor at our own will and pleasure exists.

The necessity for their occupation and absolute control is urged. What necessity, Mr. Speaker, exists now, or has existed in the past? We are told by some, and seriously it seems, that the necessity to use them as a coaling station for our Pacific fleets, merchant and naval, exists. This reason ignores the fact that there is not a pound of coal on the islands, except such as is carried there from coal fields remote from them. If there is, it has escaped the hunt of man, who is ever on the search to find and utilize so useful and absolutely necessary an article of commerce, navigation, and manufacture.

To use the islands for that purpose, the coal must first be carried there on transports and stored for use. To at all times do this we must annex the open sea betwixt our coal ports and the islands, and fence it in, so that no hostile navy could ride the waves to molest our safe and easy travel. Otherwise, in war, the enemy's war ships would beset our path and we would be compelled to send with every coal barge a full complement of our own war ships, and we would, indeed, realize that we must win our way through "bloody seas." Again, it is declared to be a defensive necessity from a war standpoint.

We are told that we need the islands as a kind of military break-water against attack on our western coast. Eminent military authority is offered for this statement. Both land and naval officers are produced to justify this claim. All honor, Mr. Speaker, to our soldiers on land and sea. I glory in their just fame. Their deeds of valor are known wherever civilized man is found. They have carried our glorious flag to victory in every land, on every sea where they have fought, from the day they wrested from Great Britain the power to longer enslave us to that May day just gone when they sent to the bottom of Manila Harbor a Spanish fleet with every man on board.

But, Mr. Speaker, the calm judgment of a free people who believe, aye, know, that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" realizes, and in the years to come, if not now, will so declare, that the military arm of the Government can not safely be intrusted with the duty of controlling and shaping its civil policy. The profession, the training, and tendency of military life forbids it. The tendency of the military, whether on land or sea, is toward aggression and ever toward imperialism. And, again, we are to be made believe that if the United States does not annex the Hawaiian Islands some other power will, either with the consent of the islands or without it, and by the force of its own army and navy.

Does anybody really believe this? Has not this country many times declared that it would view with alarm and treat as an hostile act any such attempt? It could never be done and would not be attempted by any government of the Old World, unless it was predetermined and known that it could only be done by conquering the resistance of the United States. If such a determination is ever reached, our present annexation and possession of the islands would not stay the government that so lusts for territory, for the same power that could overcome our resistance in the first instance could wrest our occupation and possession in the last, and neither would or could ever be accomplished.

What do we fear, Mr. Speaker, and whom? Certainly not the ghost of dead and forgotten Spain. The throes of internal discord and colonial revolutions have rendered this effete Kingdom powerless for harm. Does Germany threaten us? No. Her good sense will restrain any ambition she otherwise might indulge for conquest. Does France? Most assuredly not. Nor Russia, nor Prussia, nor Italy. No Eastern power threatens our Western supremacy. In the meantime the British lion licks the hand that twice smote him, and England's Queen sends greeting and begs us believe she is willing to join hands with us and march forth on a mission of conquest and plunder.

No, Mr. Speaker; no cloud flicks the horizon in token of the brewing storm. None will appear unless we, "forgetful, stray after little lures," unless we forget that Jefferson told us to have friendly relations with all nations, entangling alliances with none; unless we mix up in the politics of the East, none will appear. Finally, Mr. Speaker, we are urged to take Hawaii anyhow; the islands are offered, and let us take them. Suppose we take them, what form of government under our system by our Constitution will we give them? Is it proposed, does anyone believe, would any member of this House consent, to go 2,200 miles from our shores into the Pacific Ocean and erect a State in the American Union? No one contemplates, none would consent to such a proposition. Conditions will not warrant the making of a Territory of these islands, for the Constitution would control in this case as in that of the State.

What, then, remains to be done? Nothing is left except a military government for them; and surely no American who is not forgetful of the teachings of our fathers, unmindful of the traditions of the past, and, I hope, our welfare in the future, will ever consent to have any portion of this country in such condition. To do it we must write a new policy, tear down every safeguard of a free people—a democratic form of government—and declare our Republic a sham and a delusion. We must affirm our faith to be: The military is of right and ought to be superior to the civil arm of the Government. When this time comes, farewell, my country; thy honor and thy glory have departed forever; thy strength proved thy weakness.

This land has been dedicated to freedom. Here and under our system no chains of class or prejudice can fetter the wings of aspiring, ambitious genius. Here in free America true worth, whether it comes heralded from the palaces of the rich or springs of its own unaided strength from the hovels of the poor, may hope to find its just reward. In the twinkling of an eye things have changed—a military satrapy is set up, a ruling class is constituted.

Mr. Speaker, by every memory of the past, by every hope for the future; in the name of my country, whose institutions and people I love and whose greatness and glory I share, I appeal to its Representatives on this floor not to enter upon this policy of aggression, fraught, as so many believe, with danger at every step. Have regard for the promise given the world but recently, and hedged about with all the binding force and obligation that official utterance could lend it, when you said in your declaration of war against Spain that war was to be waged for freedom's sake, in the cause of humanity, that no purpose of conquest or gain animated the purposes of the United States. On this declaration we won the world's respect and confidence and the approving smile of Him who holds in the hollow of His hand the destiny of nations as He does of individuals. It seems, however, the die is cast, the determination is entered upon, and take these islands we will.

Mr. Speaker, what do we need them for and what will we do with them? I suppose we might fit them up in royal style as a sort of national vaudeville theater or up-to-date "Midway Plaisance," and by Congressional enactment interdict any cheap and mere vulgar imitations that shall take place, but that only the original and genuine Hulas may appear in all the glory and splendor of nakedness unadorned, and give to the denizens of this benighted country daily and nightly exhibitions of their innocent divertimento. Or rather, shall we throw off the mask, come into the open, and join in the cry, but feebly heard now, On to Manila, to Puerto Rico, to the Carolinas, to the Canaries; down with the people; on with the empire? Mr. Speaker, what sound is it I hear? Is it the coming of the "Man on Horseback"?

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

Mr. BALL. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time allotted me I can not attempt a full or satisfactory discussion of the pending resolution. I would not speak at all did I not in my heart believe that the question under consideration involves the most crucial period in our national history, not excepting the fratricidal conflict between the States.

The glowing picture presented by those who would lightly set aside the traditional policy of this Government and enter upon a career of colonial aggrandizement supported by a great army and navy, is certainly no more alluring than was Napoleon's dream of universal empire. Let us hope that, once entered upon, the result may not prove equally disastrous.

Mr. Speaker, in opposing this measure I shall present for the consideration of the House three propositions only. The annexation of Hawaii by joint resolution is unconstitutional, unnecessary, and unwise. If the first proposition be true, sworn to support the Constitution, we should inquire no further. I challenge not the advocates of Hawaiian annexation, but those who advocate annexation in the form now presented, to show warrant or authority in our organic law for such acquisition of territory. To do so will be not only to subvert the supreme law of the land but to strike down every precedent in our history. I know, as was said by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], that the mention of the Constitution in this body often invokes a smile, and yet it can not be that a majority of this body agree with the insignificant few "that there is a higher law than the Constitution;" or with that former member of this House who, in his good fellowship, "did not think the Constitution should come between friends."

Why, sir, the very presence of this measure here is the result of a deliberate attempt to do unlawfully that which can not be lawfully done. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], in a very able argument in support of annexation on March 15 last, rested his case upon the general power in our Constitution and the express power in the constitution of Hawaii, conferred upon the Presidents and Senates of the two countries, to conclude a treaty of annexation. Now that, in pursuance of those powers, the President has submitted the treaty to the United States Senate and has been unable to obtain the consent of two-thirds of that body, we are called upon to override the constitutions of both parties to the proposed contract in order that we may do this thing.

When Louisiana was acquired, when Florida was received, when Alaska came to us, no statesman connected with the executive or legislative branch of the Government dreamed the territory sought to be added to our possessions could be received, except by treaty duly ratified. In their desperation, grasping at shadows for substance, those who now resort to this subterfuge cite the admission of the imperial State from which I hail—Texas—as warrant and authority for their purpose.

Mr. Speaker, no one familiar with the history of that transaction should make such claim. Advocates of the annexation of Texas rested their case upon the express power conferred upon Congress in the Constitution to admit new States. Opponents of the annexation of Texas contended that even that express power did not confer the right to admit States not carved from territory already belonging to the United States or some one of the States forming the Federal Union. Whether, therefore, we subscribe to the one or the other school of thought in that matter, we can find no precedent to sustain the method here proposed for admitting foreign territory.

Members need only refer to the extended debates in Senate and House of Representatives while the annexation of Texas was being considered to be assured of the correctness of this conclusion. The original proposition as offered contemplated the formation of a State from certain prescribed limits within the territory embraced in the Republic of Texas, while the balance of the area of the Republic was to be ceded as territory to the United States. The treaty having failed of ratification by the Senate, annexation by joint resolution was resorted to, and the outcome of the whole matter was that the entire Republic of Texas was admitted as one State, with the right to carve therefrom four additional States, this being done for the purpose alone of coming within the constitutional power to admit new States and in recognition of the fact that territory could only be constitutionally acquired by treaty.

I have not time to review much that was interestingly said about the matter. I shall quote only a few of the opinions advanced during the discussion of that matter. The Senate committee on Foreign Affairs consisted of five members, four of whom questioned the right to admit new States out of foreign territory, claiming it could only be done by treaty, the other member of the committee admitting that foreign territory could only be acquired by treaty, but contending that Texas could be admitted as a State.

Mr. Walker, of Mississippi, claiming to be the author of the idea to have Texas admitted under the clause of the Constitution authorizing Congress to admit new States, said—

That he was rejoiced that the great American question of the reannexation of Texas was being presented on all hands on the grounds on which it was placed originally by him [Mr. Walker] in his Texas letter of the 8th of January, 1844.

He [Mr. Walker] then proposed, more than a year since, to admit Texas as a State of the Union by the action of Congress under that clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to admit new States into the Union. That clause was not confined to our then existing territory, but was without limitation, and the framers of the Constitution had expressly refused to limit the general power contained in this clause to the territory then embraced within the Union. The general power was in express words, and no man had a right to interpolate restrictions, especially restrictions which the framers of the Constitution had rejected.

Mr. Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, the dissenting member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, advocating the resolution, said:

All the reasoning and ingenuity in the world could not abolish the plain language of the Constitution, which declared that new States might be admitted by Congress into the Union.

Mr. Henderson, of Mississippi, Mr. Benton, of Missouri, and other able advocates of the annexation of Texas urged the same arguments in support of the measure.

In the House of Representatives Mr. Yancey, of Alabama, supporting the resolution, advanced the same line of argument. On the other hand, the opposition, insisting that the power to admit new States was confined to territory already belonging to the United States, put forward many able advocates.

Mr. Morehead, of Kentucky, speaking for the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate, contended—

In the case now under consideration it was not proposed by the joint resolution before the Senate that Texas should be acquired according to what he considered the constitutional mode of proceeding, by the treaty-making power. The proposition is for Congress to admit her as a State. Now—when this Government was about to add a foreign domain to ours, was there any other mode of accomplishing that object except by the interposition of the treaty-making power, composed of the President of the United States in conjunction with the Senate? Was it constitutional to annex Texas by the treaty which was submitted to the Senate last session?

He believed there were few, if any, constitutional objections made. If, then, the power to annex foreign territory by treaty does appertain to the treaty-making power, he should like to see upon what ground it could be held that the Congress of the United States possesses concurrent legislative power upon this subject. If that which it is competent for the treaty-making power alone to accomplish, the majority of a quorum of both Houses of Congress could accomplish. The argument, he apprehended, would be this, that as a constitutional mode of proceeding we do not deny that foreign territory can be admitted into this Union by the treaty-making power. But there is another clause in the Constitution which gives Congress the power to admit new States into the Union. He proposed now to consider what was the character of that article and upon what conditions it rests. [Mr. Buchanan: That is the true ground.] His friend from Pennsylvania said that was the question, and to it he proposed to call particular attention.

Mr. Choate for three hours reviewed the whole question, bringing to bear his knowledge of the Constitution and its formation and the history of the country, clothed in redundant adjectives. He denied that the clause in the fourth article in the Constitution giving the power to Congress of admitting new States into the Union was given with the most remote idea of its being ever applied to anything but domestic territory. Said he:

No man could believe that by that provision it was intended to confer the tremendous power of admitting new States in any part of the world, without limitation as to habits, customs, language, principles, or anything but the semblance of republicanism. Until it was found the treaty of last session had no chance of passing the Senate, no human being save one, no man, woman, or child in the Union or out of the Union, wise or foolish, drunk or sober, was ever heard to breathe one syllable about this power in the Constitution of admitting new States being applicable to the admission of foreign nations, governments, or states. It was a new and monstrous heresy on the Constitution, got up not from any well-founded faith in its orthodoxy, but for the mere purpose of carrying a measure by a bare majority of Congress that could not be carried by a two-thirds majority of the Senate in accordance with the treaty-making power.

Mr. Speaker, I will not further quote from this discussion. The language used by Mr. Choate certainly applies with peculiar force to the proposition now pending, and the entire debate upon both sides of that proposition shows conclusively that the advocates of this measure have no ground to stand upon so far as the annexation of Texas is concerned.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] seek to aid their contentions in favor of this measure by the decision of Chief Justice Marshall. Let us see if they are sustained thereby:

The course—

Said Judge Marshall—

which the argument has taken will require that in deciding this question the court should take into view the relation in which Florida stands to the United States. The Constitution confers absolutely upon the Government the powers of making war and of making treaties; consequently that Government possesses the power of acquiring territory either by conquest or by treaty.

Thus it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that Chief Justice Marshall not only fails to sustain these gentlemen, but bases the acquisition of territory, either by conquest or treaty, upon the war-making and treaty-making powers conferred by the Constitution upon the Government. Certainly, the treaty having failed to pass, no gentleman will contend that we are attempting to take Hawaii by conquest or by the power to admit States. They must therefore stand with the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee [Mr. HITT], who insists, in substance, that the National Government has the inherent right to acquire territory in this manner. The Constitution having pointed out the several ways in which territory may be lawfully acquired, I for one decline to accept this new doctrine by which territory can eventually come into partnership with the States and have equal rights and representation on the floor of Congress and elsewhere without first running the gantlet of every constitutional safeguard.

Mr. Speaker, I shall even venture to differ with those who declare this measure to be a military necessity. Even the array of expert testimony they bring to their support is not conclusive. A leading member of the bar once defined unreliable testimony as of three classes: "Ordinary liars, accomplished liars, and expert witnesses." [Laughter.] While I do not accede to this classification, I do know that great military and naval authority is not agreed at all times. It is also true that only witnesses in the matter were called who favored annexation. Even then, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], General Schofield, upon cross-examination, admitted that Pearl Harbor, now possessed by this country, was the only harbor that could be successfully fortified and defended. I will say in passing that we possess this harbor by treaty that can not be abrogated except by the consent of this Government. Again, we should bear in mind that, by professional instinct, Army and Navy officers are naturally predisposed toward that policy which would make this country a great military and naval power.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. BALL. Yes; certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to make one statement, and it is the gospel truth, that every one of these statements in favor of annexation was an ex parte statement, and I believe that any ordinary lawyer, just a plain, ordinary, average lawyer, can take every one of these men and on cross-examination make him swear to the same thing that General Schofield swore to, that that is the only harbor that can be fortified.

Mr. BALL. All right, put that in my speech. Now, against their judgment we have the safest of all guides—experience. For more than fifty years the Atlantic Ocean has bounded our eastern, the Gulf and Republic of Mexico our southern, the Pacific our western, and the British possessions our northern borders. During this period we have made marvelous strides in progress, the development of our resources, and increase of population. We have waged the greatest of all wars in our own borders, placing in hostile conflict two armies either of which could have whipped the combined legions of Napoleon or Wellington.

Since then we have nearly doubled our resources and population, and even now we are demonstrating to the world that the foreign power which breaks our peace must whip every man within our borders from Maine to Texas, from New York to California, before they can successfully give us battle. Why, then, extend our borders more than 2,000 miles in the Pacific Ocean? To do so will be a breach of public and national faith.

December 19, 1840, Mr. Webster announced that—

The Government of the Sandwich Islands ought to be respected; that no power ought to take possession of the islands, either as a conquest or for purposes of colonization.

President Tyler, two years afterwards, reiterated the same doctrine.

In 1843 Secretary of State Legaré notified our minister to England—

That we had no wish to acquire or plant colonies abroad, but would, if necessary, feel justified in using force to prevent their acquisition by one of the great powers of Europe.

This, Mr. Speaker, has been our established policy. Twice England has occupied the islands and as often peacefully retired. Does anyone believe that in the face of all this that even a remote possibility exists that any foreign power would dare incur our displeasure by attempting to possess themselves of these islands?

I must pass on. Mr. Speaker, it is not only unwise that we annex Hawaii, to do so will be a blunder approaching the gravity of a crime. I know that by many it is not considered up to date to quote Mr. Washington, Mr. Jefferson, or Mr. Madison, and yet I can not believe that the great and unselfish advice of these men, to whom we owe so much, should be lightly set aside.

I would certainly, when in doubt, prefer to go to him who used his private means to aid the Government and declined to accept compensation as Commander of the Army and President of the United States, and refused a crown, rather than those who would convert a war for liberty and humanity into a vehicle of conquest and commercial gain. In his farewell message to the Congress he warned us against a large standing army and cautioned us against entangling foreign alliances. With patriotic, far-seeing statesmanship, he advised against political connection with any foreign nation, called attention to their interests involving them in controversies foreign to our concerns. Said he:

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. Why—should we forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand on foreign grounds?

He asked—

That we might be the more secure in our position, in 1823 Mr. Monroe startled the world by putting the nations of the earth on notice that we would not permit foreign powers "to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere." These policies have become dear to the American people, without regard to party. Guided thereby, we have preserved our Government and outstripped all nations in the race for supremacy. We have surpassed every power maintaining a colonial policy, having none ourselves. We have seen the flags of monarchies go down in South America, Central America, and the islands of the sea, and flags over liberty-loving republics hoisted in their stead.

We have seen a foreign emperor left to his fate in Mexico upon a simple protest by us and upon the ruins of his throne a Republic created. What more can we ask? Why not continue along the line of our great destiny, settling our internal questions upon just and proper lines and developing our magnificent resources? What need have we for the sugar lands of Hawaii? Thirty-six thousand square miles of sugar land in Texas, as fertile as the valley of the Nile, await development. Louisiana calls for money and men to quicken her fertile soil, while Nebraska and other beet-sugar producing States demand our attention. Only the other day the Washington Post stated:

Imperial Texas can produce food products for the entire population of the United States.

Yes, and furnish the wool and cotton to clothe them and the leather to shoe them. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] a short while ago in this House made a correct statement "that Texas could receive the population of the Union without being crowded." Do you, gentlemen, not find it difficult now to frame laws that will satisfy Maine and Texas, California and Louisiana, Minnesota and South Carolina, Pennsylvania and Alabama? Why, the first thing they found when we captured Manila and desired to collect their customs, was that the Dingley bill, whose authors promised universal prosperity, was not adapted to the Philippine Islands and we retained the Spanish laws.

Enthusiasts may paint glowing pictures of Hawaii, but the stubborn fact remains—that white men can not work under a tropical sun. They may prate of Americanizing it, but can not deny that under American influence for nearly three-quarters of a century there are no more than 2,000 American male citizens, less even than the number of lepers there now. They can not controvert that out of a population of about 110,000, more than two-thirds are men, 40,000 are Hawaiians, 24,000 are Japanese, 22,000 are Chinese, 15,000 are Portuguese, 1,000 are South Sea Islanders, 4,000 are white foreigners, and only 3,000 are Americans, male and female. Such as these we have legislated against; such as these we do not desire as competitors with free-born American laborers.

To take Hawaii, therefore, means not only to change our traditional policy as to colonial aggrandizement and abolish the Monroe doctrine, but it means to absorb a population that are alien to our form of government and strangers to our institutions. It means that the American flag, consecrated to the cause of liberty, shall float over a people where there can be no "union of hearts nor union of hands;" where the principle that "all men are created equal" must stand aside, while the franchised few must control the disfranchised many. Hawaii is but the entering wedge for other colonial possessions. What right have we to change a policy that has turned the eyes of the liberty loving of every land to our shores as an asylum for the oppressed?

Dare we take the chances for all time to come when so little is at stake on the one side, our all on the other? If we stand by the faith, keep in the paths our fathers trod, not a hundred years hence 250,000,000 American citizens within our present borders will command the peace of the world and shape its civilization.

May God forbid that we take passage upon an unknown sea, and when, too late, we are asked from the watchtowers of liberty and free government, "Sentinels, what of the night?" we may not be able to say, "All is well." [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended addressing the House on this question, because when the appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department was pending I availed myself of that opportunity to answer the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] on this subject. Having had my full say on that occasion, I have nothing to add now except to say that the arguments which I before advanced, so far as relates to the strategic position of these islands for the protection of the Pacific coast, have been emphasized and strengthened by the events which have since taken place. That particular phase of the question in connection with these islands has been called to our attention by the necessities of the present war and the capture of the Philippine Islands.

My object in rising to-day is to answer some of the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] in regard to the resolutions which he introduced and which were referred to our committee, making during a time of war the private property of the enemy at sea free from capture. The subcommittee to which those resolutions were referred felt obliged to refuse him, although a member of the committee, a favorable report. I had the honor to be the chairman of that subcommittee. The gentleman from Massachusetts, in a very able presentation of the subject delivered in this House a few days ago, presented arguments in favor of that doctrine. I am perfectly willing to admit that the higher trend of international law tends in that direction. The later writers all express the hope that it will soon become the recognized law among nations for their government during time of war. But these higher principles must be recognized and find their place as international law during times of peace. They must be agreed to by conventions of the different nations whose plenipotentiaries will pledge themselves for the future that this rule of law shall be carried out.

This identical rule was submitted to the convention in Paris in 1856, and the powers therein represented declined to adopt this rule that private property or merchant ships should be free at sea the same as private property is acknowledged to be exempt from capture on land except under stress of military circumstances. It was the United States that maintained that this doctrine should be put in full force when the proposition was made that privateering should no longer be tolerated. The convention of 1856 adopted a rule that thereafter privateering should not be allowed by the powers when at war; but the United States declined to join in that agreement because the further doctrine was not conceded that all property on merchant vessels should be free from capture on the high seas.

When the resolutions of the gentleman from Massachusetts came before the subcommittee, they were carefully weighed. We could not give them our approval in view of the course of Spain during the present war, for there has been no response on the part of Spain to the higher rule which was intended to prevail for the conduct of war at present and in the future.

When President McKinley issued his proclamation of April 5, 1898, he laid down the doctrine that privateering would not be carried on by our Government, in compliance with the rule laid down by the Paris convention in 1856. Although our Government was not a party to that agreement, and was not bound by it, he took high ground and planted our country upon that doctrine. All honor to him and all honor to our country for the advanced doctrine of international law to which we committed ourselves.

But, Mr. Speaker, how was this declaration of President McKinley responded to on the part of Spain? I call attention to the royal decree issued by the Spanish Government April 23, 1898, a copy of which we obtained from the foreign office of Great Britain, we ourselves not being in a position to obtain it. In Article I of that royal decree, issued by the Queen Regent, she states that all treaties heretofore existing between the United States and Spain are absolutely abrogated, including the solemn obligation laid down in the treaty of 1895, that when war breaks out between the two countries, American merchants shall have one year in which to close up their business and get out of Spain. Thus Spain absolutely breaks down the provision of that treaty which was to stand even during a time of war.

Article II, instead of allowing a period of thirty days, which President McKinley allowed in his proclamation for Spanish ships to clear from our ports and reach their destination, allows but five days after the publication of that decree for our ships to escape from Spanish ports.

Furthermore, in our deliberate judgment, we could not allow these resolutions of the gentleman from Massachusetts to be reported favorably to the House, because Spain, instead of responding to the high position taken by our country in regard to privateering, in reply to the inquiry of the Government of France whether she would not be bound by the provisions of the treaty of 1856 and not resort to privateering, absolutely declines to accede to that proposition. I cite the language of Article IV and Article V.

ART. IV. The Spanish Government, while maintaining their right to issue letters of marque, which they expressly reserved in their note of the 16th of May, 1857, in reply to the request of France for the adhesion of Spain to the declaration of Paris relative to maritime law, will organize for the present a service of "auxiliary cruisers of the navy," composed of ships of the Spanish mercantile navy, which will cooperate with the latter for the purposes of cruising, and which will be subject to the statutes and jurisdiction of the navy.

ART. V. In order to capture the enemy's ships, to confiscate the enemy's merchandise under their own flag, and contraband of war under any flag, the royal navy, auxiliary cruisers, and privateers, if and when the latter are authorized, will exercise the right of visit on the high seas and in the territorial waters of the enemy, in accordance with international law and any regulations which may be published for the purpose.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, as there is no response on the part of Spain to the position taken by our Government denying to her the right to use privateers in the prosecution of this war, we felt it was impossible, however much we might sympathize with the high aspirations to which the resolutions tended, to report them favorably. We felt that under the terrible strain of existing war we could not deprive ourselves of the right of capturing our enemy's property when found on the high seas. Furthermore, the last clause of the resolution was retroactive in character and declared that prizes already captured by the gallant men of our Navy should be restored to Spain. Anyone will see that it was impossible to report such a resolution as that. In the first place, it would be ex post facto; and in the next place, it would be depriving men of vested rights which they had already acquired under the laws of our country by captures on the high seas in a time of war.

Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House any longer, but simply wished to state for the information of the House why the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs could not favorably report the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Low].

Mr. LOW. Mr. Speaker, I have, like all Americans, been opposed to the acquisition of territory.

Colonial possessions never had any charm for the American people, who have always thought that this republican form of government, under which they have lived and prospered, could be perpetuated with less friction without extending its present area and bearing the burdens of remote dependencies.

The question which challenges this nation at the present time is not what our country wants, but what it needs to maintain its elevated status among the nations of the earth. Any additional territory that could not strengthen this great Republic should not be annexed.

The question of annexing the Hawaiian Islands can not be fairly determined without considering the absolute necessities required to make a navy effective in time of war. At this time permit me, Mr. Speaker, to state that until the present period our Navy has not had from the Government that attention which it should have received. When the tocsin of war sounded a few weeks ago, the first cry of the nation was, "Our Navy," but when the people looked for it they found that arm of our country's offense and defense numerically weak. Instantly drastic methods were employed to strengthen our fleets and relieve a situation which caused the blush of shame to mount the cheeks of all American citizens.

But we have seen the last of a feeble navy. From now on it will be increased until it will be double its present size and strength and ten times as large in its "torpedo branch." [Applause.] This is a demand of the people not only from the interior but from those living on our coast lines.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution which is before the House has been ably debated for and against annexation. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in presenting the affirmative side, gave an array of facts so clearly defined that, to my mind, they answered in advance all objections to annexation.

But if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Hitt], through oversight, did omit some reasons why the Hawaiian Islands should be annexed, they were remembered by his ardent supporters who followed him in debate. I was very much interested last Saturday while listening to the able address delivered by my genial friend from Arkansas [Mr. Dismore]. His special reference to the availability of Kiska Harbor (situated in one of the westerly islands of the Aleutian group) as a coaling and supply station for our naval fleets, his limited statement of the climatic conditions along that chain of islands, together with his elucidation of the great circle route for trans-Pacific commerce, brought to my mind some facts that should supplement the statement which the gentleman made at that time.

The gentleman was correct in his statement that the great circle route which passed near Kiska was shorter from San Francisco to China and the East Indies than via Honolulu. He was right when he stated that the mercury never fell low enough to form ice in the harbor of Kiska. But there are other conditions and important facts about this northern route to China and this Kiska land which the gentleman did not embody in his remarks last Saturday.

I have here a copy of weather observations made by masters of vessels cruising in the vicinity of Kiska, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks. I find it recorded in this copy that during the month of January it blows a gale 40 per cent of the time, and 50 per cent of the month is foggy. In July, gale of wind none, but 100 per cent of that month is foggy weather. The gentleman from Arkansas, when he spoke of the moderate temperature in the winter at Kiska, did not tell you that it blew a living gale of wind nearly half the time, and that the other half of the time the fog is so thick (using a sailor's expression) that a nail could be driven into it; and he did not tell you that the sea up there was heavier and more trying to a vessel than in any other part of the Pacific Ocean.

Nice place for a coaling and supply station! Why, if one of our fleets should put in there for supplies it would, between heavy gales and dense fogs, be as effectually sealed up as is the Spanish fleet to-day at Santiago de Cuba by the sunken Merrimac. [Applause.] And yet the Democratic party claims this to be a suitable coaling station. Now, about this great circle route from our coast to and from China. I have been reliably informed by shipmasters who have cruised up in the Bering Sea that this northern circle route is never taken by either steam or sailing vessels going to and from China on account of the heavy fogs, heavy gales, and rough sea. They go farther south some 200 to 300 miles.

Why, a shipmaster told me the other day that even trading vessels that have occasion to pass near the Aleutian Islands never enter Kiska Harbor unless compelled by stress of weather. The Island of Kiska is absolutely without natural resources. It is a damp, cold, bleak place, enveloped by arctic fog and with its shores lashed by a perpetual angry sea. If any anti-annexationist thinks he has found an Eden in Kiska, let him go there and live. He will not find a helpmate there to take charge of his home and share the burdens of an arctic life. The pilot chart issued by the Hydrographic Office states that:

A large portion of the tonnage engaged in trans-Pacific commerce passes back and forth along tracks varying in length, between San Francisco and Yokohama, from 4,700 to 5,500 sea miles, in a lane lying between 25 degrees and 35 degrees of north latitude.

A distance north of Honolulu from 240 to 840 miles.

Now, the fact of it is the Hawaiian Islands are reasonably near the great ocean highway or path between our coast on the west and Asia's shores on the east. More vessels go over this route than any other.

The geographical position of these islands is most convenient and easily reached from the Philippine Islands or from any part of the Pacific coast of North America.

Honolulu, the largest and principal seaport, is well adapted for commerce and it is easily fortified. We do not want these islands any nearer our coast, neither any farther from it. They are not too far north, neither too far south.

The islands have abundant resources, and they are also well adapted for a supply station. We want the islands now, not only for commerce, but for strategic purposes. Their value in the latter direction will increase with the march of time, for the great oriental problem, yet to be solved, will make the Northern Pacific Ocean a theater of active operations and resolute strife among the great nations of the earth for the next fifty years.

Should we fail to annex these islands at the present time, this Congress would, to say the least, commit an unpardonable sin against the liberty-loving people throughout the world. [Applause.]

Weather observations made by masters of vessels in the 5-degree square, 50°-55° north latitude, 175°-180° east longitude, containing Kiska Island.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRADLEY].

[Mr. BRADLEY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY].

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, when this discussion began I was opposed to the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. However, I have listened attentively with a view to getting what light I could from the active operation of the dry search lights on both sides of this House during the debate on this great question, and I have come to the conclusion that it is not only harmless, so far as jeopardizing the peace or life of this nation is concerned, but that especially now it is absolutely essential that we should annex the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. Speaker, in 1845 it was asserted by the opponents of the annexation of Texas that territorial aggrandizement would make the Republic so great that it would burst of its own weight. At that time there had been four Presidents of the Lone Star Republic. Sam Houston was the first, Mr. Lamar was the second, Sam Houston again the third, and Dr. Anson Jones the fourth. It is said that an ardent opponent of annexation in hurling his anathemas against the Democratic party, which then favored annexation, said he believed that the Democrats would favor the annexation of hell, even if they had to make his satanic majesty President of the Republic in order to accomplish it.

Mr. GAINES. You should apply that to the Republicans now.

Mr. LINNEY. Annexation of Texas, however, took place, and what was the result? It not only added strength to the Republic, but it made the Democracy of that time more popular than that party had ever been before.

But, Mr. Speaker, I place my vote upon this ground: There is no danger of hazarding either the peace or safety of this Republic by annexing the Hawaiian Islands. Let me endeavor to make this clear, as it seems to me that there is no danger. We can reach out, I believe, with absolute safety as far as these islands. In fact, we have a precedent in the matter. It has been tested and we have had the experiment. We began with thirteen separate and distinct republics, did we not, the thirteen original States, all located east of the Mississippi River?

This noble system involves the idea of many in one, E pluribus unum. We know that when we have forty-five States there is more security and safety to the life of the Republic than there was when we had thirteen. There were four prosecutions for high treason and three convictions when there were only thirteen States in the Republic. Since we have had so many more—leaving out the unhappy struggle between the States, which was a war of necessity and in no way involved the question of high treason—there has not been a single prosecution for high treason since we had the many additional States.

So that, Mr. Speaker, the idea that controls me is that the matchless system which we have, which Jefferson called the world's best hope and which I will add is the world's only hope, has been made the more secure by the annexation of States. Being founded upon the idea of many in one, forty-five separate and distinct States, if the Hawaiian Islands shall be made one and Alaska made into twenty more, we may run it up to a hundred different States, and every State we add being in itself a separate and distinct organization, with its executive, judicial, and legislative departments; each new State is an additional prop, an additional safeguard for the protection of the life of the nation and of good order within its boundaries.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman vote for an amendment to this bill giving statehood to Hawaii upon the adoption of the proper constitution?

Mr. LINNEY. Oh, I have no time to enter into a discussion of that kind now.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I thought not.

Mr. LINNEY. But I say this, that the Hawaiian Islands might be made into a State without making this Government any the less secure, when its population justifies it. This great Government, with its hundreds of thousands of little kings in the Republic, could include Hawaii without any danger; but there is no necessity of going that far now, and perhaps the question of its admission into the union of States may not arise in the next century.

We already have territory more remote from the capital here than the Hawaiian Islands. Now, let us see. Run a line from Washington City to the Hawaiian Islands. Then run a line to the more remote portions of the Territory of Alaska, and you will find that it is much farther to that part of Alaska than it is to the Hawaiian Islands. So that I respectfully submit that the question of the remoteness of the islands does not affect this matter.

But, let us see again. Having demonstrated, it seems to me, with mathematical certainty that the adding of one more State to our noble system, which is a system of many in one, does not affect its peace or jeopardize its life, I wish to discuss another question, and that is the military aspect of the case.

Our great Republic, comprised of many smaller republics which we call States, as long as each remains in its proper sphere, incurs no additional jeopardy, either as to good order or as to national life, by the admission of any number of States. Another thought here is this: When these islands shall have been annexed the entire extent of the authority of this great Republic will not embrace in any direction over one-seventh part of the universe. The suggestion that the character of the inhabitants of the islands makes it undesirable to have annexation has but little force. Undoubtedly it were desirable that none but the highest type of manhood shall exist there, such as the American type.

But the American type was produced by a commingling of the blood of the different nationalities of the world, and in time to come the same causes may produce like results in these islands. I know some of the most robust intellects now live there. It was my pleasure to hear the Hon. Lorrin A. Thurston, of Honolulu, deliver an elaborate argument in favor of annexation. The effort was a creditable one indeed. In the town of Taylorsville, where I live, one of the most intelligent ladies I have ever seen resides. She lived for many years on the Hawaiian Islands with her husband, the late lamented Rev. Thomas G. Thurston. Desiring all the information I could get on this great question, I addressed her, and I have in my possession her reply, which I will present as a part of my remarks:

TAYLORSVILLE, N. C., June 10, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I have so little time in which to answer your letter I fear that I can not give you much light on the subject of your questions. As to the first question: How long did Mr. Thurston and family live on the islands? His parents, Rev. Asa Thurston and Lucy, his wife, sailed from Boston on the brig Thaddeus the 23d of October, 1819, and arrived at Honolulu March 31, 1820. Father never returned to New England, but came as far east as San Francisco for his health in 1823. He died at Honolulu in 1826, over 80 years of age.

Mother Thurston survived him a few years, dying in 1870, being 81 years old. They had five children—three daughters and two sons—all of whom were educated in the United States. They then returned to the islands and spent the greater part of their lives there. The second daughter, the only survivor of the family, is still living in Honolulu. In answer to the second question—the social, moral, and intellectual status—I state the following: The condition of the Sandwich Islanders on the arrival of Father and Mother Thurston in 1820 was pitiable in the extreme. From a nation variously estimated by Captain Cook and others at 300,000 to 400,000 people, they had been reduced by wars, bloodshed, and vices, which follow evil passions, to about 150,000.

Disease, drunkenness, and debauchery had so weakened and prostrated their powers as to place them in a forlorn and almost hopeless condition. To human vision there was a sickening prospect before the missionaries. The grossest forms of idolatry abounded. Filial affection was unknown. Infanticide was universal, and captives taken in war were slain by thousands as sacrifices to the gods, or buried alive beneath the temples. With these filthy, naked, besotted creatures and their degraded surroundings before them, this brave band looked upon Hawaii. Father and Mother lived to see more than 50,000 converts to Christianity upon the islands and a degree of civilization established which compares favorably with the Christianized nations of the earth.

From the lowest depth of heathenism they beheld a nation raised to power, influence, and respect, with a commerce stretching over seas and turning its wealth even upon the nation which produced and sent out its benefactors. They saw from the vilest idolatrous superstition a marvelous growth of religious ideas, a degree of civilization of such marked advancement as to astonish the world. We desire to place no improper emphasis on human agencies. But if there ever has been one grand effort to elevate mankind more free from criticism than another, it is the Sandwich Island Mission. The third question: Is the island a healthy, pleasant place to live in? On their landing, revolting as the picture seemed, there was a ray of light that pierced the darker background. The natural beauty was charming. The climate was delightful. The breezes were mild and healthful, and now invite many from the colder climate of the States. The grand mountains and volcanoes that now attract the tourist are counted among the wonders of the earth. At that time there was no anticipation of the delightful homes and genial society that in late years have given to these islands a charm.

If these hastily gotten together facts will be of any interest to you, I will be very glad, as I am intensely interested in the islands and all born on her soil.

Respectfully,

ALICE G. STEVENSON.

Mr. LINNEY.

Mr. Speaker, I have been honored with an acquaintance with this great woman for several years. Her high social excellence and her robust intellectuality prove conclusively that she knows what she is talking about and that every word she has written in this letter is entitled to credit. In view of the many harsh criticisms that have been hurled against the missionaries in this debate, I consider myself fortunate indeed to be able through this splendid agency to present the facts to this House and the country as they appear in this letter.

I can not escape the conclusion, drawn from the prospect of a higher civilization of the inhabitants of the islands and the natural resources of the country, that there is a bright prospect for the Hawaiian Islands. The sketch Mrs. Stevenson has given us of the topography of the country is indeed charming. The diversity of climate and production of the country, embracing everything from the tall, perpetually snow-clad peaks of the mountains on through almost every climate and vegetable growth to the sugar and banana farms, is simply without a parallel in the world. No country is better calculated to promote and reward industry, to foster genius and fire the imagination, and thus insure domestic happiness and State pride, than these islands.

What objection can there be, then, to annexation? Even if the island is a remote speck in the midst of the sea, why may it not be annexed as a territory, and finally admitted as a part of one of the States, or, if that is impracticable, why may it not be admitted and remain as a Territory until such time as its population, both in character and numbers, shall justify its admission as a State of the Union? It is an inspiring thought to observe the sacred regard the States have for the rights of the Federal Government, because upon the recognition of these rights and powers each State depends for safety in time of war. What a poor figure would the armies of the States cut without this more perfect Union for common defense under the Constitution!

Forty-five different armies, depending upon the condition of the treasuries of the several States, would present a gloomy prospect for national defense or for an invasion. On the other hand, the Federal Government is equally as cautious in the exercise of powers tending to emasculate the States, and should be. Just a few days ago Congress was called upon to provide legal machinery for the soldiers to vote on the field of battle, and the act limits the voting to Federal offices, and that, too, in strict conformity to the election laws of the several States. The nation is safer and more competent to protect itself against sedition, domestic turbulence, and to resist foreign invasion with forty-five States than when we had only thirteen States.

In fact, the leading purpose of the present Constitution, adopted after the Revolution, was to provide for the "common defense" of the Republic of many States. Our Revolutionary ancestors, fresh from the great struggle for independence, saw the infirmities that clung to the system under the Articles of Confederation, and they, early in the nation's life, attempted to remedy these defects by bringing about a more perfect union, which, under the Constitution, could make its entire available war force felt when the safety of the Republic required it. There is, therefore, no danger likely to arise to the General Government merely from the multiplicity of States, except from the frightfully large and ungovernable House of Representatives which might spring out of a great number of States.

This mischief, however, could be remedied by reducing the representation of the various States. The laws of each State may not be the same; indeed, they are not the same. The will of the people of the several States is made omnipotent through the various State legislatures in framing laws which the local needs and conditions of each State may require. When the Lone Star Republic came into the Union as the State of Texas, she lost none of her rights and powers possessed by her as a republic with a president. The legislature of the State performs about the same functions after admission into the Union as a State that the Lone Star Republic could have done as a republic.

Both the State of Texas and the Republic of the United States were greatly benefited by this admission as a State. The Lone Star Republic took unto itself all the power of the United States to protect it from foreign aggression, and this reciprocal duty only imposed upon the State of Texas the payment of her proper share of national burdens. Now, suppose we had territory enough to make ten more States of Texas, does anyone doubt that all could with perfect safety be associated under the Constitution of the United States? Each State retains all the governmental machinery necessary for the protection of its citizens at home, and by this federal unity each State is made the more powerful in war. But it is insisted that annexation of the Hawaiian Islands is not the result of purchase or conquest, nor has it the sanction of the people of the Hawaiian Islands. Let us see about that.

For many months the authorities of the Republic of Hawaii have been active in trying to effect annexation with the United States. The Queen was the head of the government which preceded the present Republic. She is now exercising no power or claim of right as sovereign of the islands. She is now boarding at one of the hotels in this city. She is sometimes seen on our beautiful streets unattended with that splendor which crowned heads observe wherever royalty is enthroned. She in various ways has recognized the existence of the present Republic of Hawaii. But, Mr. Speaker, the question of the existence in these islands of a Republic seems to me can not now arise. If the Republic exists that now asks annexation, then all the wailings we have heard here about forcing the people of these islands into annexation with the United States amount to nothing.

For that Republic, through its properly constituted authorities now governing the island, is more anxious for annexation than we are. In fact they have labored as faithfully for that result as the Lone Star did before succeeding in obtaining admission into the United States as a State. I submit that it appears to this House that the whole people of the island have recognized the existing government there as the legal one. There is the executive, the President, Dole; the legislative, and the judicial departments of government, all exercising all the functions properly belonging to them, and all supported by the people. They are but the agencies of the people there in governing themselves. The taxes necessary to support this government are paid by the people. The courts are open and are sought by the people to adjudicate their private differences.

No revolt exists there against the constituted authorities with which we are now dealing. It is in law a time of peace there. The Supreme Court of the United States, in Ex parte Milligan's Case, held "that when the courts are open in judgment of law it is a time of peace." Then I maintain that a time of peace can not exist in any country without the existence of a government, and that, too, of the ruling power at the time. True, it may be only a de facto Government, but the acts of a de facto Government are valid as to judgments between its citizens. But this Government is more than de facto; it is de jure.

No one doubts that Queen Liliuokalani once ruled of right, but she now recognizes the existing Government there. She is a beneficiary of that Government. She looks to it for support. Its treasury pays her an annuity. She is now a loyal subject of the Republic of Hawaii with which we are now dealing. There is no organized armed resistance to its authority. Therefore it seems to me that these conditions establish the fact that the present governing power in Hawaii is the legal one, and it exists to-day as a Republic by the consent of the governed there. It does not matter that all did not vote or all were not allowed to vote.

There is no State in the Union to-day that does not restrict the exercise of the right of suffrage by its citizens. Even in North Carolina, probably the freest people on the globe, the laws exclude certain classes from voting. The insane, the felon, those who do not register, females, minors, and others. Many of the States have property and educational qualifications. In all these States no sound mind would question the validity of existing State government for that reason. Some of the States of the Union elect Congressmen by an average vote of 40,000. There are States in the Union where nine-tenths of the qualified electors vote. In others very little over one-third of the qualified electors find their way to the ballot box. Still it is a time of peace there. The courts are open for the transaction of business. Judgments against felons, taking, it may be, the life of the felon, are executed, and no one questions the existence of a State government there. So with these islands. They have restrictions on the right of suffrage. These are very numerous, probably wisely so. Whether wisely or not, the blessings of the present Government there are showered on all alike, and all are acquiescing in this authority, recognizing it and supporting it.

But suppose it should turn out that we have not treated with the proper authorities there. Suppose, for the argument, President Dole is not the legal President. Then how stands the case? If we get peaceful possession thereof, what government on earth has a better title? Once peaceably in possession, with the consent of the people now in possession, the rapidity with which the great natural defenses that exist there may be made available will soon plant the American flag there so deep and strong that it will not be shaken by the unfriendly breath of other powers. Indeed, with a little outlay of revenue the mighty marble and granite mountains, against which the waves of the ocean have been lashing ever since time began without subduing them, will become the mighty Gibraltar of this Republic.

The advantages accruing to a nation of possessing points desirable for military operations are indeed great. Look at the rock of Gibraltar, once owned by Spain, but since 1704 by England. The combined fleets of France and Spain spent their fury against the English garrison occupying Gibraltar for three years and seven months. From 1779 to 1783 the attention of the world was fixed on this great struggle. But while this wonderful fleet, with many thousands of soldiers, perished in the assault, only sixteen of the garrison defending Gibraltar perished.

Thus it appears that the advantages of a strong military post to any nation can not be estimated. It is said, however, that the mission of our great Republic is one of peace. Still, the infirmities that belong to humanity in general are seen in this Republic. All nations must have war. Foreign war is the natural motion of a nation. It seems that without war every generation the nation becomes diseased. If even this Republic is deprived of this motion, foreign war, for a century it would probably be assailed by that most dreaded national distemper—civil war. Foreign war, if successful, strengthens a nation and the heroic spirit of its people.

Civil war injures a nation, like the fever heat that takes away the light and life of the eye of the natural body. All the nations of the earth are subject to this law of natural motion, as much as it is to be deplored. No nation can be truly great, it seems, whose business is not largely of the heroic character. Our Republic has not yet secured the blessings of universal peace to mankind; indeed, can not do so. It may be that with us, as other nations, we can be greatest when we have the greatest number of citizens able to wear a helmet. The results of the war with Spain may require further demands on the martial spirit of our people.

The annexation of Hawaii and the conversion of its mountains into an American Gibraltar is probably the wisest thought of the President and our War Department. It does not follow that we are to extend our possessions by conquest. The Philippine Islands need not be added. I should say must not be annexed at all. Still the United States should not pay the expense of this war when we are victorious. It may be that we will have to rely upon the possession of the Philippine Islands for a while as a means of war indemnity. I have read somewhere of the expression, a "bayonet mortgage."

The people of these United States will never consent to the payment of the expenses of this war which the cruelties of Spain on the island of Cuba and the unparalleled atrocity of the crime of Spain in the harbor of Havana in blowing up the Maine made necessary. In enforcing our just demands for indemnity and for wars in the future, the causes of which are now unseen, the possession of the Hawaiian Islands is a military necessity. All nations of the earth, it seems, are strengthening their navies. The "web-footed warriors," as President Lincoln called them, may be in great demand in the future.

Although it has been the prayer of the best thinkers of the world for six thousand years that the spears shall be beaten into pruning hooks and the swords into plowshares, still the great warriors of all countries are its worshiped heroes, almost as much so to-day as they have been at any period of the world's history. A display of courage such as Admiral Dewey, Ensign Worth Bagley, and Richmond Pearson Hobson proved themselves to possess will ever be ranked among the noblest qualities of the soul.

Amid the earthly glory that attends the achievements of the hero, the distresses and calamities of wars lose their horrors. All the old nations of the world have overproduction of human muscle. They want employment for their surplus population. Add the glory of arms to the necessity for employment, and the profession of arms, even in this enlightened civilization of the world, may in the future as in the past be the greatest business of life.

That these United States may be able to command the respect of all the warlike powers of the earth and be absolutely secure against foreign invasion, and to possess the ability to protect the nation's honor when assailed, I think it the part of wisdom and prudence to accept the proposition of the Republic of Hawaii to become a part of these United States. I shall therefore vote for these resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HITT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, if we shall determine to annex the Hawaiian Islands, it is by no means true, as has been claimed here, that it will be a reversal of American policy, nor do we mean to enter upon any career of conquest or imperial expansion. These islands will be taken for self-defense in order to retain and keep their civilization and our peace. They lie so close to our own country and to the continent which we protect that it would not be safe to allow them to go into other hands. We shall take and keep them as an outpost, chiefly because they are already being invaded, not by open warfare, but by the stronger though more insidious forces which attend the movement unto them of the hosts of Asia.

The objections which are taken to the annexation of the islands seem to be threefold. It is insisted that it is unconstitutional for the United States to annex territory; that such annexation must be effected by treaty and not, as now proposed, by statute; and that, in any event, annexation is not now politic or wise.

We may deal rather briefly with the questions of constitutional power, and of the form of the measure. It is rather late to talk about the constitutional power of the United States to annex territory.

The United States is itself a monument of such annexation. The thirteen original settlements along the Atlantic coast have become an empire, extending from ocean to ocean.

Puritan, Cavalier, and Huguenot reached toward the West for a hundred years before the Constitution was adopted that, it is now alleged, prohibited such annexation.

Mr. Speaker, the power to annex territory certainly belonged to the English colonies before the Revolution. George Washington led the forces of Virginia that extended its boundaries to the Ohio. Other States, by the force of American energy and American colonization, carried their boundaries west among the Indian tribes until they came to the Mississippi. Those colonies at the Revolution retained the sovereign power of annexing territory, in order to the expansion of their institutions, holding it as territory until it could be Americanized and formed into States.

When the Constitution was adopted did that power remain with the States or did it go to the United States? The strictest constructionist will say that it went to one or the other. Did it remain with the States? Can Oregon or California go outside the bounds of the United States to take in Alaska or the Sandwich Islands? Certainly not. It is inconsistent with the principle that all foreign affairs are put into the hands of the United States, with the power of war and peace and treaty. As said by Chief Justice Marshall, we have the power to make war and therefore to annex by conquest. We have the power to make treaties and therefore to annex by treaty. Such action by a State would be absolutely inconsistent with the delegation to the United States of the control over foreign affairs. The power to deal with such questions as these must be incident to that control.

The Union alone, therefore, could acquire new territory.

But the States went even further. They found that the holding of their Western lands was inconsistent with their functions as States. Georgia held the territory now covered by Alabama and Mississippi. Virginia held Kentucky and Tennessee. Ohio, I believe, held the Northwest Territory. These States found that the holding of these Western possessions was inconsistent with the functions of the State. So evident was this, so impossible was it for the States to deal with the Indian, French, and English disputes which were constantly arising upon our frontiers, that those States actually turned over to the United States all the territory which they had possessed and with which they were unable to deal properly. Their Western lands were then taken and held by the United States as territory, because this policy was necessary for the common defense and to promote the general welfare.

This action gave a practical construction to the constitutional power of the Union to hold and acquire territories.

Then came the Louisiana purchase. President Jefferson believed that under the Constitution there was no power to acquire territory. But he deemed it a military necessity to possess the mouth of the Mississippi and the city of New Orleans. He thought this necessary as outpost appanage and outlet for the Union, much as Hawaii is now deemed necessary. He therefore sent commissioners to Paris to acquire such outpost by purchase.

And when Napoleon offered the vastly greater territory then known as Louisiana, extending across the continent from the Mississippi to Oregon, his common sense determined that, although he deemed it unconstitutional, it was for the public welfare.

Jefferson thought that an amendment to the Constitution would be necessary to indemnify Congress and himself for this breach of the Constitution.

No such amendment was passed, and afterwards he himself suggested that it should not be brought forward.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have not time to yield, as I have only ten minutes. But as I was quoting from Mr. Jefferson, I will give his words.

In a letter to Mr. Breckinridge, he remarks:

The Constitution has made no provision for our holding foreign territory, still less for incorporating foreign nations into our Union. The executive, in seizing the fugitive occurrence which so much advances the good of their country, have done an act beyond the Constitution. The legislature, in casting behind them metaphysical subtleties and risking themselves like faithful servants, must ratify and pay for it and throw themselves on their country for doing for them unauthorized what we know they would have done for themselves had they been in a situation to do it. But we shall not be disavowed by the nation, and their act of indemnity will confirm and not weaken the Constitution by more strongly marking out its lines.

With this view of the Constitution, he contemplated an amendment which would authorize his act. No such amendment took place. The treaty sanctioned by the President, Senate, and House of Representatives was acquiesced in by the people and soon ceased to be a disputed question either of constitutionality or expediency.

It was soon seen that what had been done for defense and self-protection was also well to be justified by the opening which it made for the growth of the nation. And as the tide poured westward by the flatboat and prairie wagon, and was followed by the railroad, the telegraph, and all the wondrous chains that link together the present nation, we no longer question whether the United States had the power to annex territory. The question has been settled. We annexed Louisiana by treaty. We admitted Texas as a State by act of Congress, overriding the allegiance claimed by Mexico. We took California and New Mexico by war and by the treaty of peace which followed it. We bought many more hundred square miles in the Gadsden purchase, and we finally acquired the vast and unknown regions of Alaska. The constitutional question may well be regarded as settled. It is only the antediluvian that will dispute the power of the United States to annex territory. Louisiana, that was acquired as a military necessity (as we speak of Hawaii now as a military outpost), has proved itself to be the great theatre for the energies of the American people. Even Alaska, a place of ice and rocks, is thronged by thousands.

Nor does there seem to be difficulty about annexation by act of Congress. An act of Congress is the highest and most solemn act of Government, and it may well be said that such an act may do whatever a treaty may do. The separate treaty-making power does not seem to have been established because Congress could not make treaties by law, but because it was deemed to be often inconvenient that international negotiations should be given the publicity which attends the passage of an act of Congress. It seemed so necessary that such secret negotiation should take place that the President was given the power to make treaties, with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided that two-thirds of the Senators present concur, and it was further provided that the Constitution and laws made in pursuance thereof and all treaties made under its authority should be the supreme law of the land. But it is well to be seen that the treaty-making power is only a supplement to the lawmaking power, a supplemental means of making a law; and while it is not expedient that Congress should invade negotiations carried on by the President or attempt to pass laws as to foreign affairs where he does not lead, the jurisdiction of Congress to pass such laws under the lead of the President is undoubted.

A declaration of war is such a law. The lines are not and can not be exactly and exclusively drawn with reference to great governmental powers covering such subjects. The jurisdictions overlap. Congress had to pass the appropriations which made the treaties for the purchase of Louisiana and Alaska effective. Congress may declare war, and then the President, with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senators present, may make a peace which may nullify that declaration. It seems beyond question that the Congress that could have declared war to obtain New Orleans and the mouth of the Mississippi could likewise have passed an act to annex that territory without war.

The treaty-making power and that of Congress may be concurrent in jurisdiction. But such concurrent jurisdiction is sometimes the salvation of free government.

It seems hardly necessary, however, to suggest that Congress has concurrent power over this matter with the treaty-making power, because it may fairly be claimed that the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands can rightly be done only by act of Congress, and that a treaty would be ineffective to produce the result. France, Mexico, or Russia could dispose of part of its territory by treaty. France, Mexico, and Russia still remain, and the treaties between the United States and these several powers are the warrants for our holding this land. It is well understood to be a proper exercise of the treaty-making power that a nation may contract to sell part of its lands which another wishes to buy, but it may well be doubted whether a government can by treaty contract itself out of existence. There is force in the suggestion made that the Hawaiian Government may not have power constitutionally to turn its whole country over to the United States. It may acquiesce, it may agree, but the authority over these islands will not be derived from that agreement so much as from the act of the United States in taking possession. If it were unwilling; if, for example, the government of a native queen were proscribing and beheading Americans in the island, as Her Majesty once proposed, an act of Congress would annex this island by a declaration of war. But as the Queen is not in power, when the Government of the island and the forces therein that make for civilization and progress ask the country from which those forces sprang to take possession, we may do this act, not as a treaty, but as an act of the United States through its Congress to provide for the common defense and to promote the general welfare, as well as the welfare of these islands.

It seems to me that it can not be wholly done by treaty, and must be done by act of Congress, as every other annexation was finally done, when Congress appropriated the money. It may be well urged, as it has been urged on the other side, that no government can commit political suicide; that no government can surrender all its land, all its possessions, all its government to be mere territory. They can acquiesce, if they believe that it is for the best interests of their civilization; but it is an act of the United States. As it is, there is a government with American civilization in those islands which has maintained itself. All the civilizing influences in that land appeal to us to take them in. This we do. We take the islands, not by war, but by peace, but for the same purpose that might have led us to declare war and which justify peaceful annexation.

Now, one thing more. Shall we do it? I am not one of those who wish conquest; I am not one of those who wish a colony like India, which is only a thorn in the side of Great Britain. But when we find lands that are closer to us than any other nation, with an American civilization which is being invaded by the Orient, by Chinese and Japanese, and which finds itself in a condition where it must fail unless it has the help of its own parents, when I find a population less than any of our middle-size cities throughout the country, I see no danger in annexation. [Applause.]

We have thus come to the third branch of the inquiry, the wisdom and policy of annexation. This has been too well stated and by too many to bear repetition here. The civilization of those islands is American, and there are those of us who remember when their Sunday-school mites went to carry missionaries in the missionary bark Morning Star to these various islands. Hawaii is too near to us to be safely allowed to fall into the hands of some great military power, whose naval station there would be valuable as the only base from which operations could be carried on against this continent. The Pacific is too wide otherwise to be crossed by naval expeditions, while the distance from Hawaii to our shores is short to the modern battle ship and transport.

But we are told to let things be as they are, to protect simply and preserve the status quo. The answer is plain. The invasion of these islands has begun, and the status quo can not be maintained. The native race is dying out; it is not one-tenth of what it used to be. The adult Chinese and Japanese together are more numerous than the natives. The hordes from which they come are inexhaustible. The lands are rich and the civilization which we placed there is in danger. The population is small, 100,000 in all. The islands are large and fertile and in the higher ground have a temperate climate. American immigration would quickly make them truly American, but such immigration can not be expected unless they be under the American flag. The question is not one of conquest, but of colonization.

It was the same question whether Louisiana should be French or American, and whether California should be Spanish or American, and it is now the question whether these islands, really an integral part of the American continent, shall be American and Americanized or shall belong to the Orient and be Chinese or Japanese. Mr. Speaker, I wish no possession that we can not Americanize. I wish nothing where the population is so large that a final difference must be made between the colonist and the homeborn. We wish no such question as Spain has made with Cuba; none such as England, in spite of her liberal laws, has now with India because of its enormous native population. To England India is rather a weakness. England's strength lies in her English-speaking colonies—Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and the Cape.

These colonies, like our own land, were at one time the home of various savage races, but English immigration has made them now more English in sentiment than England itself. What difference did it make to us that California and Louisiana contained many thousands of Spanish and French? We know their presence now only in a few names of people and places. California, Texas, and Louisiana are American; territory at first, they no sooner came under our flag than they were filled with our people. It is not a question of climate. Who would have believed that Florida would become the most Northern in its population of any Southern State, and that its orange groves and health resorts would be filled with people from the North? Exactly the same results are to be expected in these lovely islands, whose beauty of climate and scenery call to our people to come and occupy, and whose residents cry out to us to give them a stable government, an American population, and American institutions.

But there is one other reason which seems to me to be conclusive. We are at war. A patriotic Executive has the conduct of that war. He tells us that the acquisition of these islands is necessary as a war measure and for self-defense. If I differed on that question, I would yield my judgment to his. It is not a mere question of geography. While I am interested in the distances of Asia from America via Hawaii and the Aleutian Islands, I do not believe that the routes of commerce or the necessities of government can be wholly decided by measuring the globe with red tape. As to whether it is a proper war measure or not, I think that in time of war the President's opinion should govern. I might hesitate in this conclusion if I found reasons to the contrary—if, for instance, we were asked to take responsibility for millions of people, if it were a question of conquest from another power, or if it were an unsettling of the bonds that must prevail between nations. But when it is the only means to preserve present conditions; when it is the only way to fill these islands with the men who constitute a state; when this annexation is not a conquest or subjugation of others, but a continuation of our established policy of opening new lands to the colonial energy of the great colonizing nation of the century, then the fact that it is now a political and military necessity is only aided by the other circumstances, and we can but wonder at the antediluvian and thorough stupidity which can hesitate—much more, which can gravely declare that the United States can not constitutionally annex territory, and that she can not do this act by act of Congress.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the resolutions now before the House and hope the time is not far distant when the contention over this question of annexation will be affirmatively settled. The question has been before the people so long that the popular mind is fully made up to acquire these islands, and through them hold for all time the key of the Pacific Ocean. Gentlemen opposed to the resolutions may delay annexation for a few days or weeks, but the popular demand for their acceptance by this Government is as irresistible as the flow of the tides, and before this session of Congress closes the resolutions will have passed both Houses of Congress and received the approval of the President. The present war has emphasized their importance. Without them we could not send troops to aid Dewey in crushing the power of Spain in the Philippines.

If the Government of Hawaii had declared neutrality, we could only coal to reach our shores, not to steam away from them. The statesmen of the past have recognized their great value to this country and looked forward to the time when we could get possession of them. Every improvement in steam and electricity has made them more important to us. The fathers have been quoted as opposed to any acquisition of such territory; but all such quotations have been from expressions made one hundred years ago. Then wind was the propelling power on the ocean. No proclamation of neutrality could deprive us of power to sail our ships. The breeze that threw out the folds of our flag filled the sails of our ships of commerce and of war, and our great naval commanders could go to any quarter of the globe and fight the battles of the Republic.

Paul Jones and Hull and Decatur could invade the English Channel, remain on the high seas, or fight the pirates of Algiers without fear of being unable to continue their voyages. Wind is no longer depended on. Our great war ships have mighty engines depending on coal to furnish the power to make them effective, and all the great nations have declared coal contraband of war. A ship without coal is as helpless in war as a ship without powder.

It is about 7,000 miles from San Francisco to the Philippines or Hongkong. No ship can go from our coast and return without having some place to coal. Very few of our battle ships can even cross the Pacific Ocean without coaling on the voyage out. This being true, the power controlling the Hawaiian Islands controls the trade of the Pacific Ocean; and if we control them, we have the best possible safeguard for our own coast. I imagine every gentleman in this House would oppose with the entire force of this nation any attempt on the part of any other nation to take possession of the islands. To my mind we must either take them or see them drift under the flag of another power. They are too weak to stand alone. Other nations want them and, if the opportunity comes, will seize them. That would mean war, and with the United States at a fearful disadvantage.

Hawaii will owe Spain an indemnity if we refuse to pass these resolutions. She has harbored our transports and furnished coal to our war vessels. As a nation she becomes liable for damages. We settled this question when we collected $15,000,000 from Great Britain after the close of our civil war. We can not now take the other side of the question. Look at the map now before the Speaker's desk. See the islands a little over 2,000 miles from our shores and on the line of travel from the Occident to the Orient, and answer to the future, how can you vote against acquiring these valuable possessions? How refuse to take them as a free gift? The founders of this Republic were progressive men. They were far in advance of their time. If the same great intellects were to-day in active participation in public affairs, they would look to the future and not to the past.

The civilization of the islands is American. It is true there are thousands of Japanese there, but they are not permanent settlers. Their eyes are always turned to their native land where all their kindred live. A few years under our laws and customs will see them few in numbers. Almost without exception they came without their wives or children. In fact, Mr. Speaker, they came in large numbers to overawe the feeble Government and present the islands to the Kingdom of Japan. Why fear the power of this great people to take these islands and make them still stronger American in citizenship? How can there be danger to 75,000,000 of free and intelligent people in throwing the shield of their Republic over 100,000 people already dominated by American ideas?

Mr. President, when Jefferson concluded the Louisiana purchase, the same cry went up from the alarmists of that day. We were introducing a foreign element that would destroy the Government. The fight kept up until 1825. How is it to-day? The great States from the mouth of the Mississippi River to the north line of Minnesota and the broad prairies of Iowa, Nebraska, and other States answer. Every man in the United States rejoices in the fact that Jefferson was sagacious enough to seize the opportunity to purchase this territory. Of what interest now the tiresome debates as to the unconstitutionality of his act? The opposition is thrown with the rubbish of the past. The act of the President now has universal commendation.

The same is true of the acquisition of Texas and of the territory added as a result of the Mexican war. If the timid souls had been able to direct the destiny of the Republic, California would to-day be foreign territory. I do not believe decay or death comes from proper expansion. The Anglo-Saxon race must grow. England, if cooped up on the islands known as Great Britain, would not be a fourth-class power. Centuries ago her statesmen opened the way for her children, until the English race is to-day found in every clime and her colonies present the grandest system of governments, outside of our own, to be found on earth.

Canada, British Columbia, Australia, and others make of England one of the greatest powers of the earth. The fact that she has coaling stations for her vessels in every sea keeps her equal in naval power to all the other nations combined. We have developed and grown wonderfully in the past, but not by fearing expansion. We started out with less than 900,000 square miles of territory. We have now about 3,600,000 square miles under our flag; grown to almost four times our original size. The great development of the future will come from our building up commerce on the sea.

If we refuse to provide the means to defend our commerce, this added wealth to the nation will never come. In fact, a great merchant marine will be an element of weakness if we do not carry with it adequate protection. The fear of injury to our commerce will make us submit to wrong rather than risk loss. If for no other purpose, we should annex these islands to protect our Pacific coast. General Schofield strongly indorses the necessity of this Government acquiring these islands, saying, among other things:

We spent three months on the islands and made a careful survey of Pearl River Harbor and visited the other islands, and obtained the knowledge that that was the only harbor in the islands to be considered in respect to military and naval matters, and we found it to be of exceedingly great value. Its natural adaptability to naval purposes is perhaps not surpassed by any harbor in the world. In regard to its secure anchorage for large fleets, its distance from the sea, beyond the reach of the guns of war ships, and the great ease with which the entrance to the harbor could be defended by batteries, so as to make it a perfectly safe refuge for merchant shipping or naval cruisers, or even a fleet which might find it necessary under any circumstances to take refuge there; for coaling grounds, for navy-yard repair shops, storehouses, and everything of that kind.

The most important feature of all is that it economizes the naval force rather than increases it. It is capable of absolute defense by shore batteries; so that a naval fleet, after going there and replenishing its supplies and making what repairs are needed, can go away and leave the harbor perfectly safe under the protection of the Army. Then arises at once the question why this harbor will be of consequence to the United States. It has not been easy to make that perfectly clear to the minds of men who have not made such subjects the study of a lifetime till now; but the conditions of the present war, it seems to me, ought to make it clear to everybody.

At this moment the Government is fitting out quite a large fleet of steamers at San Francisco to carry large detachments of troops and military supplies of all kinds to the Philippine Islands. Honolulu is almost in the direct route. That fleet, of course, will want very much to recoal at Honolulu, thus saving that amount of freight and tonnage for essential stores to be carried with it. Otherwise they would have to carry coal enough to carry them all the way from San Francisco to Manila, and that would occupy a large amount of the carrying capacity of the fleet; and if they recoal at Honolulu, all that will be saved. More than that, a fleet is liable at any time to meet with stress of weather, or perhaps a heavy storm, and there might be an accident to the machinery which will make it necessary to put into the nearest port possible for repairs and additional supplies. By the time it reaches there its coal supply may be well-nigh exhausted; it then has to replenish its coal supply to carry it to whatever port it could reach.

Of course this subject may be extended indefinitely—the value of that harbor as a place of refuge in time of war for merchant ships which might be pursued by cruisers, or a place to replenish the supplies of our own cruisers. They are of infinite value to the United States, or to any country which may oppose them for such purposes, but the great military point is the one I made twenty-five years ago, and I have not ceased to insist upon it at all proper times from that time to this, that to guard our Pacific coast against the possibility of a naval power taking possession of those islands and make them a base of operations against our Pacific coast, the one thing necessary to be done is for the United States to acquire them, improve that harbor, fortify it, and make it perfectly secure and hold it forever.

Admiral Walker indorses all General Schofield says as to the necessity of our acquiring these islands. These two men have made a life study of war on land and sea, and their mature judgment should have weight with this Congress and the American people.

This Congress has decided that the Spanish flag shall be removed from Cuba and Puerto Rico. Gentlemen fear the lust of conquest is leading us on. The annexation of Hawaii was decreed by the logic of the situation before war with Spain was declared. What we shall do with the Philippines, with Cuba, or with Puerto Rico will be decided when peace is declared.

The decision will be reached in a proper way and at the proper time. We are not dealing with that question now. One thing I hope may be predicted, and that is that none of them will ever pass into the control of a power which can ever be hostile to us. For myself, I believe that if they are not kept under our flag they will be established in the family of republics and look to us for all time as their protector and friend. The starry emblem of this Republic will bless the islands of the sea as it protected and prospered the lands lying between the two great oceans. The future generations will indorse our action in passing these resolutions as we to-day ratify and indorse the action of those who have gone before in adding territory and giving us our present imperial domain.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I have weighed carefully the arguments presented in the different reports by committees of Congress favoring annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States and especially the report of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. It seems to me that everything that could be said for annexation has been presented in these reports and also in the able and ingenious speech of the chairman of the committee. But, sir, I do not find in these enough to satisfy my judgment or to remove the strong and valid objections to the measure. Test these arguments and appeals by the logic of facts, and they fall to the ground.

HAWAII NOT ESSENTIAL AS A COALING STATION.

The most plausible of all the pleas for annexation is the claim that these islands would be necessary as a coaling station in this war now raging and for the future. Why, sir, this argument was fully and completely demolished by the speech of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] on Saturday. He demonstrated by figures and authority that could not be denied that the route to Yokohama, Hongkong, and Manila, by the way of the Aleutian Islands, of Alaska, which is our own territory, is 800 miles nearer than by the way of Honolulu, that there is abundance of anchorage there, and that it is open there all the year.

Here you have your coaling station already provided to your hand. We have not improved it for this purpose, but then, after having for a number of years the right to perfect your coaling station at Pearl Harbor in the Sandwich Islands, you have demonstrated by your neglect that you did not deem the matter to be of any serious importance; and yet you have had, long ago, the opinion of military and naval experts as to the adoption of Pearl Harbor as a naval station.

THE USEFUL COLLIER.

Sir, there is a coaling station which we can use whenever we will, which we are now about to use for the monitors Monterey and Monadnock, and which all modern ships of war can use at will. It is the collier, the vessel specially adapted to carry coal. There is hardly a day in the Pacific when it can not be safely employed. You carry your coaling station with you. So, sir, there is no occasion for haste, none for hysterics, nor for a departure from our old and honored policies. We have a right to a coaling station at Pearl Harbor. We may improve it if we choose, and well have we paid for it in giving the freedom of our ports to Hawaiian products. But, sir, I rejoice to think that we are not dependent on Hawaii for coal. As for it being used as a base of operations against the United States, I regard the idea as preposterous. What power would do so? What power could do so?

It is urged by the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee that Hawaii has violated her neutrality in our favor in this way, and that after the war is over, or before, she will be amenable by their displeasure. To which one, pray? Not Spain, for we will settle up all questions with Spain ere we finish the war. Who then is to punish Hawaii? Germany or France? Does any sane man suppose that on such a pretense or for such a reason as this Germany or France would singly risk a war with the United States?

HAWAII IN NO DANGER FROM FOREIGN POWERS.

Is there any man in our midst so ignorant of conditions to-day in Europe as to imagine Germany and France combining to chastise Hawaii and thereby provoking a war with the United States? Is Sedan forgotten? Is the capture and conquest of Alsace and Lorraine forgotten, or even forgiven? All this argument is based in the wildest and emptiest of chimeras and an utter ignorance of the relations, the jealousy, and the hates and rivalries of European States. In order to combine, nations must have a common interest.

UNMERITED ASSAULTS ON THE SPEAKER REBUKED.

The absence of any really valid arguments for annexation has driven its friends in other quarters than the House to violent and gross assaults upon those who differ with them. Individual gentlemen are bitterly and rancorously assailed because they decline to become partisans of this measure. They are even called traitors and disloyal. One of the most conspicuous victims of this species of assault is the Speaker of the House. Justly regarded as one of the ablest men of his party, its favorite repeatedly for one of the highest offices of our Government, the memory of his great services to his party and of his leadership has not availed to protect him in this House and his motives from being aspersed. And yet his only crime in the matter is that God having given him an intellect to weigh public questions, he has refused to jump at the crack of somebody's whip. I am not his defender. He does not need my help. I mention the fact merely to show the utter lack of fairness and wisdom on the part of those most active in favor of annexation, and their lack of fair and valid arguments.

But this is not all. We are told, sir, that the sugar trust is making the opposition to Hawaiian annexation. Sir, I speak for a population both white and black who are engaged in the production of cane sugar. We have no cause to love the sugar trusts. They are our competitors in the market. We grow and refine American sugars under many disadvantages growing out of a fluctuating and often unfair, inadequate revenue duty on raw sugars. The sugar trust reaches out its hand to Cuba, Demerara, Hawaii, the East, South, and the West for cheap raw sugars. It wants them duty free, if possible, and if not duty free, then as cheap as possible.

So, therefore, their interests and ours conflict. Does any man suppose that this trust which wants cheap sugars to refine from the West Indies, South America, and the East Indies would not welcome the introduction of cheap raw sugar from Hawaii? Their interest is all that way. I have not seen their hand in this fight, but if it does exert an influence it will be quietly and steadily exerted in favor of annexation, for by annexation the Hawaiian product would be only grist to their mill.

It is suggested, I know, in the committee report that sugar would, in case of annexation, be refined on the Hawaiian Islands, and would come into competition with the refined sugar of the trust. Such an idea as this would not be entertained by anyone who had ever made a study of this subject. The refineries of the sugar trust, with their advantages of ample capital, skilled labor, established markets, and machinery of distribution, have nothing to fear from the petty, feeble competition of the Hawaiian refineries. There is no strife there. The sugar trust will get the raw sugars of Hawaii, if they want them at all, and will do the refining if it suits them to do so.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman from Louisiana allow me a question?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman if the representative of the sugar trust is not now in Washington doing everything he can to defeat the Hawaiian annexation?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. No representative of the sugar trust is in Washington, to my knowledge. If there be one here, I have not met or heard of him.

Mr. GAINES. Who is the representative; what is his name?

Mr. SULZER. Oxnard.

Mr. GAINES. Where is his headquarters?

Mr. SULZER. I do not know; but it is published in the paper, in the Public Intelligencer, that you have on your desk, and it says it will be a hard fight to pass it in the Senate.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I know that Mr. Oxnard, whom the gentleman names, is a representative of a large beet-sugar industry and establishment in Nebraska, and also that he is interested in a very large agricultural and industrial plant in the State of Louisiana, which grows and manufactures cane sugar. Beyond that I know nothing of his connections or bearings.

Mr. SULZER. Does that influence the Louisiana delegation?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Speaking as far as I can for other members of the Louisiana delegation, I may safely say that they are influenced only so far as any member of the House can honorably be influenced by what he considers to be the interests of his constituents and the State he represents; and speaking for myself, I would say that if the State of Louisiana did not grow a single stalk of sugar cane or produce one pound of sugar, I would still maintain the position I do, because of the general principle involved in this resolution and the dangerous results that, in my judgment, would follow its enactment into law.

Mr. GAINES. Does the gentleman from New York mean to impute to me that because this paper was lying on my desk, which came in my morning mail, that my vote or position on this question was affected by it?

Mr. SULZER. Not at all. I say it is so charged in the paper, that the representative of the sugar trust is here and—

Mr. GAINES. If he is here trying to control legislation, he ought to be kicked out of town; and if he comes about me trying to control my vote, I will do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I can not, for my time is brief. Since the gentleman from New York has injected the name of Mr. Oxnard into this debate, I want to say I know he is opposed to the annexation resolution as a representative of the beet-sugar growers of this country and because their interests would be seriously and adversely affected. I believe always in fostering the industries of this country to the exclusion of those of other countries, and any project which would injure the progress of our agricultural interests, be it in relation to sugar or any other, can not secure my advocacy.

THE REAL FIGHT BETWEEN THE AMERICAN SUGAR FARMERS AND THE SUGAR TRUST.

No, sir; the fight is not there. There is no fight between the sugar trust and the Hawaiian sugar planters, who are clamorous for obtaining annexation and the American market. The real fight is between the cane-sugar growers of Louisiana and the beet-sugar growers of Nebraska, California, Colorado, and other States, who are interested in preserving the present status of affairs on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the enormous aggregation of capital and skill known as the sugar trust, with their natural allies in Hawaii and other tropical countries.

And right here permit me to read a protest which fortifies my position very clearly:

In the name of the farmers of America we respectfully appeal to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

First. We solemnly protest against hasty consideration in Congress of the treaty of annexation with Hawaii.

Second. We most urgently request that this subject be treated with the deliberation its vital importance deserves, thus affording the people of the United States sufficient time to inform the honorable Congress of their views.

Third. The farmers of this country oppose annexation. The sentiment among them against it is well-nigh unanimous. Their opposition is based upon the highest patriotism and most disinterested motives—the national welfare, political justice.

Fourth. In addition to these reasons for its defeat, the farmers recognize that annexation would seriously interfere with the otherwise promising development of our domestic beet-sugar and cane-sugar industry. Already the bare possibility of annexation has called a halt to numerous sugar-factory enterprises, which had promised a home market to farmers for a new and profitable crop. Defeat annexation and you remove the last obstacle in the way of enabling American agriculture, capital, and labor to produce the $100,000,000 worth of sugar annually imported heretofore.

That the above truthfully and moderately expresses the earnest desires of the farmers of this nation will in due course be respectfully demonstrated to the complete satisfaction of the honorable Congress.

Done this 13th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1897, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-first, and in the first year of the era of our independence of foreign sugar.

Respectfully submitted.

THE AMERICAN SUGAR GROWERS' SOCIETY.

By its officers:

R. M. ALLEN,

President, Ames, Nebr.

(Also president Nebraska Beet-Sugar Growers' Association.)

C. A. FARWELL,

Vice-President, New Orleans, La.

(Also president American Cane Growers' Association of the United States.)

HERBERT MYRICK,

Treasurer, 52 Lafayette Place, New York City.

(Also president Orange Judd Company, and editor American Agriculturist, of New York; Orange Judd Farmer, of Chicago, and the New England Homestead, of Springfield.)

R. W. SNOW,

Secretary, Marquette Building, Chicago, Ill.

[SEAL.]

Why, sir, should Louisiana, why should the rising growth of the beet-sugar industry in this country, be sacrificed in order to swell the profits of a few planters in Hawaii? There are 500,000 people in Louisiana dependent on the sugar industry. The laborers are all blacks, 400,000 at least. You pretended to be their friends when you gave them suffrage. Now you give them a stone, and your heart goes out to a horde of Asiatics, Japanese, Chinese, and others working under contracts—a state of quasi slavery. The "man and brother" must go to the wall while you cultivate your new friends and find fresh materials wherewith to construct the temple of freedom.

Alas, sir, it is not a temple of freedom you seek to construct. You would not take Asiatics for that purpose. Your real scheme is to build an empire on the ruins of your old republic, of which you appear to be ashamed, and if you are to have an empire—a colonial system—you can not have a better start than a dependency composed of Asiatics and contract laborers.

I deny that you can have a colonial system, with inferior and mongrel races and mongrel governments, and standing armies to hold and defend them, without giving up your grand American system of free government with limited powers, State rights, local self-government, and individual freedom. This proposition is self-evident. It requires no argument and no elucidation.

Take this first fatal step and you can not recall it. Much of error we have corrected. Much that may hereafter be you can correct. But when this step shall be taken, you are irrevocably pledged to a system of colonies and empire. There are no foot-steps backward. You may have grandeur. Will you retain liberty?

WE SHOULD DEVELOP DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLES.

Is there nothing better? Is there nothing to point the aspirations of our people? I think there is. I do not desire weakness as a people. I rejoice in our strength and growth. We are strong enough to pursue a grand and a glorious destiny. We can be easily the first power of the world if to ourselves only we be true. There are two things I would suggest, one a foreign policy, the other domestic. I have time only to glance briefly at both. In respect to our domestic policy, what is better to develop our happiness and liberty and growth than the cardinal policies of the Democratic party—a respect for the rights of the people and the States, the union of the States, a reverence for the Federal Constitution, an avoidance and hatred of class legislation, low taxation, no monopolies, no bounties to individuals or to classes, no effort to enrich any man at the expense of his neighbor; order, peace, and justice? The doctrines of Jefferson and the fathers, of the most eminent statesmen of the present generation, these will injure no man, but will benefit, bless, and advance the Republic. Under this system there is no limit to our growth; we can then defy all our enemies; we can open a hope for all our people; we can eclipse the glories of any empire of the past or the present; we can command peace and appal any country that would dare be a wrongdoer at our expense. In all this grand chart of progress there are no blood stains, no tears of orphan or widow, no standing armies, no doom for the poor or the humble man aspiring to earn his bread and live in the fear of God.

Thus living and moving we shall have the respect of foreign powers. We shall be strong and we shall not want for friends. We may not join in the vulgar scramble for foreign territory or partake in the partition of Spain or Asia, but we are free to seek foreign markets, and we may say to foreign nations frankly and firmly that we will not allow their schemes of conquest or ambition to shut us out from markets that are fairly ours. We may say that the vast and growing trade of China belongs as fairly to us as to other countries, and that while we do not covet one foot of her soil we will not allow ourselves to be excluded from its commerce. We may not fight to have colonies, dependencies, and subjects, but we may take a start for free access to markets that are ours fairly by our position and growth on the Pacific Ocean. In such a contest we shall have the cooperation of at least one great and powerful nation. We stand only for what is just and right.

I shall not follow out this line of thought, but I submit it as a counter project to the miserable game of grab and incorporation of Asiatics and Malays into a free representative republic, which, if it is to remain great and honored, free and happy, must be a white man's government. I prefer the republican government of our fathers to this scheme of empire and of greed which is sought to be fastened on us by false pretense and appeals to our fears. I speak for the best and highest interests of the American people and not for speculators. I speak for the laboring poor; I speak only what all the fathers of our freedom have told us to believe and act upon. I ask you solemnly to listen to their counsels and to follow their footsteps. [Applause.]

RELATIONS OF THE ISLANDS TO THE UNITED STATES.

The relations of these islands to the United States have been a topic of interest to our statesmen for over seventy years. We have had several treaties of reciprocity with Hawaii, one of which is now in operation. We have had several treaties providing for annexation, one of which is now pending in the United States Senate. This treaty has been before the Senate a number of months and, report says, has been fully debated in executive session. It has not been confirmed, and it has not been finally rejected. It is reported that its friends are afraid to bring the treaty to a vote for fear that it will be rejected.

And thus, practically, the treaty project fails. That much, at least, we know, and now the friends of annexation have still another plan. It is to pass a joint resolution providing for annexation. This question is now before us. It may seem to some like a small matter—the annexation of 6,000 or 7,000 square miles of territory in all; and so to some persons at the time of our Revolution in 1775 a penny tax on tea seemed a very small matter; but it involved principles which led our fathers to combat the mightiest power in the world and evoked forces that will live forever. And so to-day this annexation of 7,000 square miles of territory—these little islands of the far Pacific—involves policies and consequences which may change the whole character of our Government. The present war with Spain may be prosecuted to a glorious conclusion, glorious for our arms, and far more glorious for the cause of humanity, for which we have prosecuted the war; and yet it may be that by wise councils this war may be so terminated and closed as to involve no serious change in our Government and general policy as a nation. But, sir, I apprehend that the annexation of Hawaii may involve consequences far more vast than the war with Spain. It will be a new departure. This fact can not be denied by any truthful and well-informed student of our history. We are treading on new and dangerous ground.

OUR OWN PEOPLE'S INTEREST SHOULD BE THE PRIME CONSIDERATION.

Mr. Speaker, I would not attempt to decry the ability of the advocates of annexation in and out of Congress. They have been insistent, earnest, laborious, ingenious, plausible in presenting their case, and for the most part I concede freely their patriotism and honesty of purpose. The report of the accomplished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is a proof of what I have said, and I regret to be compelled to differ from its conclusions. The advocates of annexation have made the most of their case, but notwithstanding their reports, arguments, and the great mass of annexation literature they have presented, their case can not stand the test of common sense and fair logic. Of course we must study the interests of our own people as a paramount object. If we annex Hawaii, it must be done not on merely sentimental reasons, because some four or five thousand Americans have gone there to reside and make money, but for the substantial reason that the step is necessary to the 70,000,000 of this country as a military or naval necessity, or is advantageous to us commercially, and will entail no corresponding evils. Don Quixote has no place in this business.

I believe, sir, that this project would be very much weaker but for the suggestion put forth that this annexation is important to us right now in carrying on the war with Spain. It is also pretended that Hawaii, by allowing our war vessels to coal there, is incurring great danger from some European power. Therefore it is said we must annex her immediately. Both these propositions are flimsy pretenses. I deny them both. From what European power is Hawaii in danger? What power is going to assail her because forsooth she in some small way favors the United States? Spain, indeed, might and would do so, but she has not a single war vessel of any importance in the Pacific Ocean or even in Asiatic waters. She is not able to spare one ship to send to the Philippine Islands. Our own fleet is in possession at Manila. Will any European power venture to affront the United States by attacks upon Hawaii for alleged violation of neutrality? Of course that would involve a war with this country just as surely as if Hawaii were already formally annexed to us. Is Germany or France hunting for a quarrel with us? There is no sign of it—none whatever.

NOT NEEDED FOR NAVAL OPERATIONS.

But how does Hawaii help our naval operations in the Philippine Islands? How is she necessary to our success? Commodore Dewey did his work without help from Hawaii or any foreign power. It is true that we are sending him reinforcements of troops and supplies. There may be some little convenience in our ships stopping at Hawaii for additional coal, but this is really not necessary. The ships and the troops would go to Dewey just as surely as if the islands did not exist. Commercial instincts will secure him coal from citizens of neutral nations just as long as he is able to pay for it. The truth is that the reinforcement of Commodore Dewey is a mere matter of time and administration. Soon it will be an fait accompli. He will be master of the situation, able to occupy the city of Manila and the Island of Luzon and capture the Spanish forces long before an annexation resolution can pass the two Houses of Congress.

The capture of Manila and the destruction of the Spanish fleet was a glorious feat of arms, and we are all proud and glad of it; but if these Philippine Islands had not been assailed by Commodore Dewey our operations in the Antilles would have gone on all the same. It is there that conclusions are to be finally tried between the United States and Spain. The conquest of Cuba and Puerto Rico by our arms is essential. Hawaii is wholly unnecessary to our operations in the Atlantic or in the Pacific. I repeat, sir, that Hawaiian annexation has nothing to do with the case. The scheme of annexation was started long, long ago and defended for reasons and from motives which have nothing to do with our present war with Spain. Sir, I protest against any attempt to use and pervert the patriotic feelings of our people at this time and their desire to free Cuba into an argument for annexing the Hawaiian Islands. If it be true, as some friends of annexation pretend, that Japan and this or that European nation have fixed a greedy eye upon these islands, then this step of annexation, if it had any effect at all, would only tend to array new enemies against us. [Applause.]

GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF OUR COUNTRY A SOURCE OF PRIDE.

Sir, I take pride in the growth and development of this country. I take pride in the fact that we have made great acquisitions of territory and that Democratic Administrations and Southern statesmen have had the leading part in promoting them. Well do I recall the fact that Thomas Jefferson, a Democratic President, acquired the vast Louisiana Territory, out of which many States, including my own State, have been carved and grown into splendid communities. I remember also that New England, which now seems to favor Hawaiian annexation, was largely hostile to the acquisition of Louisiana, and that some of her politicians threatened disunion on that occasion as a mode of resistance. The alternative to the Democratic policy of that day was the barrier of a great European colony, a new France or a Dominion of England interposed as an obstacle to our frontier progress and to the freedom of the Mississippi River. I remember in our history the expedition of Lewis and Clarke, which secured our title to Oregon. I remember the acquisition of Florida, the acquisition of Texas, California, New Mexico—all the work of Democratic Administrations. I can not pause to dwell upon the effects and consequences of these grand acquisitions of territory upon our national growth and present rank as one of the great powers of the world. But, sir, these acquisitions were promoted by wise statesmen, who could compute cost and consequences. It was not the mere vulgar love of conquest. Look through all these grand acquisitions of territory, so potent as steps in our history and progress, and you find two attendant facts—perhaps I ought to say principles. One was that the territory was coterminous with our own. Another fact was that the existing population was so small that it would be an easy matter to fill these territories up with our own people. "Westward the star of empire took its way." As the American people pushed forward their emigration the savage gave way; they carried men of their own blood and race, their own institutions, the schoolhouse, the church, the free press, the trial by jury, representative government—all the monuments of liberty.

The acquisition of the Louisiana Territory gave us homes for our enterprising people, and ultimately communities as States well fitted to enter our system of States, fitted to augment, expand, and strengthen the Union. These States have not proved a weight or a burden or an expense or a curse to us. They have been an added glory and safeguard to the Republic. The same is true of all our acquisitions save one. These lands are full of Americans—forceful, free, energetic, intelligent, liberty-loving. They speak our tongue. They think like the people of the old thirteen States and like the people who have populated the Northwest Territory given by Virginia to the Union. It is barely necessary for me to glance at these facts, for all in my hearing are familiar with them.

I have spoken of one exception. There was just one acquisition made by a statesman, and an ableman, Mr. Seward, which rests on different grounds. There is far less to be said for the acquisition of Alaska than any other of our Democratic acquisitions. The country, indeed, is large. It cost us only $7,000,000; but while we are not burdened there with a large alien population, it has no soil fitted for agriculture or for homes. It may have some advantages besides a precarious seal industry and a gold production; but it is not coterminous and it adds nothing to the strength of the Republic. It is doubtful whether Mr. Seward would ever have entertained the project at all but for the idea that some day the Dominion of Canada would enter our Union and that it might be well to have Alaska for a geographical effect upon the map. The acquisition may be more beneficial in the future, but as it is not coterminous it would be a source of weakness but for the growing good feeling between Great Britain and the United States.

THE TRUE LINE OF STATESMANSHIP.

I think that I ought here to recall the fact that at the time when Mexico lay at our mercy, when in 1848 we could have taken that whole country, and some of our politicians actually proposed to do so, we stopped short at the true line of statesmanship. Our ancestors had the great and admirable wisdom of moderation. The traditions of Jefferson, Madison, and Hamilton, the wise counsels of Calhoun, Clay, and Webster, had then a spell and a power for the American mind. We took from Mexico only those northern provinces of New Mexico and California which lay in the natural pathway of our progress and which by reason of a very scanty Mexican population were capable of being filled up by Americans, as they have been. They were easily assimilated to our own system, California especially. How wise this policy has proved! We left to Mexico all those portions of her country which were well populated by her own people.

MODERATION AND JUSTICE SHOULD DOMINATE.

We did not seek to incorporate them. A small strip, comparatively unsettled, known later as the "Gadsden purchase," was acquired subsequently by treaty in order to promote the construction of the Pacific railway. But we took in no large element of population speaking a different language and cherishing essentially different institutions from our own. I admire this moderation, this spirit of justice and statesmanship that dominated in that hour. The Republic of Mexico has great resources. After many trials and sad hours I rejoice to think that she is rapidly progressing and is happily prosperous under the conduct of a great and wonderful man, who deserves to rank among the foremost statesmen of the day and as a benefactor to a people who are our neighbors and friends. With them we have large and growing trade relations from which both countries are deriving profit, and which in the future will yield untold and only half-imagined benefits to both nations. Will any man be so foolish or wicked as to assert that it would be better to have incorporated Mexico as a province or a dependency?

This hasty review of the past, and I make it briefly because it is only necessary to allude to it, throws a broad light upon our present situation and our duty at this time. The present proposition is different from any we have ever had in the past. Even the case of Mexico in 1848 was widely different. Mexico was not densely populated. Her productions and resources were very great. Her future was beyond question. She was capable of supplying a very large product of sugar. She was then and is now capable of supplying the whole world with coffee of a quality equal to the best. Her capacities of production and her varieties of soil and climate in many respects made her a far more desirable acquisition than Hawaii, even if Hawaii were equally near and had an equal area. Mexico is a hundredfold richer.

HAWAII'S LIMITED DOMAIN.

But, leaving out the case of Mexico, compare the acquisition of Hawaii with the territorial acquisitions of the past. Compare the grand acquisitions of virgin lands, of grand areas of prairies, and forests of unoccupied lands with the pitiful area and meager opportunities of these little islands, thrown up by some volcanic action in the Pacific Ocean. Seven thousand square miles all told, surrounded by water and 2,000 miles away! A country hardly a fifth the size of Ohio, largely mountainous and uninhabitable, with no vacant or unoccupied lands, no opportunities for homes for our people, and already filled up full and running over and with Kanakas and Asiatics. Am I wrong as to this? I read from the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs the following facts and figures:

The census of 1896 shows the population to be 100,030.

In round numbers the different nationalities are represented as follows:

Native Hawaiians.....	31,000	Americans.....	3,000
Japanese.....	24,400	British.....	2,300
Portuguese.....	15,100	German.....	1,400
Chinese.....	21,600	Norwegians and French.....	479
Part Hawaiian and part foreign blood.....	8,400	All other nationalities.....	1,055

The percentage of Americans and Europeans by birth or descent is here stated at 22, but this includes the Portuguese. I can not regard these as homogeneous. The European population are not united, small as they are, but are discordant, and only 3,000 out of 78,000 of those of foreign parentage or descent are Americans. The great bulk are Asiatics; yet Americans have had ample opportunities to settle there. They have not been interfered with nor oppressed. Why are there so few of them in Hawaii? I can only suppose that the Americans do not care to go there for lack of the opportunities that they have in their own country. The islands seem to attract the overcrowded populations of Asia, the class of people who can live and work in a hot climate for a few cents a day and in a low scale of life.

What are we to do with these Asiatics or with the Portuguese? You can not well ship them back to their own countries. Are you going to shut down on all Japanese immigration, or are you going to throw over them all the agis of American citizenship? Do you propose to admit as a State a country with an overwhelming proportion of Asiatics and Polynesians and only 3 per cent of Americans? Do you propose to shut Hawaii out as a State of the Union and keep her as a dependency? What advantage are you to derive from assuming this burden? With every advantage to be derived from reciprocity treaties the total estimated area of land under cane cultivation is only 67,840 acres. The sugar exports have reached 292,083,589 pounds. But for the right to export sugar freely and duty free to the United States, and the American duties on all other foreign sugar—a great boom for somebody's benefit and a great loss to our own revenue—these islands would have to face a far different state of affairs.

A COLONIAL SYSTEM INCONSISTENT WITH OUR GOVERNMENTAL SYSTEM.

Disguise it as you may by ingenious phrases or specious pleas of military necessity, we are confronted with the grave question, Shall we enter upon a colonial system such as that of England, such as that which has been the curse and disgrace of Spain, such as that which burdens France and threatens to involve Germany and Italy in war with other powers—I might say a system that threatens to involve all Europe in war? Under this seeking out for colonies Africa has been partitioned, divided up, and now these great countries are quarreling over the spoils. With monarchical governments or governments only nominally republican, but really despotic or monarchical, this system of colonies, however burdensome, however tending to conflicts, may be pursued without a shock to their systems of government.

But with us the case is different. Our whole system is founded on the right of the people—all the people—to participate in the Government. If we annex Hawaii, we must soon admit the country as a State of the Union, with only 3 per cent of the population Americans, or we must keep the islands as a dependency—a sort of proconsulate where we can maintain rich men's sons in office and grandeur, or provide for needy and profligate politicians, such as those who for long years after the war scourged, robbed, and desolated the Southern States. At present there is no party bold enough to advocate the idea of admitting Hawaii as a State of the Union, whatever design they may propose in their hearts. They do not propose to make the Kanakas and Asiatics the equals in political power with New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois. No! The plan is to have and keep Hawaii as a colony or dependency.

NO CONCEALMENTS SHOULD BE MADE.

Now, sir, if this be the design, let it be frankly and honorably avowed. Let us have no fraud or deception practiced upon the people. Let all be plain sailing. If we are to change our entire system and policy as a confederated republic and go in for a grand, colonial, and imperial system, let the issue be fairly propounded. Let the people see what they are to give up and what they are to gain by it. Above all, let us consider that it is the first step that costs. We can not stop with these petty islands of Hawaii. To do so would be a national humiliation. If we are to run a race for the acquisition of colonies with the European governments—for colonies with a population alien in race, language, religion, everything—let us not do things on a small scale. We must not fall behind Italy, France, Germany, countries inferior to us in wealth and population. Sir, I warn you that you can not ever enter on such a policy as this and stop short at Hawaii. You can not stop. Still less can you go backward in your tracks.

I have made no reference to the great Government of Russia. Ambitious as her rulers may be, ready and anxious for acquisitions, and a great military power as she is, Russia seeks only contiguous acquisitions—countries adjoining her own. These she conquers or annexes, populates them, if there be room, and at any rate governs them by a strong hand. She seems to have a wonderful faculty in assimilating foreign countries that she conquers, as remarkable, indeed, as the Roman Empire of old, and so far there is no sign of decay. But Russia is a monarchy—a grand Empire with a gigantic army. Her system of government is not a representative one like ours. She has no free institutions. But with all this she acquires no colonies. The only colony she ever had—I mean Alaska—she sold to this country long ago. It was a wise act for her to do.

ABANDONMENT OF OLD SYSTEM UNWISE.

So the question presses on us, Shall we abandon our old system and adopt the colonial system, with all its consequences? Is it a necessity for us at this time? Is it wise? Is it calculated to promote liberty and free institutions, or does it tend to consolidation and empire? Would an empire, great though it might be, prove better for our people than the free institutions which have made us the first of the nations in wealth and progress?

If this question can be fairly put and considered by the American people, I shall not fear the response. I admit that men's minds are disturbed by the excitement of the war with Spain, but there is reason and method enough left to guide our people to a safe conclusion. We can carry on a war with Spain, I hope, with success and yet not surrender our system of free government.

NO OTHER POWER WILL INTERFERE.

One of the arguments usually urged in favor of annexing Hawaii is that if we do not take these islands at once, some other power will do so. There is no warrant for this assertion. There is no power on the globe that does not know that the Hawaiian Islands are forbidden fruit. They know that this country would not permit it. They each and all know that there is nothing in these islands to compensate the cost of a war with the United States, even if it should be successful. There have indeed been periods in the remote past when European powers have interfered with the independence of the Hawaiian Islands, but that time has long since gone by. The European powers now fully recognize the fact that the United States would regard this as a hostile act. They have had ample notice. Their position is apparent in the documents of this report. It is summed up well at page 81 by Lord Palmerston, speaking nearly half a century ago. He said that the British Government desired the Hawaiian people to preserve national independence. "If they were unable to do so, he recommended receiving a protectorate government under the United States or by becoming an integral part of that nation."

This attitude of England has been repeatedly and most frankly stated. The paramount influence of the United States and her moral right to control the destinies of the islands has been steadily recognized. It is a fixed policy and will not be varied by England. No other European power has proposed a different policy. Japan disavows any idea of annexation. Her interests are those of peace with this country. Japan and the United States have in common a great paramount interest in Asia in enlarged trade and free intercourse for all nations. Japan is not going to quarrel with the United States or to pursue an aggressive policy in respect to Hawaii. In a word, the United States are free in respect to Hawaii from all foreign complications. This effort to provoke our people to resentment of fancied wrongs, and then to annexation, in order to show what we can do if we will, has no adequate foundation or justification. It is a mere trick in the game of men who have a profit to make by annexation. It is a cheap, transparent device, and should not influence us for a single moment.

I come now to the point that those islands may be made the basis of an attack upon the Pacific coast. We have already a right to establish a coaling station at Pearl Harbor. We have not improved upon our right which exists by and under our reciprocity treaty with Hawaii. Of course we can improve this harbor at any time we please and fortify it if we desire to do so. I admit the advantage of coaling stations at Hawaii, at the Philippine Islands, and on the Asiatic coast. We ought to seek such a concession from China, and probably it could be readily obtained. China has made such concessions to less friendly nations than our own. But the fact stands that up to this time nothing has been done.

Mr. Speaker, I question the assertion that any power can make the Hawaiian Islands with success a base of hostile operations against our Western coast. England does not need it for this purpose. She has her own base at Esquimaux. She has British Columbia and Vancouver Island. The other countries are so remote from our Pacific shores that it seems to me idle to suppose that France, Germany, Russia, or Japan can direct naval or military operations against our Western coast. Gentlemen who make this argument appear to me to forget that our Navy is being rapidly developed and that the Pacific coast States are about to become the dominant force on the Pacific coast. That they can be successfully assailed by any other power than Great Britain seems in the highest degree improbable. Of course if England has the power to strike us, we have the power to strike back. We can strike at her by land and water. I do not fear such a conflict, and I am glad to believe that such a conflict is not likely to occur. With the growing friendship and community of interests of the two nations there remains only a rivalry of commerce and of friendly offices. I recognize the necessity of building up a strong navy on the Pacific coast, one worthy of the country and able to defend our interests; but this does not require the annexation of Hawaii. Indeed, it renders annexation a matter of wholly secondary and minor importance.

Sir, I object to any policy of alarm and sensation. We are growing faster than any country in the world in wealth and population. Shall we lose our heads and our even balance because we are involved in a brief war with a weak power that is bankrupt and has only one-fourth of our population? This subject of annexation presents wholly different considerations and has nothing properly to do with the Spanish war.

I have already consumed more time than I had designed, but without going into detail or ancient history I have endeavored to present fairly some of the issues involved in the issue of annexation. I have not dwelt upon the commercial aspects of the question. We have a commerce with Hawaii which, while not large, is valuable. But these islands produce nothing of importance that we can not produce at home. Their chief product is sugar. With cheap Asiatic or contract labor these islands are able to produce a good deal of sugar, and this entered free in our ports reduces our revenues and creates a formidable competition to the growing beet industry on the Pacific coast. This, sir, ought not to be. With an adequate and steady duty on sugar, we can produce from the cane and the beet all the sugar this country can require. The question to be considered is, Shall these great and growing industries of our own people be broken down in order to swell the profits of adventurers and speculators?

If this one factor were removed from the problem, I am confident that we should hear much less of annexation than we have done for some years past. The fever for annexation is not pure sentiment. It is not a Platonic love. It means settlements, money for a certain class of interests, and is essentially a marriage de convenience. It has pressed and maintained the reciprocity treaty. There is mischief enough in that arrangement without adopting a colonial and imperial system which is to change the whole spirit and principle of our American representative Government. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. I now yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON].

[Mr. CAPRON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HITT. I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY].

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to say a great deal upon this question. To my mind there has been too much dwelling on technicalities and its minor features. The whole question, as I see it, resolves itself into this proposition: Can we reasonably expect this little Republic to maintain itself as an independent and friendly Government? If not, in whose hands shall it fall? Upon my best investigation and judgment we can not expect, and I do not believe it possible for these islands to maintain themselves as an independent Government for any considerable length of time under present and threatening conditions. Therefore we are forced to take our choice as to whether we will accept their voluntary offer to become a part of the United States, or shall we reject them and leave them to drift into the hands of some foreign government?

Upon that question I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment the wisest and best thing for this Government to do is to accept the annexation of the islands. So far as the argument and fear of danger from their population of Asiatic pauper and contract labor is concerned, I have looked carefully into the statistics and possibilities and have no fears of this danger assuming proportions that will in any degree trouble us. In fact, I am not one of those who subscribe to the idea that the very small population of these islands is in any way a menace to us. If we have reason to fear any nation or people, it is not from the governments who pay their labor the least wages for what they produce. The weak nations and people all around the globe are the ones who are oppressing their laborers with the payment of the lowest part of what the laborers produce—that is, the lowest wages—and the strongest nations, commercial and political, are the ones that pay the nearest to the full product or value of the product to their producing classes.

This movement, so far as it affects labor, is a process of leveling upward and not downward. Therefore I have no fear whatever as to the influx into our markets of cheap labor or the products of these islands. By a treaty which has been in operation for a great many years we are already admitting their entire product of sugar free. Having stimulated their production of sugar to the highest possible point, we find that the total is insignificant compared with the annual consumption and importation into this country. To continue this trade by annexation will, in my judgment, be no great menace to the production of sugar in this country.

I have considered this question fully and carefully. I well understand it is in no sense a political issue. I find that gentlemen of the Republican party on my right are dividing on this question and propose to vote in accordance with their personal convictions. I find also gentlemen on this side, able gentlemen, taking opposite positions. We understand that this is no partisan issue; and it should not be.

Each member on this floor must take upon himself the responsibility of voting his honest judgment as to what is best for our Government and for the interests of all. The record of this vote will show that the question has been viewed in this light; and I believe that when we come to vote to-day, this proposition will be carried by two-thirds of the voting strength on this floor; and I hope that in a few days it will receive the sanction of the other branch of Congress, so that this old Hawaiian question may be finally settled and settled right, as I believe it will be.

Mr. Speaker, for more than fifty years this Hawaiian question, the control of these islands by our Government, has been one of continual discussion. I do not regard the annexation of this little speck of land, with its limited possible population and products, as in any way, either in spirit or fact, a violation of our well-established policy, known as the "Monroe doctrine." To the contrary, it would be a greater violation of this policy and our national practice to refuse these islands at this time. While it is true they are some 2,000 miles west of our Pacific shores, they are the first land, and nearer to us by half than they are to the Oriental continent beyond. We need their friendly relation and use, not alone for national defense in times of war, but as a friendly commercial port in times of peace. In my judgment, the only way to make certain of both these advantages is to wisely accept their friendly tender at this time.

We may properly ask ourselves why this at present independent Republic should, by its governmental action, seek to surrender its independence to us. I had the pleasure last winter of an extended interview with a Mr. Thurston, a highly educated native of these islands, to whom I addressed the above question. His answer was that up to quite recently the friends of their Republic and those who had established it had cherished the hope of maintaining themselves as an independent government. Hence had opposed all suggestions of becoming a part of any other nation; but against their wishes they have come of late to see and fully believe that it will be utterly impossible to maintain their independence, in view of their limited population and resources.

Their geographic position and isolation make them the coveted port by all nations seeking to enlarge their commerce upon the Pacific Ocean. Their limited population will ever make it an easy matter for any strong mercenary interest to secure, at least for a time, control of the machinery of their Government in order to obtain special commercial privileges; and for the same reasons in turn would be sought and overcome by rival and still stronger commercial interests.

Thus their Government will be ever subject to frequent revolutions, which would inevitably so weaken them as to compel their surrender to some stronger government. Seeing this, their judgment has led them to their present decision, that it will be better to voluntarily choose, while they can, the government to whom they shall be annexed. Hence they offer to become a part of our Government. Fortunately for them as well as ourselves, it is, if possible, more to our interest than to theirs that we should accept them. And, in my judgment, we can not do so too soon.

Considered entirely independent of the present war, we know that our people are anxiously pressing for increased commercial exchanges with the outside world; and in accordance with a well-known law, we naturally look to the west. Civilization has ever moved westward, and we have every reason to believe that it will ever so continue. True, as we leap across the boundless Pacific, we find ourselves treading upon the heels of the old and dying civilization of the Orient. But who shall say that because we find their condition so far below that to which we have attained in our evolutions and revolution around the earth, for this reason we should refuse to cultivate conditions of friendly commerce?

To establish commerce with the Orient does not mean that we shall engage in political conquests; to the contrary, nations have long since learned the better way of respecting each other's political rights and powers, while by friendly treaties and mutual interests we build up our commercial exchanges, leaving political evolutions to be effected by the elevating influences which are the inevitable result of accelerated commerce and the higher intelligence which it ever produces.

We need not, nor do I believe we will, enter into a political conquest of force, but, to the contrary, our higher civilization will be carried across the Pacific by the white and peaceful wings of our rapidly increasing commerce with the mighty hordes with whom we shall trade on terms of peace, giving and receiving benefits, using as we will the Sandwich Islands as the great "cross-roads" where our mighty commerce shall meet in our own waters for the purpose of making the necessary exchanges between all points of the compass and from every shore and clime. This is but a brief and homely picture of what I see involved in this question of annexation.

Now, a few figures as to the population and resources of these islands, and I will have finished. First, however, answering those who fear this step will involve us in foreign complications; to the contrary, I believe annexation is the only possible way open to us to protect ourselves against foreign complications. Now, to the population. Our able Committee on Foreign Affairs in their report state as follows:

While the character of the comparatively small population of the Hawaiian Commonwealth is a minor consideration as compared with the transcendent importance of the possession of that strategic point in the Pacific, it may be briefly considered: It is a mixed population, 24,407 Japanese and 21,616 Chinese, or together nearly one-half of the entire 109,000 on the island, but after annexation the Asiatic element would be reduced; the contract system would be terminated, and United States restriction laws as to immigration would be applied; the Hawaiian penal code (paragraph 1571) would gradually send back the Chinese laborers. This annexation joint resolution forbids further Chinese immigration, and under it those now in Hawaii can not come to other parts of the United States.

Our recent treaty with Japan, to go into effect next year, enables the United States to regulate the immigration of Japanese laborers. The supply being cut off, the number of Asiatics remaining in Hawaii would be very rapidly reduced by natural causes, which are plainly shown by the movements of the Asiatic population in past years; for since 1893, though the flood of Japanese coming in has been strong, the departures each year have been half as many as the arrivals. Like the Chinese, when they have accumulated a moderate competence, the craving for home takes them back. The enormous excess of men coming shows on its face that they do not come to Hawaii to establish homes. The Hawaiian laws exclude them from homestead rights.

These constant and powerful causes operating, if annexation were carried out the Asiatic proportion of the population would rapidly diminish. There is a large element of what are called Portuguese—15,191—but of these, who are a quiet, laborious population, over 7,000 have been born there, educated in the public schools, and speak English as readily as the average American child. They are a useful, orderly people, and rapidly assimilate the American ideas and institutions which now prevail in the islands.

The British element, 2,250, the German, 1,432, and others of European origin, probably 1,000, are elements with which we are perfectly familiar in our own country, which readily sympathize and blend with our own people. They will naturally adhere and cooperate as against Asiatic influence. The native Hawaiian race is decreasing from year to year by some mysterious law which has been in operation for a century. It is reasonable to suppose that within ten years after annexation the inconsiderable population of these islands will not differ widely in character from that of many parts of the United States.

This truthful statement by our committee, Mr. Speaker, clearly shows that all this alarm about our nation being flooded with hordes of Asiatic people, who these alarmists claim must be taken in with these islands, is absolutely unfounded in fact as to their present population, and when we have taken political control we will at once apply our national policy by shutting the gates against a further influx of the Asiatic races.

For the benefit of our sugar producers, of both cane and beets, I will read what our committee report about the sugar product and its possibilities:

The only way in which Hawaiian sugar can injure beet sugar is by being produced in such quantities as to supplant the beet product of the United States, or by cutting the price so as to lower the price of beet sugar to its producers.

Hawaii can never produce enough sugar to supplant the beet or any other sugar in the United States. The sugar consumption of the United States was approximately 2,000,000 tons during 1896, which consumption is rapidly increasing year by year. During 1896 Hawaii produced a little over 200,000 tons, or approximately one-tenth of the consumption of the United States. This is the highest output ever made by Hawaii, and is the best it has been able to do after twenty years of encouragement under the reciprocity treaty with the United States.

All of the natural cane lands of Hawaii are already under cultivation. The only remaining lands which can possibly be cultivated with sugar cane are those now dry and barren, which can only be cultivated by artificial irrigation, by pumping water to an elevation of from 150 to 600 feet. It goes without saying that such irrigation must be limited in area and problematical in profits.

As to Hawaiian sugar cutting the price, sugar is a world product, and its price is determined by the world's price, which is fixed in New York and London. If the Hawaiian crop were cut off entirely, or doubled, it would not raise or lower the price of sugar in the United States one mill. It is sometimes suggested that Hawaiian sugar may more than equal the consumption of the Pacific coast, and that Hawaiian planters would lower their price rather than send it to New York. The reply to this is that the Pacific coast's consumption is only about 75,000 tons per annum, and long ago the Hawaiian product far exceeded this. About one-third of the Hawaiian product for 1896-97 was sent to New York, and probably more than one-half of the crop of 1897-98 will be sent there.

Again, the Hawaiian cane sugar planters suffer under many disadvantages which the beet-sugar producers do not. It takes from eighteen to twenty-two months to grow a crop of sugar cane in Hawaii, during the entire period of which it must be irrigated on most of the plantations every week or two. It takes the beet-sugar planter only about six months to make a crop.

The cane-sugar planter has to employ his laborers all the year round; the beet-sugar planter discharges his laborers when the crop is made.

The cane-sugar planter of Hawaii pays now somewhat less wages per month than does the beet-sugar planter, although not as much less as is generally supposed, the average laborer in Hawaii costing the planter from $15 to $18 dollars per month. Under annexation the Asiatic supply of labor will be cut off, and this slight advantage will be eliminated.

Again, it costs the Hawaiian cane planter approximately $10 a ton to get his sugar from the plantation to its market, while the beet-sugar planter has his market at his door.

Taken all in all, the cane-sugar planter of Hawaii stands on no more favorable basis than does the beet-sugar planter of the United States, and there is no reason why their interests should clash any more than do the interests of the corn planter of Kansas clash with those of the corn planter of Nebraska.

This clear and complete statement by our committee at once proves that all this alarm about ruining our sugar industry, like every other argument by those opposing annexation, falls as a mere pigmy, and especially when we know that for many years the sugar product of these islands has been admitted to our markets absolutely free from all duty. And in the face of this little supply of Hawaiian sugar, our beet-sugar industry has had its birth and grown to its present proportions. Hence there is absolutely no danger to our sugar industry involved in this proposition.

Viewed from whatever standpoint, to my mind, every reason and every condition lead me to the irresistible conclusion that wisdom demands the annexation of these islands without further delay. Therefore I shall vote for this resolution. [Applause.]

[Mr. MITCHELL addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD].

[Mr. MUDD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. KNOWLES].

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted to me I shall not attempt to enter upon a discussion of the resolution under consideration. I simply desire to express to the House the effects upon me of the discussion of this question, to which I have listened with interest and attention.

Previous to the war with Spain, I was opposed to the annexation of Hawaii. I had conceived reasons and arguments sufficient to form such conclusion. I had made up my mind that its acquisition, instead of being a source of strength, would be an element of weakness, necessitating large expenditures in fortifying and defending it, and dividing our Navy between its defense and that of our own coast.

How completely arguments and conclusions drawn from a preconceived theory are knocked out by actual experience has been well illustrated in this case. It is true that our war with Spain in the Pacific Ocean has been entirely a one-sided affair. But let us for a moment suppose our country at war with England, Germany, France, Russia, or even Japan, all of whom have powerful fleets in the Orient. Then would Hawaii become an element of strength or weakness to the nation which possessed it.

No fleet can sail from the Orient and attack our coast without coaling. Hawaii offers the only practical point for a coaling station in the Pacific Ocean. It is the outpost to our coast, and is as necessary to our defense as is the picket line of an army.

I had been much influenced in my opposition to this measure by the very able argument of a distinguished Senator from my own State, for whose wisdom, judgment, and integrity I have the very highest regard. But when it comes to the final vote on this question, I must act for myself in view of all the circumstances and conditions, and I state frankly to you that, in view of those conditions as I understand them, I must vote for this resolution.

I have arrived at this conclusion against my prejudice and almost against my will. In a recent communication to my newspaper I expressed doubt in the matter, and stated that I hoped to receive additional light from this discussion, and, as I can now see, hoped that light would confirm me in my opposition to the measure. But so far from this being the case, the more I have heard from the opponents of this resolution the more have I become convinced of the inherent weakness of their case until I have arrived at the conclusion just expressed. Every single argument thus far produced against this measure can be found in substance in the Congressional Globe and RECORD against every acquisition of territory from the Louisiana purchase to the annexation of Alaska. All the dire calamities predicted in this case were predicted of those. And what one of all those acquisitions of territory would we rescind or give back to-day?

Mr. Speaker, in the evolution of society it seems natural that any step forward is dreaded by a certain conservative class. I find no fault with this spirit of conservatism. It seems useful in preserving much that is best in human society. But, on the other hand, it has ever been a clog upon the wheels of all human progress. It is this spirit which would stand in the way of the glorious future and ultimate destiny of this Republic. It is this spirit of conservatism which would build a Chinese wall around our country and prevent the spread of the example and benefits of free institutions. It is this spirit which seeks to oppose progress in our own methods of government, teaching our people that the systems, constitutions, and laws enacted in the days of stage-coaches and wooden plows are applicable, fit, and proper to-day.

I for one do not believe it. I believe there is room for improvement in our governmental machinery, as there has been in our industrial machinery, and I would extend these blessings as far and as fast as peaceable means will permit to all the nations of the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF].

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, in arriving at a judgment regarding the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands I was not hampered by any previously formed or expressed opinion concerning the subject, and therefore was able to give the matter a conscientious, careful, and unprejudiced examination. I have been affected in reaching a conclusion, first, by what appears to be the sentiment of the American people. I have great confidence in their good judgment, and it is justified by the manner in which they have met the various crises through which the Republic has passed and the manner in which they have shown themselves competent to deal with the most complex questions.

A notable illustration of this we had in the last campaign. They sat in their meetings and at the fireside, and even in the shops and stores, and carefully delved into the complicated question presented, and, in my judgment, the verdict which they finally rendered was well ripened, mature, and wise. They are a courageous, but a conservative people. They have all due respect for the traditions of the fathers, and yet have a well-founded confidence in their ability to meet the problems of the future, which are for them, and not for those departed, to solve. I have ample evidence collected during the last few weeks that the great majority of the American people are in favor of the annexation of these islands in the Pacific Ocean. In the next place, so far as the advantages of annexation are concerned as a strategic, military, and naval base, I have yielded to the judgment of the experts of the Army and the Navy of the United States, and of the Administration. General Schofield, the last one of those surviving who were prominent in the late rebellion as a commanding officer, and one who by experience and ability has shown himself to be worthy of regard concerning a question of this character, stated to the House Committee on Foreign Relations that the most important feature of all is that it economizes the naval force rather than increases it. He said also:

It is capable of absolute defense by shore batteries, so that a naval fleet after going there and replenishing its supplies and making what repairs are needed, can go away and leave the harbor perfectly safe to the protection of the army. The Spanish fleet on the Asiatic station was the only one of all the fleets we could have overcome as we did. Of course, that can not again happen, for we will not be able to pick up the weakest fellow next time. We are liable at any time to get into a war with a nation which has a more powerful fleet than ours, and it is of vital importance, therefore, if we can, to hold the point from which they can conduct operations against our Pacific coast. Especially is that true until the Nicaragua Canal is finished, because we can not send the fleet around from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

In addition to this, Admiral Walker, who has had an extended experience in the waters of the Hawaiian Islands, emphatically confirms General Schofield, saying that it would cost far less to protect the Pacific coast with the Hawaiian Islands than without them; that it would be taking a point of vantage instead of giving it to the enemy.

It must be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that we have a coast line of nearly 2,000 miles on the Pacific, and our Alaskan coast line is greater in extent than our Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coast lines combined. To my inexperienced mind, it would seem that modern ships of war and commerce as well require facilities for coaling and for frequent docking for repairs. We are entirely without this, and that, too, in the great expanse of the Pacific Ocean. With millions of square miles of water around them, it rises above the waves a single and only fortress of the sea and now offered to us for the taking. It must be remembered that the Pacific Ocean from our own coast is on an average more than 5,000 miles wide, twice that at least of the Atlantic and four times in area. England at least realizes the importance of such harbors of refuge and bases of supply and has established fortified coaling stations all around the world in the pathways of commerce. A cruiser or battle ship with a coal capacity necessary to carry her 5,000 miles, steaming at 10 knots an hour, will exhaust her coal in less than 1,000 miles by doubling her speed. With a supply of coal well guarded in Pearl Harbor, our war ships and merchantmen can cross the Pacific at the maximum speed or concentrate at distant points at high speed, thus largely increasing their efficiency, while their adversaries, being under the necessity of conserving their coal or risking the running out of coal away from their own ports, must move at much less speed, thus being placed at great disadvantage.

England, Germany, France, Japan, the United States, and once Spain, all have a Pacific squadron. Every one of these is stronger than ours, save that of Spain, which was the weakest. But the Administration has asked for the annexation, and the President has placed the military and naval advantage as one of the causes. This has also contributed to forming my opinion. To-day the people of this country are back of the Administration and the conduct of this war and in all those things which are necessary to its successful prosecution as viewed by the Administration as they have never been behind any Administration from the commencement of this Government. Therefore, not being a military expert myself, I yield to the judgment of the Administration upon that point. But to me the controlling factor in the determination of this question is its importance from a commercial standpoint.

War is not our normal condition; we desire to pursue rather the arts of peace, and when war comes it can never be resorted to by the American people except upon justifiable grounds and as a necessity. To me, therefore, war is simply an incident, a most glorious one, but yet simply an incident in the determination of action upon these resolutions for annexation. I think it is unfortunate that in the discussion of this question the problem of the retention of the Philippine Islands should have been brought into consideration. I am not afraid that we shall be hysterical, and because we have annexed the Hawaiian Islands shall be intoxicated with an uncontrollable desire for territorial aggrandizement.

I do not believe that the decision of the present question will influence our judgment when we come to settle the Philippine problem. This has not been our history; it has not been the history of Congress. But in determining this question it is not the acquiring of territory to satisfy pride or the greed of possession that influences me. Territorial expansion is not the need of the hour, but, in my judgment, the central and controlling factor in the determination to annex the Hawaiian Islands is that it will aid in our commercial expansion. We must remember that marvelous as has been our growth in population, from 3,000,000 people at the close of the Revolution to 73,000,000 to-day, it is surpassed in the wonderful increase of the productive power of this country through improved machinery, the product of American genius.

Whether this fact be a matter of congratulation or regret, no legislative power can stop it. The difference between the amount which could formerly be produced by a given number of laboring men and that which can be produced with the machinery of to-day operated by the same number passes comprehension. It is a problem to be met. There is much to congratulate ourselves upon under present conditions. I believe that we should first take care of our own market, as we have done, through the policy of protection. But we must also put our foot upon the sea. We must have our share of the world's commerce. I am to-day informed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that the Treasury statistics show that from February 1 of the present year to the end of the present month each month's receipts under the Dingley bill are sufficient to pay the peace expenses of the nation, basing those expenses upon the expenses of each month corresponding for the last year, and leave a surplus on July 1 of $10,000,000, and that, too, in the face of the fact that importers, anticipating this protective feature of the Dingley bill, flooded our markets, especially with one year's supply of wool, thus materially lessening the possibility of large revenue receipts during the first year of its operation. I give below a table of the exports of merchandise manufactured in this country, not including coin or bullion of any kind, with the value of each year's exportation, commencing with the passage of the McKinley Act, in 1890:

Exports of merchandise.

Year ending June 30—	Value.	Year ending June 30—	Value.
1890.....	$645,266,828	1894.....	$662,140,572
1891.....	872,270,263	1895.....	807,596,165
1892.....	1,015,732,011	1896.....	882,606,938
1893.....	831,000,785	1897.....	1,060,909,596

It is somewhat significant that of the two years in which we sold abroad the largest amount of agricultural and manufactured products one should be under the operation of the McKinley Act and the other under the Administration of McKinley, and the next year will surpass, according to the estimate of the Treasury Department, that of the present; for the exports for the nine months ending March 31, 1898, are $910,612,651, which would make the exports for the year ending June 30, 1898, $1,214,150,201. But the struggle is ever necessary and ever unending. We can not be blind to the fact that the four great European powers, England, Russia, France, and Germany, are endeavoring to obtain commercial supremacy of the world by the policy of colonization. The territory of Africa is speedily being divided between the great powers, and now already has commenced the parceling out of the Empire of China between them. More than one-half of the population of the world is in countries upon the Pacific and Indian oceans. Hon. J. R. Procter, in an article he wrote for the Forum in September, 1897, says:

The foreign commerce of the countries bordering these oceans, excluding North America, already amounts to over $2,250,000,000 a year. Of this great commerce we as yet have but a small fraction. Over 80 per cent of our total exports go eastward across the Atlantic and less than 5 per cent westward.

Nor can we ignore the new constitutional monarchy of Japan which has awakened from its sleep of centuries and startled the world with its progressiveness and power. Are we to be prepared for this changing of the front of the world's market? Are we to forget that we are between two oceans? I verily believe that the commercial conflict of the future is to be for the trade of the Orient.

We are no longer simply an agricultural nation, and it is not for the interests of the farmer that we should be that alone. The splendid victory of Dewey at Manila has not aroused us to dreams of territorial aggrandizement, but it has awakened us to the necessity of ports of our own under the American flag where our vessels may seek refuge and coal all over the world. We wish to see the American flag floating on every sea over goods manufactured by American workmen and cereals raised by American farmers shipped in American bottoms. When the American goes to the Orient, or wherever he goes the round world over, we want it understood that he is a citizen of a Republic which protects the commercial and personal interests of the American citizen wherever he may be. This is not "jingoism." This is a practical possibility. I am not in favor of commercial expansion for any other reason than the benefit of the 73,000,000 people whom we have within our present boundaries. And if in the annexation of Hawaii we can give them the privileges of our Government, to our own advantage, we have enough of caution and discretion to meet the Philippine problem when it comes upon its own merits.

We did not seek to wage this war for territory. We entered into it because Spain had forfeited her rights to govern the Island of Cuba, and because her misgovernment had been an evil both to that unhappy people and to our own commercial interests. We sought, according to the usages of war, because Spain persisted in resisting, to strike her wherever we could find a vital point, and we certainly are not called upon to allow the expenses of this war, prolonged by Spain, to be paid other than out of any of her possessions of which we may have control at its close. Our right under the Constitution to acquire territory by conquest, annexation, or purchase has been too well established by precedents in our own history to be questioned. At the time of the Louisiana purchase Jefferson wrote to Gallatin:

There is no constitutional disability as to the acquisition of territory, and whether, when acquired, it may be taken into the Union by the Constitution as it now stands will become a question of expediency.

The Democratic members of this House last night held a caucus, and one of their members therein offered a resolution to the effect that the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands was dangerous, unwise, and un-Democratic. But the word "un-Democratic" was stricken from the resolution, as it wisely might be, and as amended the resolution passed.

Florida was ceded by Spain in 1819 without the consent of the Spanish population of Florida. Louisiana was purchased from France in 1803 without the consent of the French population of Louisiana. Texas was annexed in 1845, and that not by treaty ratified by the Senate, but by an act of annexation passed by both Houses of Congress, as we are attempting to pass these resolutions, and yet this method is now pronounced unconstitutional by one of the members on the other side of this Chamber. California was ceded by Mexico in 1848. The Gadsden purchase was made 1853, and the purchase of Alaska finally in 1867. In considering the form of government which we would give to the Hawaiian Islands it may be remembered that we delayed admitting portions of the acquired territory for more than eighty years, and parts of it still remain unadmitted as States.

The total area of the United States at present is, in round numbers, 3,668,000 square miles. It was originally only about 1,132,000 square miles. Thus by these acquisitions, after the formation of our Government, we tripled our territory and acquired all we now have west of the Mississippi, as well as Louisiana and Florida. And I am frank to say that the proudest part of the history of the Democratic party was that to it was due the greatest credit for these acquisitions. It seems to me that it is very inconsistent for them now to grow so very conservative over the acquisition of a little group of islands in the midst of the sea. It must also be remembered that the Whig party suffered by reason of its opposition to the Mexican war which resulted in the acquisition of the California territory ceded by Mexico; and the same forebodings existed then as are brought up to-day, and the arguments made now are repetitions of those days.

We remember that the Whig party only escaped condemnation by the wise selection of the old hero of the Mexican war, Zachary Taylor, who snatched victory from the jaws of defeat. The leader of the party on the opposite side of this Chamber would not be here were it not for the annexation of Texas. This is not a new question. The value of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States has been recognized by almost every Secretary of State for the last half century.

There is a little Republic in Italy 4 miles from the shore of the Adriatic, away up in the Apennine Mountains, thirteen hundred years old, consisting of five villages, with some 8,000 inhabitants, and 22 square miles, entirely mountainous. There is little or no use for the prison. She is not a tempting prize to the stronger powers of Europe. Her people are industrious, prudent, and economical. She does not intermeddle with the world outside. She shuts out the telephone, the railroad, and all of the modern appliances of this age. They have been kept in simplicity, yes; in liberty, yes; but they also have been kept in ignorance. They enjoy liberty bound up within themselves, but not such a liberty as we would or can enjoy. They have no part in the world's work. We can not escape it. If they had existed from the time of Adam, we would have lived longer in our hundred and nineteen years of national life than they.

We frequently hear men longing for the simplicity of the primitive times of the beginning of this Government. Perhaps some may think it would be better. It matters not. Sir, we can not turn the wheels of progress back, if we would. We must meet the problems of the future. We can not rely upon the principles laid down for the settling of the problems of the past, when we were an agricultural Republic alone, to meet the problems of the future of a great commercial power, except as they may be applicable to the present time. I have confidence in the present and, above all, I have a confidence in the guiding power of the God of nations, who has directed us thus far in preserving a liberty which is not one simply for ourselves, not an exclusive privilege, but is typified in the statue at New York Harbor of Liberty Enlightening the World. [Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my gratitude to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] for yielding me time upon this subject, when I know that there are other members not pressing for time who, to do justice to the subject, ought to be heard.

I have no desire to make a speech to be printed and circulated in my district. I have no desire to take up the time of this House if it does not help to win a victory for our side. Therefore, having a hearty desire to benefit the cause, to help the country, in order that distinguished gentlemen who have not had sufficient time to properly discuss this subject may have that much additional time, I yield the time back to the gentleman from Arkansas, to give to those whom I hope can do better by it than I feel that I can. [Applause.]

But before yielding the floor I wish to incorporate as part of my remarks the substance of the speech of Hon. William J. Bryan, delivered at the Nebraska Building, in Omaha, on yesterday, which I clip from the Washington Post of this date:

OMAHA, NEBR., June 14.

The Nebraska Building at the exposition was dedicated to-day with appropriate ceremony, amid the plaudits of thousands of the State's citizens. Governor Holcomb and his staff took part in the exercises, along with many of the State's most distinguished residents. The speakers of the day were Hon. Constantine J. Smith, Hon. William F. Gurley, and Hon. William J. Bryan. Mr. Bryan's oration was notable for being his first public declaration on the war issue. He took a high ground on the question, urging that the war is for humanity, and not for the extension of United States territory. In concluding, he said the manifest destiny of this nation is not to acquire new realms to govern, but to carry out the fundamental principles of democracy, to the end that equality among the citizens may be secured. Mr. Bryan said:

"War is harsh; it is attended by hardship and suffering; it means a vast expenditure of men and money. We may well pray for the coming of the time, promised in Holy Writ, when the spears shall be beaten into pruning hooks and the swords into plowshares; but universal peace can not come until justice is enthroned throughout the world. Jehovah deals with nations as He deals with men, and for both decrees that the wages of sin is death. Until the right has triumphed in every land and love reigns in every heart, governments must, as a last resort, appeal to force. As long as the oppressor is deaf to the voice of reason, so long must the citizen accustom his shoulder to the musket and his hand to the saber.

FORCED TO TAKE UP ARMS.

"Our nation exhausted diplomacy in its efforts to secure a peaceable solution of the Cuban question, and only took up arms when it was compelled to choose between war and servile acquiescence in cruelties which would have been a disgrace to barbarism.

"History will vindicate the position taken by the United States in the war with Spain. In saying this I assume that the principles which were invoked in the inauguration of the war will be observed in its prosecution and conclusion. If a contest undertaken for the sake of humanity degenerates into a war of conquest, we shall find it difficult to meet the charge of having added hypocrisy to greed. Is our national character so weak that we can not withstand the temptation to appropriate the first piece of land that comes within our reach?

"To inflict upon the enemy all possible harm is legitimate warfare, but shall we contemplate a scheme for the colonization of the Orient merely because our fleet won a remarkable victory in the harbor of Manila?

"Our guns destroyed a Spanish fleet, but can they destroy that self-evident truth that governments derive their just powers not from superior force but from the consent of the governed?

"Shall we abandon a just resistance to European encroachment upon the Western Hemisphere in order to mingle in the controversies of Europe and Asia?

POSITION OF NEBRASKA.

"Nebraska, standing midway between the oceans, will contribute her full share toward the protection of our seacoast; her sons will support the flag at home and abroad; wherever the honor and the interests of the nation may require Nebraska will hold up the hands of the Government while the battle rages, and when the war clouds roll away her voice will be heard pleading for the maintenance of those ideas which inspired the founders of our Government and gave the nation its proud eminence among the nations of the earth.

"If others turn to thoughts of aggrandizement and yield allegiance to those who clothe land covetousness in the attractive garb of 'national destiny,' the people of Nebraska will, if I mistake not their sentiments, plant themselves upon the disclaimer entered by Congress and expect that good faith shall characterize the making of peace, as it did the beginning of war. Goldsmith calls upon statesmen—

"To judge how wide the limits stand Betwixt a splendid and a happy land."

"If some dream of the splendors of a heterogeneous empire encircling the globe, we shall be content to aid in bringing enduring happiness to a homogeneous people, consecrated to the purpose of maintaining 'a government of the people, for the people, by the people.'"

I also wish to read and make a part of my remarks an editorial from the American Agriculturist of June 4, which is as follows:

AN ALLURING TEMPTATION.

The conquest of the Philippines suggests an alluring policy of colonization to the United States. Here are some hundreds of islands endowed with all the natural wealth of the tropics, with a population variously estimated at 7,500,000 to 15,000,000 stretching almost from Formosa to the equator, and from longitude 115° to 165° east from Greenwich, including the Caroline and Ladrone islands. The water area of these heretofore Spanish possessions is about 1,000 miles north and south by nearly 3,500 miles east and west, and while Manila is some 8,000 miles from San Francisco, the most easterly of the Carolines, Pinap Island, is only about 5,000 miles distant.

Besides this big slice of the East Indies, the banishment of Spain from the West Indies will give to the United States not only Cuba but Puerto Rico. Their annexation as colonies would doubtless be followed by the "absorption" of Haiti and Santo Domingo. Of course we must capture and hold the Canaries, to prevent Spain from having an outpost against us, and the "taking over" of the Sandwich Islands would become a natural part of the same policy.

The United States would thus surely be recognized as a dominant power, with its flag floating over its possessions at the Canaries 3,000 miles to the east of the seat of Government and 10,000 miles from Washington over the Philippines at the west. With a navy equal if not superior to England's, and with a standing army of commensurate proportions, of course we should want a slice of Africa, a piece of China, and our share of everything else in sight in every part of the world. Indeed, having entered upon the policy of expansion, having begun the job of establishing "stable governments" where needed, it would probably be necessary to occupy Spain itself. And having shown what we could do for the cause of humanity, there would be a great temptation to settle the next outbreak of atrocities in Armenia by attacking Constantinople. Uncle Sam would thus smash the European concert, and show that the new giant of the West, having succeeded in establishing ideal government three-quarters of the way around the earth, now hoped to reform the Old World.

The policy of colonial expansion, now so extravagantly urged in interested quarters, may not at present contemplate interference in European politics, but such interference would be less of a departure from the new policy than this policy is a departure from the Monroe doctrine. The new idea sounds very grand at first, and in the flush of victory the appeal to extend our domination beyond the seas is so alluring that the consequences of such action are lost sight of.

The policy of colonial empire would at once expose us to embroilment with other nations. It would vastly magnify the power and expense of Army and Navy. It would perpetuate increased taxes. It would inaugurate an era of corruption in our foreign possessions, a debasement of the blood, that could not fail to in time affect the physical and mental stamina of our people at home. It would be un-American, unwise, unconstitutional, and in results unworthy of the effort.

On still higher ground a colonial policy is objectionable. It would degenerate the holiest war ever waged for humanity into a campaign of conquest. This would lower the United States before the world, but its moral effect upon our own people would be still worse.

Again, the more our people are led to indorse the policy of expansion the more will domestic interests be neglected. Under such a policy no expense will be spared on Army and Navy. But how about those home interests that vitally concern everybody every day? Better roads and improved waterways, more mails and free delivery, a better banking system, better education, reform of existing abuses, protection against monopoly and corporate extortion—all these and many other things will be neglected. Monopoly in various forms and other enemies of social progress would hold high carnival at home while national and State legislatures were concerned about our colonies abroad.

It will be bad for the American farmer should Uncle Sam ever decide to embark upon an area of "imperial colonization." The cooly labor of these tropical colonies, directed by capable overseers, and their products manipulated by world-wide trusts, would close up every best sugar proposition and cane sugar mill in the United States. The growing and manufacture of smoking tobacco and cigars, one of the large interests of the United States, would be annihilated, and the heavy leaf industry also injured. Rice, cotton, hemp, and all fiber crops would be so cheaply produced and worked in the East and West Indies as to sound the death knell of these industries in the United States, or perpetuate the low prices which have for a year past brought only disaster to the cotton planter, factor, manufacturer, or operative.

The new problem in politics that may be the outcome of this war bids fair to cut athwart all parties even more than did gold and silver. We have briefly suggested some of the possibilities that may be involved. We do this before these matters become political issues, in the hope that they may be so adjusted after the victorious culmination of the war as to avoid any departure whatever from the accepted policy of the American nation, and so as to perpetuate the perfect harmony among the people of all sections that is such a beautiful feature of the present and so hopeful for the future.

We speak at this time and in this way also because agriculturists represent the largest body of voters and the most powerful portion of the electorate. Upon them depends in the future, even more than in the past, the true welfare of the Republic.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I shall not consume any of the time which has been allotted to me for debate on the pending resolution in useless exordium, but shall proceed at once to the very heart of the controversy. I affirm, sir, and I shall endeavor to maintain before the House and the country, three propositions:

First. That the annexation of Hawaii to the United States is not necessary as a war measure in our conflict with Spain.

Second. That the annexation of the island is not necessary in order to prevent it from falling into the hands of some other great power, to be used by it to menace and attack our coast.

Third. That the annexation of Hawaii is of itself inherently wrong, and that it is the opening wedge which is designed to lead, and which will lead to still further acquisitions of insulated foreign territory, and that such a policy is against the best interest of the country, and therefore ought not to be entered upon. Now, sir, let us consider the first of these propositions. It has been contended in this debate that the present war makes it necessary that, in order to maintain ourselves against Spain in the Philippine Islands and prevent her from sending there for our overthrow a new navy and army, which it is claimed she is likely to do, we should annex Hawaii for our use as a coaling station and for a base of supplies for our operations in the Philippines.

Mr. Speaker, this war with Spain does not furnish a single additional argument in favor of the annexation of this island that did not exist before the conflict was precipitated. It does not strengthen the position of the annexationist one particle. It furnishes simply a pretext for annexation, not a reason for it. What is the condition of affairs in the Philippine Islands to-day? Commodore Dewey, with his heroic sailors, has swept out of existence the only fleet which Spain had in Asiatic waters. His squadron lies unopposed in the harbor of Manila. That city is under the guns of his victorious fleet and is completely at his mercy.

According to his own dispatches, his sailors are in high spirits and excellent health, and his vessels are entirely uninjured. He has seized upon the islands at the mouth of the harbor, and has fortified them. He has laid submarine mines in the harbor in order that he may be protected against any possible contingency which may arise. The insurgents are swarming upon the walls of the doomed city, cutting off its communications, and anxious to cooperate with our fleet in bringing about its capture or capitulation.

The very last dispatches sent from Manila by the Spanish captain-general to the home Government at Madrid are filled with tidings of dismay. He declares therein that while he will make the best resistance within his power, it is absolutely impossible for him to withstand the combined forces of our fleet and of the insurgents. Mr. Speaker, under such circumstances as these, what is the simple duty of our Government? That which it is already performing, the sending to Commodore Dewey of supplies and an army of occupation sufficiently large to enable him to land and man the forts which he has captured, and to take possession of the city and preserve peace and order.

Already the Government has sent some troops and supplies to his assistance. More troops are being mobilized upon the Pacific coast and will soon follow in their wake. We have done more than this. We have reinforced him with vessels of war. We have sent to him the Charleston, now well on her way. The Monterey, one of the most powerful vessels in our Navy, is even now following in her trail, and the Monadnock, conceded to be the most formidable monitor that we have afloat, is soon to take her departure for the same destination. I hesitate not to affirm upon this floor that if the combined navies of Spain could be precipitated upon Manila to-day Commodore Dewey, thus equipped with the new vessels that have been sent to his relief, could and would absolutely exterminate and destroy that entire navy.

But, sir, is there any man fool enough to believe that Spain can send at this time either a navy or an army to the relief of her doomed colony in the Philippines—that they will take their slow and tortuous passage through the Mediterranean, thence through the Isthmus of Suez, out into the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden, and on through the Indian Ocean to their destination? And where is the Spanish fleet that is able to come to the rescue of Manila? I challenge those who demand this annexation as a war measure to answer.

The pride of Spain's navy is this hour closely blockaded inside the narrow-mouthed and rock-ribbed harbor of Santiago de Cuba, absolutely incapable of escape or rescue, with an American squadron far outnumbering it in valor and in power awaiting it upon the outside, and the American Army is just about to assail the city of Santiago from the land side with a power which is irresistible. It is only a question of a few days, sir, until those Spanish vessels of war will be absolutely destroyed or compelled to unconditionally surrender. Is any man fool enough to believe that Spain dare send the only other squadron which she possesses, that which is designated as the Cadiz squadron and which is now maneuvering off the coast of Spain, to the Philippine Islands to relieve her forces there?

The very moment she attempts it, she leaves her own coast and the Canary Islands, which she owns, and which lie off the coast of northern Africa, the one to be ravaged and the other to be attacked and captured by the formidable fleet which we can with perfect ease and safety spare from our naval operations in the Caribbean Sea against Cuba and Puerto Rico. Nor is it possible to dispatch a Spanish army to the Philippines, for how can an army be sent without vessels of war to act as its convoy?

Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts which I have stated, and which can not be successfully controverted, I affirm that the man who declares that there is any military or urgent necessity that we should, for the relief of Commodore Dewey, annex the Hawaiian Islands to the United States simply insults the intelligence of the gentlemen to whom he makes such an argument.

And now, gentlemen, answer me for one moment, upon what ground do you want Hawaii for the purpose of holding the Philippines during this war? Accord me, if you please, definite and specific reasons. Do not attempt to put me off either by dogmatic assertion or by glittering generalities. Do you expect to obtain men from there to carry on the war in the distant province? Not at all. You will not get a man there. Every soldier you get will have to come from under the shadow of the American flag, from our own domain, on this side of the Pacific. Is it intended to transport American soldiers to Hawaii, land them there, and then reembark them for Asiatic waters? No, sir; our forces will go direct from the great city of San Francisco.

You say we want a coaling station at Hawaii. Why can we not do as we have already started to do, and as every other nation is obliged to do where she undertakes to send her war ships a great distance and possesses no intermediate coaling station, load up the decks of our war ships, load up their bunkers with all the coal we can deposit there, and then take colliers along and load the war ships with coal in the open sea? Oh, but you say that this method is inconvenient and expensive. Possibly this may be true; but the inconvenience is nothing and the expense is nothing to what we will have to encounter if we are to enter upon this policy of annexing the islands to the United States. You say, too, that the proposition to coal at sea involves delay.

You talk as if Spain had a powerful fleet in the waters of the Pacific or a great army in the Philippines, and as though our heroic Navy there was in danger of being crushed out of existence by sudden and overwhelming attack, whereas, as I have already shown, just the opposite is the case. Our troops and our war ships would arrive at Manila in ample time and without injurious delay even were the vessels denied coaling facilities at the Sandwich Islands. All that can be said as an argument in favor of Hawaii as a basis for operations in the Philippines during the present war is that it would be a convenience—a mere convenience. No conscientious man who cares anything for his own standing or reputation will assert that it is a necessity. Let me put a square question to the rabid annexationists of this House, who pretend that annexation is an imperative necessity growing out of the war.

If the Sandwich Islands to-day were in the possession of France, Germany, or Great Britain, or any other powerful nation which was enforcing the laws of neutrality against us, or was denying us the right to coal there, do you not very well know that we would, nevertheless, be able to send both war ships and troops to Commodore Dewey without appreciable difficulty or delay?

But, Mr. Speaker, it is admitted that we already possess a coaling station in this island; that we have collected at Honolulu a large quantity of coal, and that, by permission of the Government of Hawaii, our war vessels and transports stop there and coal en route to the Orient. Gentlemen upon this floor have tried to draw on the sympathies of the American people by talking of the unselfish and patriotic love which these people have shown for us by thus defying the laws of neutrality in our behalf.

Let us not forget that this is owing to us, from the fact that for years we have protected the people of Hawaii and have guaranteed and secured to them independence against all foreign aggression. Let us not forget that it is our due, because by an unwise and one-sided treaty we have put millions of dollars into the pockets of the Hawaiian people by the admission of their products free of tariff duties. It has been said, too, by gentlemen that if we do not annex these islands, when peace is declared between Spain and ourselves she will claim damages and collect them from these people for their violation of neutrality laws in our interest, and that she will punish them.

All such talk, sir, is absurd. To assert that weak and impotent Spain, Spain who is unable to protect her own possessions in the Pacific, who is unable to go to the rescue of her own provinces in the Philippine Islands, can levy any damages against Hawaii or punish her because she has given us an opportunity to enter her ports and coal there during the existence of this war is simply ridiculous. Do gentlemen forget that the same fostering care upon our part that has maintained Hawaiian independence in the past will be exerted, if need be, to protect her hereafter, and that in the treaty of peace with Spain, a treaty that will be dictated by the United States, a clause can and will be inserted if necessary, upon our demand, releasing all claims against the Hawaiian Government by the Madrid authorities for any aid she may have afforded us during the existence of hostilities.

If Spain desires to visit punishment on the Hawaiian people, we can defend them when they are independent as well as though they are annexed to our own soil. We can easily come to their rescue without the necessity of political union with them. But something else has transpired, Mr. Speaker, in connection with this flimsy pretext of military necessity for annexation. What is it? The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in its excursions around the world, starting from England, crosses the Atlantic Ocean by a steamship line which runs to Quebec; thence its course is across the lower portion of Canada to Vancouver Island, from which point its line of steamships ply directly north, right near the Aleutian Islands, south of Alaska—islands owned and possessed by ourselves—thence to Yokohama, Japan, and on to Hongkong, China, very near to the Philippines.

This is a well-established route, a route over which those seeking pleasure, those whose safety is to be preserved, are taken by this great Canadian corporation. You will observe this route plainly marked on the printed map of the world, with a North Pole projection, which now hangs upon the rack in front of the desk of the Speaker, marked there by the printers and publishers of the maps themselves. We have been by Government officials told—and no man can dispute it to be true—that right among these Aleutian Islands is a magnificent harbor, in an island belonging to ourselves, a harbor that is accessible and deep, well protected on every side, and capable of accommodating vessels of the heaviest tonnage, and a harbor splendidly adapted for a coaling station.

It is in evidence by gentlemen living on the Pacific slope who can rise here, if necessary, and verify the statement—indeed, it is a fact quite well known to all acquainted with Pacific coast transportation lines—that there are three lines of steamships plying from that coast near Seattle and Tacoma, which pass close to the Aleutian Islands over the same excursion route I have mentioned to Yokohama and Hongkong. These lines, sir, transport passengers as well as freight and run the year round. One is an English line, one is an American line, and the other is a Japanese line. It is also in evidence here, being certified to by Government officials whose right and duty it is to speak on such subjects and who speak intelligently and knowingly, that this Aleutian route to the Philippines is 600 to 1,000 miles shorter than the route by Hawaii. This fact is also conceded upon this floor.

It has also been certified to by those who occupy a high position as Government officials and who are acquainted with the facts, that the temperature on this route is not severe, and that at no season of the year is that line of travel obstructed by ice or by any other impediment. Senator PERTIGREW, who traveled to Asia by this northern route and came back by the southern route last summer, I believe, declares that the length of time consumed by him in covering the outgoing route was three days less than that occupied by him on the return voyage by way of the Sandwich Islands. Admiral Walker, himself a strong annexationist, in his hearing recently before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, used the following language, which bears directly upon the matter I am now discussing, and which is doubly valuable, coming as it does from so biased a witness:

Steamers run both ways, and in crossing to Shanghai large steamers, which carry an abundance of coal, go farther north than the islands (Sandwich). They sweep up toward the Aleutian Islands, because of the shape of the earth, which makes it a shorter distance across.

I am aware of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has introduced here a statement prepared by Commodore Melville, a naval officer, in which he states that this Aleutian route is not a good one, for the reason that it abounds in fogs, for the reason that there are rocks along the coast, and for the additional reason that at various times of the year the passageway is clogged with ice. The naval officer, sir, who made that certificate is as bitter a partisan in favor of annexation as the gentleman from Ohio, or as you and I can possibly be in our opposition to what we consider to be a dangerous scheme.

Every word he says is to be taken with a grain of allowance. It is not the impartial declaration of a man who has no feeling one way or the other and is simply interested in placing all the facts before the House, but that of a person with strong prejudice, unduly anxious to promote the passage of the pending resolution. His certificate, therefore, is entitled to be weighed as an argument rather than accepted as a fact.

How much importance, Mr. Speaker, is to be attached to the statement of this naval officer as against the actual fact that the excursionists of the Canadian Pacific road are taken over the northern route, and that three different steamship lines for passengers and freight travel over it the whole year round. Think you, sir, that this would occur if the line of travel was obscured by fog or impeded by shoals, rocks, or ice? Would the pleasure of excursionists be enhanced by such a route? Would the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company transport its tourist passengers over lines so perilous? These things speak volumes in refutation of the evidence which the gentleman from Ohio has presented to this House, and clearly demonstrate the existence of at least as good and a speedier route to the Philippines than the one which touches at Hawaii; a route, too, where excellent coaling facilities can be easily provided en route at a magnificent harbor already our own.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have sufficiently demonstrated my first proposition. I say that among all the flimsy pretexts that have been laid before this House of Representatives to induce members to vote to abandon our old policy of nonintervention and venture into the acquisition of insular territory, not a single one has been so devoid of reason, so false in point of fact, as this declaration that it is necessary we should own Hawaii in order that we may maintain ourselves in the Philippine Islands during the progress of the present war with Spain.

Ah, sir, the annexation of this island is not being urged simply because we want to have a base for present operations or in the belief that we intend, when the war is over and we have exacted from Spain an indemnity, to turn the Philippines back to her, or in case she does not pay the indemnity, that we will dispose of them to some other nation at something like their reasonable value; but annexation is being urged upon this floor because it is the purpose of those who urge it that we shall acquire and use Hawaii as a base of supplies for the permanent holding of the Asiatic territory which the heroism of Dewey and his victorious sailors has delivered into our grasp.

This is one thing, Mr. Speaker, which induces me to declare that instead of the war being a reason why we should now proceed to annex Hawaii, it furnishes every reason why we should defer all action in the matter until a more suitable occasion, when we can ascertain all the facts and consequences in the premises and come to a deliberate conclusion—one which will not come back to plague us in the years that are to come.

Considering the question of the annexation of Hawaii alone and as an independent proposition, it is to my mind by all odds the gravest and most far-reaching proposition in its effect upon the American people which they have been called upon to confront since the days of the civil war, not even excepting the very vital question of finance itself.

But, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, the annexation of Hawaii is not the ultimatum of the annexationists. It is but the entering wedge. Permit this act to be done, and you gain an impetus which you will find it difficult to resist. Its avowed purpose, its natural tendency, its irresistible consequence means that we are to proceed still further in extending our possessions and in the acquisition of foreign territory in no wise contiguous to our soil.

And this above all others is the reason why I am now disposed to antagonize it upon this floor. Let no gentleman be vain enough to imagine that he can vote to annex Hawaii to the United States and then stop short in the career, or hold back from still further encroachments his ambitious colleagues whose appetite for territorial acquisition he has thus whetted rather than satisfied. He will awaken sooner or later to find out that he has set in motion a current which he is powerless to resist, and which, in spite of himself, will sweep him into the vortex below and inflict upon his country and his posterity numerous evils far beyond his ability ever to repair.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the question is not simply whether we shall annex Hawaii. Gentlemen need not attempt to deny it; they shall not avoid it; they must come out squarely from behind the breastworks and meet us in the open on this proposition. Even now many of the newspapers of the country are declaring that we ought permanently to occupy the Philippines. This suggestion is in the very atmosphere that permeates this Chamber. It is openly avowed in conversation by many members on this floor.

A determined effort is being made in certain quarters to bring about a concentration of public opinion in this direction. Its promoters are masquerading under the pretense of military necessity. They are already prating about our "manifest destiny," telling us that the time has arrived for us to assume among the nations of the earth the position to which our great power entitles us and seeking to play upon the vanity and excite the cupidity of the people. And something still more significant—I see by the newspapers, and I doubt not that it is true, because it is consistent with all he has done up to this time upon the subject of annexation—that the President of the United States has said that he is very anxious that we shall be able to get possession of Puerto Rico before Spain has an opportunity to sue for peace.

Upon what ground is this desired? Are not the Philippines sufficiently valuable to secure to us any claim for indemnity which we can reasonably make against Spain? And how is it with respect to Cuba? I know it has been said from the White House that we do not propose to enter into a war for acquisition of territory, and that such a policy would be a crime against all our traditions.

I know it was declared in the war resolution which passed this House and the Senate that we disavowed any purpose to appropriate Cuba to ourselves, and that our only desire and object was to insure her independence and a stable form of government. I am not here to say that every man who joined in that declaration was insincere; but I am here to maintain that men sometimes forget and that men sometimes change their opinions for reasons which they deem sufficient to justify them in such conduct. We have always coveted the fair isle of Cuba. Once in possession of it, shall we not begin to reflect what it has cost us to gain a lodgment there?

Will we be disposed, with great expense incurred and much precious blood shed in her behalf, and with Spain, as you contend, practically bankrupt and unable, or perhaps unwilling, to pay us a money indemnity, to withdraw from the island? Will we not be attracted by its salubrious climate and its fertile soil? If a formal tender of the island be deemed necessary to afford us an excuse for forgetting our high-sounding declarations and for breaking our promises, will not a nondescript crowd be gathered from out of its motley population which will hold itself together, under a government upon paper, long enough to invite our avarice and secure our acceptance? Ah, sir, already we are beginning to belittle these Cuban patriots.

Already we are beginning to characterize them as disorganized guerrillas, utterly incapable of maintaining an organized warfare; already we are talking about their incapacity for self-government and the inadvisability of putting any one class of them in control for fear it will wreak its vengeance on the other class; already we are prating about our obligation to establish a stable government if it takes years to do so; already we are felicitating ourselves that we did not declare their independence, the significance of which omission, sir, is now plainly apparent to even the ordinary mind.

Mr. Speaker, is there not grave danger that this holy crusade for liberty and the independence of Cuba is liable after all to end in a disgraceful scramble for spoils, a scramble as disgraceful as any that ever characterized the people of ancient Rome? Is there not serious danger that this war for humanity, this righteous uprising to save the people of Cuba from starvation, which so far has resulted in a blockade under which the Spanish soldiery has thrived and many of the remaining concentrados have starved to death, will yet degenerate into a miserable war of conquest for the possession of territory?

Sir, with all these grave questions staring us in the face, what kind of a time is this for us to discuss and pass upon that which is intended to be the first step in this "march to empire"? Is there a disposition here to commit the American people, suddenly and before they can have an opportunity for calm thought and reflection, to a policy which will inevitably result in their injury, and which they will condemn when they have the time to grasp it in all its aspects and weigh it in all its consequences? Are we not acting here for posterity as well as for ourselves?

Why is it that gentlemen rush with indecent haste to pass this resolution now? Why is it that they are absolutely unwilling even to submit it to the people to be discussed pro and con at the polls at the next election? Such a discussion, I affirm, they have never enjoyed. When the first treaty for Hawaiian annexation, sir, was sent to the Senate by President Harrison, and was thereafter soon withdrawn by President Cleveland, there was some discussion of this subject in the papers.

The matter then, comparatively speaking, dropped out of the public mind until the present Chief Executive sent the second treaty for annexation to the other end of the Capitol. Every word of discussion that was uttered upon the proposition to accept that treaty, though it dragged along for weary weeks, was uttered behind closed doors, where the American people could not hear a solitary word that was said or get the benefit of the arguments that were made for and against the proposal which involved to them consequences of the most vital and far-reaching importance.

This is the first time in all the history of Hawaiian annexation that they have had an opportunity to hear an open discussion of this grave subject in Congress, and yet, sirs, you persist in withholding from them the benefits that will accrue from it by forcing the vote to-day at 5 o'clock, before they can have time to get the Record into their possession and to weigh the arguments which have been and are still being submitted.

Sir, I insist that this proposition for annexation should be postponed until after the next election, when our constituents can have the advantage of the arguments which have been made, and to the end that we may then come back here as their representatives, fully advised as to their judgment, given upon due deliberation, prepared thereby to execute whatever may prove to be their will.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it would be the part of wisdom to defer this whole matter of Hawaiian annexation until the close of the war, along with these other great questions of insular acquisitions so closely allied to it, which concern the weal or the woe of the great American people, that we may take them up then, not amidst scenes of excitement, not in passion, not under the coercion of party discipline or party prejudice, not at a time when men have only superficial views upon the matter and are forced to act upon first-blush impressions, or, having honest opinions well matured, dare not declare against annexation for fear it will be said that they are trying to interfere with the just prosecution of the war, but that they may be discussed in times of profound peace, under congenial surroundings, when the judgment of the people as finally given will be their enlightened and judicial judgment.

Then, if they deliberately favor this crusade for empire, we must acquiesce and go forward in it cheerfully, whatever dangers it may bring to us; but if they then hesitate, they will have an opportunity to carefully investigate and exercise their free choice before gyves are put upon them by their Representatives and Senators in Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the masses of our countrymen favor this annexation. I do not accept the opinion of the Chief Executive as a just exposition of their views. Neither the clamor of certain of the press nor the demands of military and naval dignitaries should conclude them. But, even if the majority of our constituents are inclined to this measure, and we believe their conclusion to have been reached without having the facts fully presented for their consideration, and that annexation will result in their injury and to the damage of our country, it should still be our high prerogative and our bounden duty to interpose a barrier between them and the evil they are about to embrace, until they have had the opportunity to review their opinions and make a final decision in the light of all the evidence. I protest also against efforts which have been made, both here and elsewhere, to make it appear that Hawaiian annexation is a party question and that the tenets of the Republican party require it to be accomplished.

I grant you that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] disavowed the political character of the question the other day upon this floor. He was too shrewd a man to be caught in a trap like that. He no doubt had in mind while he was speaking the declaration of the last Republican national convention upon this subject, and besides he doubtless thought that he could afford by his admission to allow several gentlemen upon this side to vote against annexation and to exercise the liberty of their consciences, so far as party discipline was concerned, if he could only be able to woo to his support some gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber.

But I say to the gentleman from Ohio, and I say it respectfully, that of all men upon the floor, he is the least likely, because of his known partisan views, to receive very much consideration upon this subject at the hands of those upon the other side of the center aisle.

But, sir, you have heard it through the press, you have heard it in private conversation, you have heard it in public discussions; it has been dinned in your ears everywhere, that Hawaiian annexation is a Republican measure; that the Republican party is in favor of it; that the President of the United States, who seems disposed to urge this matter, whatever may betide, is committed to it, and that we ought loyally to uphold the hands of the President, and that he is derelict in duty, not only to the Republican party, but also to the country, who will withhold this support.

Unfortunately for this contention the declarations of the Republican party in its last national convention assembled are in point. When Benjamin Harrison, a Republican President, sent the first annexation treaty to the Senate, and Grover Cleveland, in the exercise of his good, rugged common sense, withdrew that treaty from its consideration, an issue upon annexation was joined between the Republican President upon the one side and the Democratic President upon the other, and the Republican party was invited to define its position in the matter.

At the very next Republican national convention which assembled, the one which nominated the present occupant of the White House for the position of the Presidency, that convention, thus challenged to declare itself, responded. But how? Did it demand annexation? Upon the contrary, it carefully avoided any such a demand. It simply declared that it was in favor of the United States controlling the island, and against the intervention in its affairs by any foreign nation. And, as if to show that it understood the meaning of words and used them advisedly, in the very next section it declared that the Nicaraguan Canal should be "owned" by the United States.

Mr. Speaker, who will pretend that this high declaration of Republican principles, by that organization in the party which alone has authority to declare its principles, commits the Republican party to the project to annex Hawaii? Mr. Harrison had no right to commit the Republican party to the proposition, though he possessed the clear right to his opinion concerning it and the constitutional power to negotiate the treaty by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and I respectfully call the attention of the very excellent gentleman who is his successor and who is now in the White House to the fact that the position of the Republican party is to be defined by the party organization and not by the man whom it elects President, and he will do well in this peculiar juncture of human affairs to remember that whatever his action may be now, however the voice of censure in his party may be withheld from him at the present, there will come a time when every act of his Administration will be reviewed, not only by those opposed to him politically, but in the spirit of manly criticism and fairness by those inside the pale of his own party organization, who will not hesitate to denounce any action upon his part which in their honest judgment they deem to have been in violation of the best interests of the American people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to consider the second proposition which I laid down when I commenced my argument. I affirm that the annexation of Hawaii is not necessary to us in order to prevent it passing into the hands of any other nation, that there is no danger that it will be used in the future as a base from which to assail our coast if we now reject it.

Here is the argument that is made: We are told that foreign vessels of war can not carry sufficient coal to enable them to cross the Pacific Ocean and attack our western coast; that Hawaii is the only place where such vessels can replenish with coal for such hostile purpose; that it commands our shores and can be used as a base for prosecuting war against us; hence that we must annex it in order to stop supply of coal to foreigners and prevent it from being made a base for their warfare upon us. We are told that if we will do this that foreign fleets will be powerless for lack of coal, and will lie "like painted ships upon a painted sea."

Of course, sir, such an argument as this can have no application to the mother country, with whom, of all nations on earth, war is most to be dreaded, for in British Columbia, upon the Pacific coast, right above our domain, she has a strongly fortified base of supplies to which her vessels could resort to obtain coal, and from which they could come forth to menace and attack our coast.

But these advocates of imperialism are telling us, in answer to this suggestion, that the English coaling station, strongly fortified though it be, would not amount to anything to England in case of war with us, for the reason that at the very opening of the war we would take possession of it. Ah, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of these omniscient gentlemen to the fact that we found it a good deal easier to boast what we would do before the opening of the present war, in the way of taking possession of the enemy's country, than it has been to perform that act since the war has come upon us.

We were going to seize Cuba in a few short hours and pull down the Spanish flag and emancipate the Cuban patriots without delay. But nearly two months have elapsed since war was declared and still we have been unable to find permanent lodgment upon Cuban soil. Spain is one nation, England is quite another. She is mighty upon both land and sea, and she could not be dislodged from British Columbia except after great expenditure of treasure and of blood, and after a considerable lapse of time.

Mr. Speaker, I make bold to assert that I would not regard it as a great national calamity if some foreign nation should get permanent possession of the Hawaiian Islands. I am one of those who do not believe that this great Republic would perish or even that our safety would be seriously endangered by such an event.

With a standing army of reasonable size, at all times well armed and equipped, with a strong Navy and coast defenses adequate and efficient, all of which equipment could be maintained at a far less expense than would be necessary if we were to embark upon this policy of territorial acquisition, I do not doubt that with our vast population, our immense resources, our base of supplies behind us, and our line of communication open and incapable of interruption, we could maintain ourselves with ease against the owners of this isle.

The logic which insists that we shall possess ourselves of Hawaii upon the ground that it can be used as a basis for menacing our coast proves too much. It goes too far. The same logic carried to its natural conclusion would require us to dislodge England from British Columbia in the Pacific and from Halifax and the Bermudas in the Atlantic, where for years she has held strongly fortified positions within easy range of our shores.

Let me call gentlemen's attention to this very significant fact, that we have had within easy striking distance of us for years these fortified strongholds of this powerful nation, and yet for nearly a century we have not had a single war with her. She has during all this period been unable to oppress us or deprive us of our rights. Every controversy we have had with her has been settled amicably and by the peaceful arts of arbitration, instead of resorting to bloodshed and the sword. In these modern days, sir, it does not follow of necessity that "land intersected by a narrow frith abhor each other." It is possible to occupy adjacent territory and still preserve peace. All depends, of course, largely upon the circumstances of each particular case.

I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, that distinguished military and naval gentlemen disagree with me in the position that it is not necessary for us to own Hawaii in order to protect ourselves against foreign nations. These gentlemen are in the habit of looking upon those who disagree with them in this matter, or in any other matter relating to our relations with other nations, for that matter, with a species of compassion that borders very closely upon contempt. I do not attempt, sir, to disparage the services that have been rendered our country by our military and naval officers.

They have always done their duty nobly in the past, and are doing it now with heroic courage. We can at all times depend upon them to valorously maintain the integrity of the country and the honor of the country's flag, whatever may be our territorial policy in the future. But it is well enough for us to remember that these gentlemen are but human—that they are by no means infallible. They have imbibed certain ideas from their education. Bred to arms, is it at all surprising that they should desire that which will give them opportunities for employment and distinction? In times of profound peace, when our Army and Navy is small, and when we have no colonial possessions to garrison, Othello's occupation is gone, and the opportunities for promotion are few and far between.

Under such conditions one may serve in the Army or Navy until his head is white with age and yet attain to no very high rank. But if we enter upon a colonial policy, and have vast possessions, maintained by great armies and great navies, opportunities for employment and for honorable distinction in the country's service are multiplied, promotions become rapid, and Othello's occupation is resumed.

We should remember these considerations, sir, and weigh with a grain of allowance what these officers of the Army and Navy say upon certain subjects. They are but a small portion of our population of 70,000,000 people, and others are quite likely to have sensible opinions on subjects which, I fear, they are inclined to arrogate wholly to themselves. Even upon military and naval affairs we are not required to abdicate our judgment entirely. We must reserve the right to test their opinions by our judgments. Certainly, on the question of annexations and their wisdom there is no monopoly of information; nothing so technical that the lay mind can not form quite an intelligent opinion concerning it.

One does not have to be a graduate of West Point or Annapolis to be able to read the pages of history aright and to draw from them accurate and useful lessons as to the effect of territorial and provincial holdings upon the destiny of nations. Our military and naval officers may declare until they are red in the face, as they did before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that we will require a less navy instead of a greater one after we have annexed Hawaii, and you and I are at liberty to believe it or not, as we see fit. They may assert over and over again that the possession of insular territory will add to our happiness, prosperity, and power as a people, and still we are not concluded by their opinion.

But to get back to the point at issue. It is claimed that if we do not annex Hawaii its people will voluntarily transfer the island to some other power. Mr. Speaker, I deny it. The whole history of Hawaii shows that such action is wholly improbable. Through all the political vicissitudes of that people, under all the forms of government under which they have existed, whether native or white, oligarchical or republican, if there is any one thing above all others which has particularly distinguished them it has been their desire for independence of all governments except our own. Never have they manifested the least inclination to join their fortunes to that of any other nation on earth than ours. They have vigorously resisted at all times any suggestion of foreign domination by other countries. Their disposition and their trade has uniformly been toward us. They have had no inclination whatever toward the great nations of the Old World, from whom they are separated by thousands of miles of water.

For years their absolute independence has been guaranteed by the United States and by a joint treaty entered into between England and France, and they have all along had every reason to believe that there was no likelihood of that independence being interfered with. Are we to believe, then, that just at this time they are suddenly disposed, when no nation is moving against them, when the treaty between England and France is still in force, and when we, stronger and greater than ever before, are still guaranteeing their freedom, they will consent to transfer themselves to some other country simply because we do not accept them? The idea, sir, is preposterous, as preposterous as many other of the assertions whereby men are sought to be carried off their feet in considering this important measure, which ought to receive the closest scrutiny, and which no man should act upon without having first canvassed the whole ground, so as to be sure that he is absolutely right.

Why, if there is any doubt upon this point as to what is the inclination of these people on this subject, look at the declarations of President Dole. They ought to be good authority for annexationists on this floor. In an interview submitted to by him at the hands of a reporter on the occasion of his recent visit to this country, an interview which occurred in Chicago and was published in the New York Journal of the 24th of last January, he was asked what would happen in the event that the United States rejected annexation. He answered, "Well, the Republic is there. I do not know that anything would happen, except that things would go on as usual. I do not see any immediate danger from possession by any other country."

And yet there are those who conjure up this bugaboo to frighten gentlemen from the discharge of their duty and coerce weak minds which they can see in advance have not the strength to withstand such miserable claptrap. If, however, these people would not voluntarily surrender their autonomy, is there still danger that a foreign power may seize and hold Hawaii against their will—forcibly annex it, and thus obtain a base of operations against us in case of war with us?

This pretense has also been made, sir. When the report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs was made to the Senate on a resolution for annexation of Hawaii, there was written in the report a statement that England had designs upon the island. But, sir, the ink upon the paper that contained that declaration was scarcely dry before Sir Julian Pauncefote, pursuant to instructions from his Government, hastened to make known to the United States that nothing of that kind was intended and to disavow all such purposes.

On several occasions after this the leaders of the English Parliament rose in answer to interrogatories and made the same frank disavowal. The idea, Mr. Speaker, is inconsistent with everything England has done with respect to the islands. Her treaty with France in 1843, to which I have already alluded and which she at the time asked us to join, and which she again solicited us to join as late as 1887, and her uniform observance of its terms for fifty-five years is pregnant evidence of the falsity of this accusation made against her by the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

It has also been claimed that the Japanese were trying to colonize the island with a view of getting it under control and then turning it over to Japan.

I think the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. HITT] made an intimation of that kind when he addressed this House on last Friday. Certainly the Japanese could not do this by peaceful methods, for in response to my question the gentleman admitted that, under the constitution and laws of Hawaii, the Japanese had not the right to vote. It is not denied that they are most of them on the island as contract laborers under a seven years' contract, without any political rights whatever. No sooner, sir, had this claim been made than the Japanese minister hastened to make a disavowal, not only on his own account, but for his Government.

He pointed out that the only trouble was that Hawaii herself had invited the Japanese by a treaty to immigrate there, and that they had gone in pursuance of that request, and that subsequently Hawaii had arbitrarily undertaken to expel them. Japan then did what any other nation on the globe would have done, demanded an indemnity, which Hawaii proposed to arbitrate, and which proposal Japan accepted.

The Japanese minister has further pointed out to us that Japan does not favor emigration of her people and that it has never been her policy to extend her territory beyond the zone which immediately surrounds her. He has also declared that Japan had no designs whatever upon Hawaii—has expressly repudiated the entire charge; and thus is exploded another of the false pretenses by which we are sought to be pushed into rash and precipitate action in the passage of the pending resolution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I assert that there never has been but one instance—and if I am wrong I submit to correction; probably I had better say that there never has been but one instance that has come to my knowledge—where any nation has undertaken to seize Hawaii with the intention of retaining it. Indeed, even in this instance the nation whose officer committed the act disavowed it.

What are the historical facts? In 1839 a French vessel landed there, not to seize the island, to take possession of it permanently for the French Government, but simply for the purpose of redressing oppressions which were being committed on converts on the island made by the Spanish priests, and the purpose having been accomplished this vessel instantly withdrew. In 1843 a British vessel sailed into the harbor of Honolulu and her captain extorted a deed of cession of Hawaii from the king, drew down the ensign of the island and ran up the British flag, but upon a mere protest, unaccompanied by threat or show of force on the part of our Government, in less than four weeks the British disavowed the act, and the flag of Great Britain was drawn down, the Hawaiian flag run up again, and the island left in possession of its rightful owners.

In this very year, 1843, Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, the British Government entered into a treaty with France whereby they forever guaranteed the independence of Hawaii and bound themselves never in any manner to take possession of any part of it. Upon England inviting us to become a party to this agreement, we declined to do so, but our Secretary of State at the time declared in effect that we were in sympathy with the proposition and that it conformed to the American policy. That treaty stands to-day unabrogated and observed. As late as 1887 England again approached us and asked us to join in a treaty with France, Germany, and herself, guaranteeing the independence of Hawaii. Again we declined, at the same time reiterating the declaration of our traditional policy in favor of the absolute independence of the island.

I believe, sir, that there was one other instance subsequent to this—probably in the year 1849. Some French vessels, for some alleged grievances which Hawaii was unwilling to admit, landed men upon the island, took possession of the Government buildings, and remained there for some time. But these Frenchmen never pulled down the Hawaiian flag, and they finally left. They declared to England they had not violated either the spirit or letter of the treaty and had never intended to do so—had never intended to take permanent possession of the island. They cited as evidence of this fact that they had not pulled down the flag of Hawaii or raised the French flag in its place and that they had retired from the island.

Does any man on this floor dare to tell me that when for a vast number of years our declaration to the world that the independence of Hawaii should be maintained has been accepted and acquiesced in by all nations—a declaration made when we were a young country, a weak country, without much of an army, and with a navy of small proportions—now, when we have grown to be a powerful nation of 70,000,000 people, with vast and illimitable resources, with a great navy, and with a capacity to raise and equip in a few short months an immense army—that now these nations are getting ready to depart from their old course of conduct and to seize this island and hold it as a base from which to attack our coast? The claim is absolutely preposterous. It shows how hard pressed these annexationists are for arguments that they resort to such a pretense as this for the purpose of blinding the intelligence of the people upon a question so important.

Mr. Speaker, our traditional doctrine, down to the time that this policy of annexation has been agitated within the last few years, has always been in favor not of the annexation but of the independence of Hawaii. The utterances of our Presidents; of our Secretaries of State, of our diplomats, of our publicists, of our legislators down until this desire for new empire has taken possession of the minds of some of our people, have been, with but few exceptions, in favor of simple independence. As late as 1894, this House and the body at the other end of the Capitol practically reiterated this doctrine in separate resolutions which were passed by the respective Houses.

Sir, pass the resolution which the minority offers in this instance as a substitute for the annexation resolution of the majority, declare to Hawaii and the world once more our old doctrine that we guarantee the independence of the island and will maintain the same, and that no foreign nation must lay hands on it, and there is not a power in the world that would dare to violate the declaration, because it would know that a violation of it simply meant a terrible and destructive war with the greatest nation of modern times.

But if there is any doubt upon this point, how easy it would be to settle it by an amicable arrangement. I myself had the honor to introduce into this House a joint resolution, now pending before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which provides that the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners on behalf of the United States to meet a like number of commissioners from each one of the leading nations of the world, at a conveniently early day, at Washington, to formulate a plan for an agreement, to be reported back to the respective governments for their adoption, forever guaranteeing the entire independence of Hawaii, and prohibiting the taking possession of any part of its soil.

There is not a nation on the face of the earth that would not be willing to accept an agreement containing this proposition. England is committed to the principle; France is committed to it; Japan is committed to it. I assume, sir, that the President would be willing to negotiate a treaty upon the basis of such a plan if Congress passed this resolution; that, even if he did not sign it, he would be disposed to accept it as an expression of popular will, and take the initiative in the matter, thus obviating any constitutional objections, if such exist, to the joint resolution.

Mark you, I do not say that such an agreement is necessary, for I do not believe the possession of these islands is essential to our safety. I do not believe the people of Hawaii, if we reject this proposition, will ever give themselves away to any other nation. I have demonstrated, I think, quite conclusively that there is no danger that any other nation will step in and undertake to take possession of it by force.

But, I say, if anyone has any fears on this subject, here is a proposition which will accomplish the very purpose of annexation, prevent this island from falling into the hands of any foreign country, and at the same time relieve us from the terrible burdens that would come from annexing it to the United States.

With this proposition agreed to by every nation, making this solemn guaranty, there is not a country in the whole compact that would ever dare attempt, in case of war, to seize the island as a base for operations against us. Such an attempt would call down not only our own resentment and the resentment of the people of Hawaii, but the resentment and interposition of the other nations that were parties to the agreement.

Ah, but I have been told by gentlemen to whom this plan has been submitted that it involves "entangling alliances" with foreign powers—the very thing that we have been warned against by Washington in his memorable Farewell Address.

Entangling alliances! Why, the very purpose is to prevent entangling alliances and things infinitely worse. Entangling alliances! It is just such an alliance as we have to-day with many nations upon various subjects which concern us, and if I mistake not is something akin to the alliance which we have at this time with certain nations with respect to our rights and their rights in the island of Samoa.

I have been told, too, that it involves a surrender of the Monroe doctrine. Mr. Speaker, I have never yet been able to find two gentlemen who could agree in their definition of this famous doctrine. It certainly is a very elastic doctrine which can be extended 2,200 miles out into the Pacific Ocean. But admitting that it is capable of such expansion, let us stop and consider for a moment whether this objection that has been suggested to the scheme is tenable.

I took great pleasure in reading the other day a memorable speech delivered by Mr. Calhoun in 1848 in the Senate of the United States, a speech which I had read once before years ago, containing an exposition of the Monroe doctrine. He points out very clearly in this speech that which a certain jingo element in this country would do well just at this crisis of public affairs to observe, that this doctrine had frequently been misconceived and misconstrued, and that individuals had often sought to extend it far beyond its proper scope and in a manner that was extremely dangerous to the country. He declared that as construed by some the doctrine would put it in the power of every petty South American country to involve us in all its wars.

He further declared that the Monroe doctrine did not arbitrarily make each occupation of territory in this hemisphere a cause for offense and resistance by us, but that whether an occupation was to be so regarded and treated must depend upon the facts in each particular case, and he then went on to define the doctrine as involving three principles. What were they? First, that the Holy Alliance, formed after the overthrow of Napoleon by certain European nations, the object of which was to discourage republican institutions and to promote monarchical institutions, and which was particularly aimed at that time, so far as this hemisphere was concerned, at the provinces of Spain in South America, should not enforce its peculiar tenets in the Western Hemisphere; second, that there should be no oppression by the nations of the Old World of the people of this hemisphere, and third, that there should be no colonization by foreign nations upon this hemisphere, whether upon land that was previously occupied or land that was unoccupied.

Now, tell me, gentlemen, if you please, which one of these three principles the plan I have suggested for the neutralization of the Hawaiian Islands violates?

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. No. The gentleman must pardon me; I prefer not to be interrupted, as I have only a little time.

Mr. TAWNEY. You have an hour; more time than anybody else.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman will do me a kindness and do himself infinite honor if he will drop into his seat. I do not want to yield to him. If I had more time, I should gladly do so.

The holy alliance has gone out of existence. That principle can not apply. It would not be an oppression of these people, for its very purpose is to secure their independence. It would not be a colonization of them. It would leave them to determine the conditions of immigration and of residence for themselves.

If, however, it is thought that by inviting other nations to have a voice in this arrangement concerning Hawaii there would be a yielding up of the principles of the Monroe doctrine, how easy it is to disavow such a surrendering except in this specific case in the very agreement itself, and to declare that the making of it by us shall not be construed as a warrant to the contracting nations for aggression in our hemisphere.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is contended that we already have a perpetual right to Pearl Harbor, which is the essential part of the Hawaiian Islands, under our second reciprocity treaty with that country. This harbor and its immediate environments are practically all that is necessary to be held for war operation and a coaling station. I grant you that whether we possess perpetual right in this harbor is a debatable question. Mr. Bayard has said that our rights there will expire when the treaty expires.

But, sir, I see it positively stated that Mr. Sherman has said and that Mr. MORRILL has said that it was the understanding, when this Pearl River Harbor grant to us was inserted in the last reciprocity treaty with Hawaii, that it guaranteed to us a permanent right to that harbor. It is also stated that they have said that Mr. Edmunds, whose legal ability no man can gainsay, drew the provision with this very object in mind, and that he always put that construction upon it.

But I care not which one of these constructions is accepted. The fact remains that we can, if we want to, purchase Pearl Harbor of Hawaii and fortify it, and in my humble opinion we can purchase it without any difficulty. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that general leave has been granted to extend remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I presume that includes the printing of papers and documents which any gentleman may desire to include in an appendix to his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. General leave has been granted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will avail myself of that right. Mr. Speaker, I can not conceive it possible that the Hawaiian people, whom, as I have shown, we have always aided to maintain their independence, and to whose products we have granted the most liberal admission to our ports, would refuse to sell us this harbor if we offered to purchase it, especially as we are looked to as one of the nations which will perpetually guarantee their absolute freedom from any foreign attempt at domination.

To be sure, sir, the simple ownership of this harbor will be in many ways a burden to us, but it would not be near as bad as the ownership of the entire island, for reasons which will readily occur from what I have said and what I shall say before I close my remarks. The purchase of this harbor I of course only suggest as a choice of evils, in the event we are obliged to own any territory in the Sandwich Islands at all.

I have thus endeavored to maintain the second of my propositions—that annexation of Hawaii is not necessary to prevent it from passing into the ownership of some other nation and being used to menace and attack our coast. If the island remains free from the grasp of other countries, the same object, so far as preventing offensive warfare being waged against us is concerned, is attained as would be secured by our annexation of it, and "painted ships would lie upon painted seas" for want of a coaling station and base of supplies in the Pacific Ocean.

True, for purposes of defense we would not own the island, but would have there only the right of a neutral power; but we could well endure this, sir, rather than take upon ourselves the burdens which ownership would entail. Besides, what need would we have of Hawaii for defense when the enemy could not avail himself of it for purposes of attack? What defense is necessary to be made against war ships which are powerless for lack of coal and a base of supplies in the island? If, perchance, however, an enemy should reach our shores with coal obtained from collieries, or in some other way, we could safely trust to our Navy, whose coal supply would be at its very back, and to our coast defenses, manned by our Army, for an effective defense.

Much that I have already said, Mr. Speaker, bears upon the third proposition for which I am contending. Let me now discuss this proposition a little further and submit some remarks on other matters closely related to it.

What disposition, sir, do we propose to make of Hawaii and of these other islands which the valor of our soldiers and sailors will soon transfer to our possession when we have obtained them? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has not condescended to give us any light upon this very pertinent inquiry. In the course of his remarks yesterday he even exclaimed, "I scorn to discuss with any man what is to come of this acquisition."

Indeed, all the other gentlemen who have advocated annexation in this debate have also "scorned" to discuss this question, so far as I have observed. Generally speaking, they have been careful to avoid this phase of the subject, adverting to it only when interrogated about it, and then dismissing it hurriedly with the declaration that the question will be solved when the proper time arrives, that we can safely be trusted to determine the matter wisely, and other answers equally as vague and evasive.

Mr. Speaker, what kind of statesmanship is this which regards only present action and gives no thought to ultimate results? Is this the kind of "leadership" which we are to follow—the leadership which leaps without looking? Is forethought to be thus abandoned and everything in the future thus left so largely to chance? Is this a wise course to pursue? Is it prudent in a matter so important as this, so fraught with far-reaching and dangerous possibilities to our people? I for one do not "scorn" to discuss the question, and I again ask what do we propose to do with Hawaii and these other insular territories when we get them? The demand for the immediate passage of the pending resolution makes this a present problem, and gentlemen can not either ignore or evade it.

Are we going to erect these islands into States, admit them to the Union, and confer the right of suffrage upon their inhabitants? Why, sir, these mongrel denizens of the Tropics are utterly incapable of self-control, to say nothing of self-government. What, pray, do they know about free institutions, and what can they be taught concerning them, for that matter? Confer Statehood and suffrage upon them, and they will not only be in confusion themselves, but they will also work irreparable injury to the whole Union. The Senators and Representatives which they will elect to Congress under the machinations of the designing knaves who will control them will be men who are both unscrupulous and incapable, and whose only mission will be evil.

Have we not enough ignorant voters now within our borders that we need to increase their number? Is not a more general diffusion of knowledge and an elevation of the standard for citizenship the imperative demand of the hour? Shall great public issues affecting the vital interests of all our people be submitted for determination to the Senators and Representatives from Hawaii, Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines? Shall they, by holding the balance of power and casting the decisive votes where the questions are close, shape thereby the civil policy and direct the destiny of 70,000,000 of free people?

You can not break the force of this objection, sir, by admitting these islands as States in the Union and yet depriving the masses of the right to vote by the imposition of a restricted ballot. Such a policy would establish in Cuba and Puerto Rico a suggestion of slavery much akin to that which existed in Georgia and Alabama before the war; it would impose upon Hawaii and the Philippines by the force of positive law the same deprivation of suffrage which is claimed to exist in the Southern States now, in defiance of law, and as a matter of fact; it would establish in this great Republic by legal enactment the hateful rule of caste, and create an oligarchy under the American flag as tyrannical and as brutal as any that ever flourished in the despotisms of the Old World.

Can you avoid these difficulties, gentlemen, by creating these provinces into Territories after the manner in which our Territories have been accustomed to be administered? Why, sirs, the same incapacity that unfits those alien people for statehood unfits them also for territorial form of government, for in our Territories the people largely govern themselves and manage their own affairs.

There is but one other course left open to us. We must govern these islands as conquered provinces. We must hold them by the hand of stern repression, by laying upon them the heavy hand of mail, according to their inhabitants neither participation nor representation in our Government. It is thus that ancient Rome was accustomed to hold her conquered territory. It is thus that England now holds certain of her tropical possessions. We must have our captains-general, our governors-general, our councils of administration, and our executive councils. We need not call our governing bodies by these very names, but they will possess and exercise the precise functions of these dignitaries.

But where do we find American precedent or authority for such a form of government as this? You will search for it in vain, though you ransack every archive and depository in the land. Nor can you find any sanction for it in the customs of our people. The Declaration of Independence, the spirit and letter of the Federal and State constitutions, the utterances and writings of the fathers, every page in the Federalist, the teachings of our publicists, the decisions of all our courts, aye, the very genius of our free institutions, as well as the invariable practices of our people, cry out in vigorous protest against it.

This Government of ours is "of the people, for the people, and by the people;" it contemplates no such thing as the holding of provinces with no right of local control and no hope of ultimate statehood. It was conceived in protest against the holding of men in servitude. It hath ever been and ever must be the antithesis to that odious system which holds possessions by the sword and draws sustenance from their products. Under our flag individual aspirations for liberty and citizenship are encouraged. If men are never to be qualified to participate in the blessings of free government, we should studiously avoid extending over them the folds of our starry flag. A name will avail us nothing if we abandon the essence of our polity. We can not remain a republic and at the same time practice the methods of a despotism.

And where, may I ask, have we the machinery for the government of provinces? I know, sir, that we pride ourselves upon our capacity for political affairs; that we boast of our genius for administration. I have heard gentlemen say that whatever any other nation can do we can do also. Notwithstanding all this, I venture to suggest that we have no special training for the management of colonies and outlying provinces in the region of the Tropics, populated by alien and mongrel races. Great Britain, who has been beyond doubt the most successful of modern nations in this line, despite the many misfortunes which have plagued her in her colonies, is thoroughly equipped for such administration. She possesses a magnificent civil service, in which persons are specially educated and equipped for the government of her dependencies. With her favoritism is unknown in the selection of these officials. The most perfect qualification is required.

But how long would we tolerate such a system of selection of men for the administration of our tropical possessions; we who are constantly denouncing our civil service as an undemocratic and monarchical institution and are vociferously demanding its overthrow and destruction? Ah, sir, of one thing we may well rest assured: Whatever form of government we may confer upon these islands, the offices essential to the conduct of their affairs will be eagerly sought after with wild clamor by the henchmen of public men as rewards for political services which they have rendered to their masters. Favoritism in appointments will abound. Thorough equipment for the work will be largely ignored.

We have recently seen the incompetent sons of the wealthy and the favored sons of public men appointed to offices created by the war through the influences which wealth and public station were able to command, while the meritorious sons of the poor and the private citizens who were without influence in public affairs were passed over in dead silence. Can we expect any different conditions to prevail in our appointments to our provincial offices? We will but augment the opportunities for favoritism and increase the number of offices to corrupt men's consciences. And what is to be expected, gentlemen, of an administration of a province conducted by such appointees as these? Away from the scrutiny of the home Government, they will prey like harpies upon the ignorant people, who will not only be incapable of defense but even incapable of protest. Injustice, speculation, and scandal equal to that practiced by Lord Clive and Warren Hastings in India will be the order of the day.

Our public officials will vie with the unscrupulous adventurers who will seek these islands in hopes of bettering their fortunes, in schemes for their enrichment by means of oppression and plunder. The great syndicates and trusts will find there a congenial field for their operations, where, away from the pressure of that public opinion which here imposes a certain degree of restraint upon their excesses, they will pursue their heartless and unconscionable practices without stint and without restraint.

These provinces, too, Mr. Speaker, will become the inevitable home for political intrigue. Here it will be that the unscrupulous politicians will lay their plans, will hatch schemes for the control not simply of dependencies but of States—of the National Government itself. The thunderbolts that are to be launched at a free people will be forged upon these islands, which, in our weakness and folly, we unconsciously dedicated to this hostile purpose.

And thus, Mr. Speaker, this new and unfortunate policy, this rash and wholly unnecessary experiment, will not only inflict upon our helpless dependencies tyranny, misgovernment, and extortion, but it will also entail shame and dishonor upon ourselves and be the prolific source of anxiety, irritation, and, I doubt not, of bloodshed.

Sir, we do not want Hawaii or any of these other islands. We do not care to assume their debts and obligations. We have enough debt of our own, now rapidly increasing day by day, to tax our resources severely and impose heavy burdens upon our people. Let Hawaii keep her volcanoes, which are extinct, and her leprosy, which is extant. Nor do we covet the vices and miseries of these heterogeneous populations of the tropics. Their possession will promote neither our happiness, our prosperity, nor our power as a nation.

We do not need any of this territory for the expansion of our people, for, unlike the thickly-settled nations of the Old World, we have here a mighty area, a vast empire of our own, amply large enough to accommodate with comfort any possible increase to which our population may attain in centuries to come. We have variety of soil and climate, diversity of industries, and unbounded natural resources and material wealth all at our command. Our fields are to be sown with grain, our mines are to be opened and worked, our factories are to be operated, and there are sufficient to occupy our time and our energies and to yield us an ample return for our endeavors. Why should we, then, abandon the development of that which is our own for these less desirable and less profitable lands, where none but those who are accustomed to the climate can cultivate with success?

We can not afford, sir, to take these people in the Tropics into political union with ourselves, but upon this I have already dwelt. They are an inferior race; they are not at all of our habits of thought. Unlike the inhabitants of the Temperate Zone, they are wholly incapable of assimilation, and without capacity either to appreciate or embrace the genius of our institutions. Mr. Garfield was right when he said, at the time the first treaty of reciprocity with Hawaii was pending, that there ought never to be any extension of our territory into the Tropics and that to do so would weaken both our Government and our people.

Nor should we annex to our domain, Mr. Speaker, any territory whose people are many of them unwilling to consent to the annexation. Talk, sir, about the authority of the Hawaiian Government as you will (and no one disputes its de facto existence nor that it has the bare legal right to form a union with us by treaty, as provided in its constitution), the fact, nevertheless, remains, and it is useless to deny it, that a large number of the people there are strongly opposed to this movement. Of this we have ample evidence. Shall we now, as a free people, invoke the technicalities and brush aside the equities of the case to the end that we may receive in a spirit of cupidity a gift which the Dole Government can not in honor and good faith proffer and which we can not in honor and good faith accept?

Gentlemen, we do not desire to establish a precedent by making this acquisition. We appreciate that it will scarcely be made before it will be cited as authority for still further encroachments. Ah, Mr. Speaker, how easy it is to make a misstep! How difficult to recover ground once lost! How terrible the force of a wrongful inertia!

We oppose the pending resolution, too, because it involves a total abandonment of our cherished traditions, traditions which we have maintained faithfully from the foundation of the Government down to the present hour, save in the sole case of Alaska, which, in addition to having embroiled us in controversy with the mother country, and entailed upon us anxiety and expense, is still within the boundaries of experiment and yet capable of involving us in additional perplexity and embarrassment.

I have heard those who oppose these efforts at annexation stigmatized, both here and elsewhere, as back numbers, as barnacles who impede the onward progress of the ship of state. It has been said that we are making now precisely the same arguments and predictions which were made against the annexation of all the vast territory whose subsequent history has added so much to the greatness of the country and has shown conclusively the fallacy of the objection urged to its annexation. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who indulge in this kind of prattle seem wholly incapable of drawing plain distinctions.

In the exuberance of their denunciation they seem to overlook entirely the difference between annexing territory which is contiguous and territory which is insular, territory which is in the temperate and territory which is in the tropical zone, territory which our own people are capable of inhabiting and cultivating and territory which they can neither exist in with comfort nor cultivate without distress; between territory in which self-government is a possibility and territory in which it is wholly out of the question, territory which can be defended with ease and territory which can be defended only at great risk and expense.

Under this traditional policy of ours, sir, we have grown and developed until we have become the wealthiest and most powerful country upon the globe, far outstripping in progress the nations who have adopted and practiced the policy of insular acquisitions.

This marvelous progress has everywhere excited wonder and admiration. It has drawn from the lips of Mulhall, the famous English statistician, the loftiest panegyric, and Bismark, one of the greatest and most far-seeing statesmen in all Europe, has spoken of it in terms of unstinted praise and commendation. Why, then, gentlemen, should we not let well enough alone? Why do you insist that we shall abandon the high and secure ground from which, in conscious pride, we have been accustomed to look down with philosophy and contempt upon the selfish and costly struggles of other nations for spoils, and the frictions and conflicts thus engendered, and ourselves become greedy participants in the ignoble strife?

Mr. Sherman has twice entered his solemn protest against this dangerous policy—the first time before he assumed a place in the Cabinet of the present Chief Executive, and the second time soon after his retirement therefrom. On each of these occasions he declared most emphatically not only against the annexation of Hawaii, but also against any annexation of insular territory whatever.

Concentration, sir, not diffusion, is the desideratum; a nation which is compact, not one which is scattered to all parts of the globe. Russia seems to have grasped the force of this proposition. She saw in Alaska a segregation which was her weakness. She was glad to rid herself of the danger. Her great power to-day rests no more upon her vast population and her autocratic rule than upon the compactness of her domain, from which she can send forth her mighty armies to attack and overpower, and yet be under no necessity of defending distant provinces from the assaults of her enemy.

Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines once a part of our domain, they become not sources of strength but sources of weakness. They are vulnerable places in our national armor which invite attack. They will be constant subjects for irritating differences with other powers—powers with whom our present isolation makes it easy for us to remain at peace and yet grow and prosper with unprecedented rapidity. It is the possession of outlying territory that to-day puts Spain in our power. Her diffusion is her greatest weakness.

With this territory wrested from her grasp, we will be better able to defend it than she; but reflect one moment, sir, at what an enormous outlay of trouble and expense. Admiral Irwin, himself a strong advocate of territorial expansion, admits that the adoption of such a policy will require us to maintain a navy equal in power to any in the world. Measure, gentlemen, the disparity between our own Navy and that of the mother country, and then tell me what it will cost us to build such a navy, to say nothing of the cost of its maintenance.

But the Navy is not the only arm of our service which will be needed. Our Army must be enormously increased in size, for these various acquisitions must be both strongly fortified and garrisoned. And there, gentlemen, is also our increased reserves, and our coast defenses, which must not be neglected, for this novel and splendid policy of empire which we are to inaugurate requires that we shall continue to defend our own shores as well as defend these islands which we are to acquire.

Mr. Speaker, this is a brilliant and a dazzling career that is being marked out for us; but will it pay? Will our people be the happier, the more prosperous, the more powerful, if they pursue it? The trained eye of Bismarck has been quick to grasp our situation and to see our folly, and he has declared that this proposed policy would be an intermeddling policy, leading to unavoidable frictions; that it would require us to become a military and a naval power—which he characterizes as an expensive luxury, rendered unnecessary by our geographical position. He has truthfully declared also that our change of front means retrogression in the high sense of civilization.

Mr. Speaker, are we to exchange the tranquillity which has been ours for the alarm and anxiety which is the plague of the people who thirst for universal empire? Are we to have war flurries which disturb business and international differences which check development? Our interest clearly requires that we should steer clear of an Anglo-American alliance, however much our sympathy may bind us to our kindred across the sea. But what nation which holds colonies has ever yet been able to avoid alliances with other powers in order to maintain her possessions against nations of envious and unfriendly disposition or whose interests clash with her own? Does not all history demonstrate that this is true?

Gentlemen, there is but one safe course to pursue. Let us avoid the segregation which leads to war and makes defense difficult. Let us preserve our territory compact, where our geographical position, our immense population, and our great resources render us impervious to successful attack. Our base of supplies is thus at our very backs; our lines of communication can not be cut off. Let us apply ourselves to the correction of internal grievances by the passage of just and wholesome laws, and to the development of our wonderful natural resources. That we should have an adequate Army and Navy and coast defenses is undoubtedly true; but let our mission be that of peace, and no nation is likely to disturb or to oppress us. It has not been done in the past; it is not at all likely to occur in the future.

But I have heard it said in this debate that we must acquire these possessions to increase our trade. Mr. Speaker, neither economic science nor human experience sanctions the theory that trade can only be built up by the annexation of territory. The logical way to increase our trade is to produce commodities superior in quality and cheaper in price than our competitors, and then to break down the walls of our tariff, except so far as the protection of our laboring population makes it necessary that it shall stand, that combines and trusts may not interdict trade, oppress the consumer, and grow wealthy upon the monopolies which they enjoy. Nor should we forget, sir, that trade is not the selling of commodities for money, but the exchange of commodities for commodities.

I confess my amazement that gentlemen on this floor who are staunch Republican protectionists should be urging so strongly the annexation to the United States of these tropical countries where cheap cool labor, under the direction and control of great syndicates and corporations, can and will produce competing products of the American farm, such, for instance, as rice, sugar, and tobacco, cheaper than they can be produced here, and then transport them to our shores duty free and sell them in the American market.

What is likely to be the effect, sir, upon the American laborer, especially the American farm laborer, of such a policy as this? I do not wonder, in view of the outlook, that the president of the American Federation of Labor has addressed a letter to the Speaker of this House protesting against the passage of the pending resolution. Mr. Speaker, this new policy of imperialism is against both the interest of the farmer and the interest of the laborer, and for this reason those who profess to be in sympathy with these classes should antagonize the policy at the very outset.

And, then, there is the Monroe doctrine. Gentlemen, has this doctrine no corollary? What is it that has induced the trans-Atlantic nations to acquiesce in our domination in this hemisphere if it is not our disavowal of all intention or right to interfere in the affairs of the other hemisphere? And yet it is now openly declared on every hand by those who believe in this "march of empire" that we propose, having justly pushed our way to the very doors of Asia, to remain there after our necessity has ceased and establish ourselves forever as a factor in the local affairs of the Orient.

Think you that this course will increase European respect for the Monroe doctrine and tend to increase its stability? Beware, gentlemen, of the law of retaliation. We must take the burdens along with the supposed benefits of this novel doctrine which we are to embrace. Let us not be surprised if we become the subject of reprisals from abroad and if, in grasping for power there, we suddenly discover that we are in danger of losing power nearer home.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, there is one pathway out of this dilemma which is less dangerous than the rest. Why shall we not take it? Let us reject the proposition to annex Hawaii. Let us retire from Cuba as soon as possible after this war and the establishment of an independent and stable government by its people, thus keeping faith with the Cubans, the world, and ourselves.

Let us not hesitate to seize upon Spanish soil wherever the necessities of war may demand it for the sake of victory; but when peace is restored and our indemnity paid, let us restore her lost provinces to the Government at Madrid, or, if Spain will not or can not redeem them, let us dispose of them to some other nation, for we will hardly be able to find a purchaser who will not govern them more justly than she. This should be done for our own sake, not for the sake of Spain. Having done this, let us turn again to peaceful pursuits and to the realization of that glorious destiny which awaits us if we are only true to traditions which deserve to be imperishable.

APPENDIX.

[Mr. Webster's letter to Edward Everett.]

March 23, 1843, Daniel Webster, then Secretary of State, wrote Edward Everett, our minister to England:

"The course adopted by this Government in regard to the Sandwich Islands has for its sole object the preservation of the independence of these islands and the maintenance by their Government of an entire impartiality in their intercourse with foreign states. The United States desires to exercise no undue influence or control over the government of the islands, nor to obtain from it any grant of exclusive privileges whatever. This was solemnly declared in the President's message to Congress."

[Extract from speech of James A. Garfield.]

I wish to state distinctly on the general question of annexation of outlying islands or territory—except in the north, and I make an exception there—that I trust we have seen the last of annexation, and in this remark I include the whole group of the West India Islands and the whole of the Mexican territory contiguous to the United States, inhabited as it is by a portion of the Latin races, strangely mixed and degenerated by their mixture with native races; a population and a territory that naturally enfeeble man; a population and a territory that I earnestly hope may never be made an integral part of the people and a territory of the United States. We occupy a portion of that great northern zone which girdles the world and which has been the theater of the greatest achievements of civilization, especially in the history of the Anglo-Saxon races; but should we extend our possessions into the tropical (Hawaiian) belt, we would weaken the power of our people and Government.—Congressional Record, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, pages 2273, 2274.

[Extract of letter from British minister to Secretary of State, 1857.]

In December, 1851, Mr. Blaine wrote:

"This Government firmly believes that the position of the Hawaiian Islands as the key to the dominion of the American Pacific demands their benevolent neutrality, to which end it will earnestly cooperate with the native Government."

In December, 1857, the British minister gave the following to our Secretary of State:

"WASHINGTON, December 23, 1857.

"England and France, by the convention of November 28, 1843, are bound to consider the Sandwich Islands as an independent State, and never take possession, either directly or under the title of a protectorate or any other form, of any part of the territory of which they are composed.

"The best way to secure this object would, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, be that the powers chiefly interested in the trade of the Pacific should join in making a formal declaration similar to that of 1843, above alluded to, and that the United States Government should, with England and Germany, guarantee the neutrality and equal accessibility of the islands and their harbors to the ships of all nations without preference."

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Our foreign policy should be at all times firm, vigorous, and dignified, and all our interests in the Western Hemisphere carefully watched and guarded. The Hawaiian Islands should be controlled by the United States, and no foreign power should be permitted to interfere with them; the Nicaraguan Canal should be built, owned, and operated by the United States.

ENGLAND DENIES IT.

The report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations covering the Hawaiian annexation proposition, which was presented by Mr. Davis on March 16, has called forth a protest from Great Britain, and Sir Julian Pauncefote, under instructions from his Government, has informed the Department of State that the committee of the Senate are under an entire misapprehension, and that there is no ground whatever for the allegations contained in the statement.

The passage referred to states that "if Great Britain is not industriously and openly engaged in fomenting this concerted movement for the destruction of the republic and the restoration of the monarchy on its ruins, her agents and the princess, her protégé, are kept conveniently near at hand to fasten her power upon the islands on the happening of any pretext for the protection of the lives and property of British subjects in Hawaii."

[Extract from an article entitled "The New Japan," by Mr. Toru Hoshi, minister of Japan to the United States.]

Japan is so new as a factor in the world's calculations, so little studied, and so little understood, that her motives and her actions are sometimes seriously misconstrued. This is a topic upon which I must speak with due caution, but even at the risk of seeming impropriety I can not allow the opportunity to pass of saying a word upon subjects which have lately been attracting widespread attention.

No citizen of this country should be ignorant of the fact that among the people of Japan there is a genuine and deeply rooted attachment to the United States. It is not a merely sentimental liking, but a feeling founded upon the memory of many kindnesses received. The United States has been a friend to Japan, helpful in the hour of need, considerate at all times. If there was a nation upon whose sympathy they could rely in the effort to improve their condition, and of whose appreciation they were certain in whatever successes they might gain, that nation the Japanese people have thought was the United States.

Such being the case, the tone of many recent utterances in the American press will be to them like an angry blow from a friend. That the American people should regard Japan as an aggressor, lustful of aggrandizement, eager to quarrel, and ready, if need be, for war, will seem to them incomprehensible. And that this clamor should have arisen because their Government, in pursuance of clear and legitimate duty, has chosen to present, in a respectful, calm, and moderate way, certain reasons why a certain thing should not be done, will add to the mystery. There are jingoes in Japan, as a distinguished countryman of mine said the other day, but I have heard of none so forgetful of right, of friendship, and of interest as to make the declaration, recently attributed to Japan by a prominent American journal, "let us send a few war ships to the United States."

This is a delicate subject, I know, but I can not refrain from saying that Americans especially should appreciate the solicitude which Japan feels in the welfare of her subjects in foreign countries. The Japanese Government has never permitted the establishment of anything like a "coolie" system among her people. If they go abroad, it desires that they shall go as men and not as numbers, and it asks and expects for them the same treatment and the same protection as are accorded to other strangers. Whatever may be said to the contrary, the Japanese are not an emigrating people; but to provide for all contingencies an emigration law has been enacted, carefully framed, to protect the emigrant and to prevent him from going to countries where he would not be welcome. Japanese emigration to Hawaii involves this, among other questions. That emigration was instituted upon the solicitation of Hawaii under the strictly guarded stipulations of a special treaty.

The welfare, much less the independence, of Hawaii has never been endangered by the operations of that treaty. On the contrary, Japanese immigration was zealously promoted and encouraged in the islands until political contingencies rendered another policy advisable. Japan did not seek the treaty, but her people have been induced to resort to Hawaii under the guarantees it provides, and certainly no one with any sense of justice can now blame her for endeavoring to conserve their rights.

Touching upon another yet a cognate subject, it may be said most emphatically that the Japanese nation has no tendency toward territorial aggrandizement. Neither in the past history of the Empire nor in its modern annals can there be found any trace of such a spirit. Formosa was taken from China, but that was in lieu of indemnity, which it was inconvenient for China to pay; besides, the status of Formosa as an appendage of China has not always been strictly maintained.

At one time the Japanese, Chinese, and Dutch simultaneously occupied different parts of the island. More recently Japan sent an expedition thither, with the consent of China, as was supposed, to punish the savages for their cruelty to shipwrecked seamen. Historically, therefore, there were close relations between Japan and Formosa. The most conclusive reason, however, in favor of the cession of the island is that by geographical position it is a natural addition to the Empire. The cession of the Liao-tung Peninsula is the only other instance of the forcible acquisition of territory by Japan. The peninsula was returned to China, and although the return excited some popular disapproval, it was not so much on account of the loss of territory as because of the manner of retrocession.

I repeat, therefore, that history affords no example of greed of territorial aggrandizement on the part of Japan. It is as foreign to the genius of her people as it is to the designs of her government. The charge that she intends, either by forcible seizure or by peaceful occupation, to acquire possession of a country thousands of miles distant and totally without the sphere of her territorial influence, can therefore only be accounted for in one of two ways: It is either prompted by ignorance or by interested motives.

Japan's real ambition lies in quite another direction. In her geographical position, her natural resources, as well as in the capacity and adaptability of her people, she perceives the surest means of attaining national greatness. The watchwords of the Japan of to-day are enterprise and industry. The people have turned their attention to commerce, to manufactures, and to the arts. They realize the advantages their country possesses, and are doing what they can to utilize them. They may not yet have reached the full measure of their ambition, but they look forward hopefully to the time when Japan will be the emporium of the Orient, firmly bound to her neighbors, east and west, by the strong ties of mutual interest.

For the neutralization of the Sandwich Islands.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to appoint three commissioners to meet a like number of commissioners appointed on the part of each of the Governments of Great Britain, Germany, Russia, France, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Japan, and China, to meet at the city of Washington at as early a date as may be practicable, the said commissioners to formulate and consider and report to their respective Governments a plan for the neutralization and independence of the Sandwich Islands and the prevention in the future of any nation taking possession of said islands, either directly or indirectly. That the sum of — be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the said commission.

[Resolution reported to House of Representatives by the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs as a substitute for the resolution of annexation reported by the committee.]

MAY 21, 1898.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, 1. That the United States will view as an act of hostility any attempt on the part of any government of Europe or Asia to take or hold possession of the Hawaiian Islands, or to exercise upon any pretext or under any conditions sovereign authority therein.

2. That the United States hereby announces to the people of those islands and to the world their guaranty of the independence of the people of the Hawaiian Islands and their firm determination to maintain the same.

[Extract from newspaper interview of President Dole at Chicago in January, 1898, published in the New York Journal January 24, 1898.]

There is absolutely no foundation for these stories of Hawaii being menaced by Japan. There is absolutely nothing in it. There is nothing in the relations between our country and Japan that hurries me to Washington. Asked what would become of the present Government should the United States refuse annexation, he said: "Well, the Republic is there. I do not know that anything would happen except that things will go on as usual. I do not see any immediate danger from possession by any other country."

[Extract from testimony of Admiral Walker before House Committee on Foreign Affairs in second session Fifty-fifth Congress.]

Mr. BERRY. Suppose a man was going from San Francisco to Shanghai, would he necessarily touch at the Hawaiian Islands?

Admiral WALKER. Not necessarily. He might go far north, up this way [referring to map].

Mr. BERRY. I supposed it was simply because they did not wish to carry coal enough to cross to the Japanese coast and not touch on the Hawaiian Islands; to get the advantage of the space and fill up at the Hawaiian Islands rather than to make the whole trip without touching anywhere.

Admiral WALKER. Steamers run both ways, and in crossing to Shanghai large steamers, which carry an abundance of coal, go farther north than the islands. They sweep up toward the Aleutian Islands because of the shape of the earth, which makes it a shorter distance across.

[Statement of Admiral Irwin, United States Navy.]

I have expressed myself before as to the wisdom of annexing Hawaii, which offers itself to us, and the Spanish possessions we may conquer in the present war. The Ladrões, Carolines, and Philippines, in the Western Ocean, are in the path of trade to India, and the Spanish islands of West Indies should naturally belong to us. The possession of these outposts would make necessary the establishment and maintenance of a navy equal to any in the world.

[Opinion of Bismarck.]

The result of the war can not be wholesome either to America or Europe. The United States will be forced to adopt an intermeddling policy, leading to unavoidable frictions. She thus abandoned her traditional peace policy, and, in order to maintain her position, she must become a military and a naval power—an expensive luxury, which her geographic position rendered unnecessary.

America's change of front means retrogression in the highest sense of civilization. This is the main regrettable fact about this war.

[Article from the Cosmopolitan of March, 1898, on the subject of leprosy in the Hawaiian Islands.]

SHALL WE ANNEX LEPROSY?

By a Hawaiian Government school-teacher.

In the Hawaiian Islands one is never far removed from the seat of government, and the applicants for office are known personally to a majority of foreign residents; hence affairs of state assume a personal character, while the personal matters of citizens often become strangely mixed with the machinery of the Government.

Under such circumstances it naturally follows that anything which tends to detract from the financial prosperity of the island is strongly resisted by foreign residents.

On the subject of leprosy I find the people extremely reticent; indeed, nearly all foreigners seem to have entered into a tacit agreement not to mention it unless it becomes necessary and to dismiss it with the greatest possible dispatch when it is introduced to their notice.

The subject is closely guarded by resident physicians and Government officials. The island publications seldom mention it, and when reference is made to it by them it is of a vague and noncommittal sort, not at all likely to give one a distinct idea of the true state of affairs. In truth, every effort is made here by the people and press to prevent strangers from dwelling upon the fact that leprosy is a common thing on the island or that it exists at all.

Tourists coming here for a short time can form no accurate estimate of its permanency even though they come for the special purpose of learning of it, for the officials will see to it that no one gives information save one whose interests are identical with those of the islands.

Perhaps no one else has so many opportunities of observing the real state of affairs as the Government school-teacher.

As we neared the islands, on our way from California, we ran quite near the north coast of Molokai (Mō-lō-kī) (land of cliffs), and had a clear view of the peninsula and town of Kalaupapa, the latter being the largest leper settlement. The coast is very precipitous. Its walls of rock rise perpendicularly from the sea to a height varying from 1,000 to 2,000 feet, in extreme grandeur and picturesqueness, and are slashed by immense ravines whose broad mouths form natural lawns down to the very sea waves.

On one of these green spaces, which extends about a mile along the shore, stand the whitewashed cottages and grass huts of the lepers. On either side the perpendicular "pālis" rise gray and stern. Before them the blue Pacific stretches away unbroken for 2,000 miles, and behind them the mountains tower aloft to meet the clouds in indescribable irregular, jagged peaks. Their form speaks at once of a violent and fiery origin, though they are now mostly clothed in robes of perpetual green.

In their savage roughness they serve as impassable guards on the south side of Kalaupapa, the only access to the peninsula being by the sea and by a slender path cut along the face of a cliff, so narrow and difficult that cattle can not be driven down it, and the settlement depends upon schooners for its supply of fresh meat.

In 1865 the Hawaiian Government chose this isolated spot for the centralization and segregation of leprosy. Hundreds of lepers were at that time scattered up and down the islands, living in the most intimate relations with their friends, who seemed perfectly unaware of or indifferent to the danger of infection. But laws were passed for their apprehension, and it became the painful duty of the marshal and board of health to make repeated voyages around the island and collect the victims.

The woes of those who were taken, the dismay of those who were left, and the agonized partings when friends and relatives clung to the swollen limbs and kissed the glistening, bloated faces of those who were exiled from them forever, formed a scene which, once witnessed, was never to be forgotten; and yet it is still a common one on the islands.

None ever returns from that home of hideous disease and slow-coming death. It is a community of doomed beings, socially dead, "whose only business is to perish;" beings who "have no more a portion in anything that is done under the sun;" condemned to watch the repulsive steps by which their fellows go down to a loathsome death, knowing that they, too, must pass by the same way.

We felt relieved when we had passed the settlement, though it looked harmless and peaceful enough in the distance, bathed as it was by the friendly sunshine and washed by the lazy waves.

Near Honolulu a temporary home for lepers has been established. To this place they are sent from the various islands of the group, and from there they are sent to Molokai, thus preventing the making of mistakes by unskilled physicians in the outlying districts. No one is permitted to visit this institution except by permission from the board of health, which is seldom granted.

I felt much interest in the subject and made many fruitless endeavors to learn the facts of the situation while I was in Honolulu, but no one had anything to say about leprosy, and all appeared so indifferent that I finally became so too.

Before leaving Honolulu I was advised by a friend to take my own bed linen and towels on the Kinaw (the interisland steamer), no definite reason being given except that natives often used its staterooms.

In the various outlying districts I found that foreigners live entirely apart from the natives. The Hawaiians are not fitted, morally or intellectually, for social intercourse with the respectable foreigners here. They have their own churches, with native pastors, and there are sixty-four native schools on the islands, with Hawaiian teachers only, who teach the Hawaiian language. It is impossible in many localities to secure foreign teachers, as there is no place for them to board except among the natives.

My native assistant teacher is considered a model for a Hawaiian woman, and yet she is scarcely more than half civilized. She has little opportunity of becoming familiar with the ways of well-ordered homes; consequently knows little of them. She knows nothing of cooking except to roast fish in the ground and boil beef over hot stones. She sits crosslegged on a mat to take her meals, and eats poi with her fingers from a calabash which is common to the whole family. She has absolutely no knowledge of books aside from text-books, and reading, writing, and a very little arithmetic are all she has gained from them.

Hawaiian women are not employed as house servants. Few families care to have one of them about their homes. So the Hawaiian people are cast out from all intimate relations with the respectable foreign population here, and, with a very few exceptions, have almost no opportunity of improvement except through the efforts of their foreign teachers, and the teachers work with them at the school buildings only.

When I expressed a desire to see and know more of the people in their homes, I was met by a polite stare and told that it would not be safe to visit some of their dwellings.

On visiting the schools I found the teachers wearing gloves in the school-room, and using various precautions against contact with the children. I found by degrees that neither their moral nor intellectual deficiencies served to bar this people from foreign society as did their physical foulness. Rumors of leprosy reached me more and more frequently and clearly. I found the teachers of the Government schools to be less reticent than other foreigners, as they have little financial interest in the islands, and are often here for but a short time.

Before the new administration, the laws for the segregation of lepers were much what they are at the present time, but so large a majority of the sheriffs and officers were natives that it was found to be impossible for the Government physician to apprehend the lepers until they were too bad to be removed.

The native officials would warn them in time that they might be concealed.

The lepers generally roamed about at will, afraid of the physician only. One met them in the highways and in the stores. No effort was made by the officials to secure them, but after the resolution of 1887 the present Government physician was appointed, together with white sheriffs, and the work of segregation began in earnest.

The lepers of the district now became alarmed. Many of them fled to the mountains. Twenty-five formed a company and took up their abode in an isolated valley between some great pails. The spot faces the sea, and is almost totally inaccessible by any other route. The Government physician allowed them to remain in this retreat until he found that they were coming out at various times to visit friends, and that they were making "awe" (their native intoxicating drink) for sale. This determined the physicians to make an effort toward securing them. Accordingly the plans were all laid to go by sea at night with a force of officers and secure them all. A native heard the sheriff read the names to the doctor, and at once discerned their intention. He stole a horse the same night, rode as far as possible, and scrambled the remainder of the way over those awful pails to inform his friends of their peril.

When the officers reached the valley they found the lepers' huts empty, with every evidence of a precipitate flight. The poor hunted lepers had not remained to secure even their most valued possessions. They have all been killed or taken since. God help them!

Some in our district who were known to be lepers remained in their homes, and, by the timely intervention of friends, managed to elude the sheriff.

One wealthy Hawaiian woman, who lived in the house which adjoins my present dwelling, remained here for more than a year, in spite of the efforts of the physician to secure her, during which time she kept the disease in check by the assistance of the native healers, who sucked the poisonous blood from the leprous spots. One of her relatives was finally bribed to betray her.

The natives hide their friends in cane fields, caves, and gulches, or under mats in their own homes. Some have been discovered when their limbs were gone and only a bloated head and trunk remained. Such a case as this is at present only a short distance from me.

But, in the face of all this misery, nothing can be done to arouse fear of contagion among the natives. They will smoke the pipe of a leper, eat poi from his calabash, sleep in his bed, and wear his clothes. They become neither disgusted with his distorted and swollen features nor afraid of becoming infected with the disease. They seem perfectly indifferent as to the risk of contagion.

Although the Hawaiians' family ties are strangely weak, their gregarious or social instincts are exceedingly strong, and they herd together in a manner most repulsive to foreigners. This trait of character greatly aids the spread of leprosy. It has been disseminated by vaccination also and by the aid of flies and mosquitoes; but the exceeding immorality of the people has done more toward perpetuating this disease than any other cause.

Considering the number still at large and the 1,400 on Molokai, I estimate that about 5 per cent of all the inhabitants of these islands are lepers.

The schools are examined twice a year by a government physician, and each child who is not infected by any contagious disease receives a health certificate.

I had one odd little boy in my room. He had a peculiar complexion generally, but was as bright as is usual with these Hawaiian children. He had a dark, slightly protruding mark on his chin, which I took to be a birthmark. When he had been in school a few weeks, he had his arm broken on the playground. After school I went to his parents and found the arm unset and uncared for. They refused to have a physician. Such actions are characteristic of the natives. They preferred the weird incantations of kahunas (a law has been passed against their practicing) to anything more scientific.

I called an intelligent-looking native in from the road as he was passing, and with his help as an interpreter, I insisted on their sending for a physician, but nothing I could say would prevail upon them to do so. I visited them frequently, sitting in their house and handling the boy's hand and arm, with no suspicion that he was a leper. Yet such he was—hence their aversion to having the physician see him.

I noticed a white scurf on one side of his nose, as if the skin had become dry and dead. The old crone with whom he lived tried to explain it to me, but I understood only a word now and then of her language.

The boy returned to school wearing a pair of long trousers, so uncommon an occurrence with these children as to attract my attention at once. One day as he sat in school his limb became exposed and I observed some ugly dark-brown spots upon it. The largest of them was nearly the size of a silver dollar. They looked like blood blisters somewhat, or like the top of a dark-brown mushroom; the skin appeared very thick and wrinkled. I thought he must suffer with such horrid-looking sores, but as nearly every child in school is afflicted with cutaneous eruptions of some sort, I did not yet think of leprosy.

As I watched him he drew up his limb and began squeezing and pressing the spots in an absent, careless manner. In answer to my questions he said that the spots were not sore, that they did not give him any pain, but he was disturbed and began to explain that the spot on his chin was done by a fall. I had stood over that child for weeks, guiding his hand in his first efforts to write, and yet I now felt an instinctive horror of touching him. I touched the spots with the end of my pointer and soon found them to be insensible and lifeless. I decided that unless the physician came the following day I should dismiss the boy from school.

While I was examining him, the tears rolled down his cheeks. He is but 6 years old, and yet seemed to understand fully the consequences of being discovered.

The physician came the next morning, but our patient did not make his appearance. The doctor feared that the child had been concealed, as he stated, that was a suspected family, the mother having died shortly before in that house of leprosy.

No warning had been given me, no instruction as to detecting disease if it appeared in that boy or in any other of the children.

Our Portuguese truant officer soon returned accompanied by the boy, his father (a stalwart Hawaiian in his prime), and his aged grandmother. The child had one limb bandaged, and what was my horror when the bandages were removed to find that the natives had gouged a great piece of flesh from his limb. They said they did it with a piece of glass, and that they would remove the other spots in like manner that evening.

They evidently think there is some virtue in the glass and that the doctor will deem a cure made if the spots are removed. The doctor said that it probably gave the child very little pain, as the flesh about a leprous spot is devoid of feeling almost entirely. One of the surest means of ascertaining the presence of the disease is to thrust a needle into the flesh. No pain will result if the disease is leprosy.

On glancing at the child, the doctor said, "He is in for it," and then I knew that it was leprosy. I felt faint and giddy; not so much from the sight of the horrid wounds or fear of personal injury as from the knowledge that I stood face to face with that most terrible of human ills. None of us mentioned the word. We said "it" and "that," but never leprosy.

The child was almost a baby, and I pictured him leaving his home and friends to be lost amid the sighs and groans of Molokai. No mother to soothe his path to the awful death before him! I thought of it all in a moment, and my strength deserted me. The child's father lay prone upon the ground wailing dimly, while his aged grandmother clasped her knees and added her shrill voice to the same despairing cry.

After years of experience in the midst of leprosy this physician could only say that it is a strange disease. The father of this boy remained with his wife until her death and is apparently untainted still, while a half-caste woman here was married to three foreigners, each of whom went to Molokai. After each case she was examined for signs of the disease, but none appearing she went free until suddenly it appeared in its most malignant form, and she soon died. Thus it seems that all do not appear to be lepers who are lepers, nor do all who appear to be lepers prove to be so. The Hawaiian blood is very bad. The natives suffer from a great variety of diseases, some of them so nearly resembling leprosy as to be mistaken for it by the most experienced physician.

Some eminent scientists in Honolulu have been experimenting. They tried the virus on a man who was condemned to be hanged, and he was sent to Molokai as a leper.

A physician of large experience informed me that there is scarcely a city in the United States without some lepers, and that he has reason to believe that these islands contribute a majority of them all.

When a case of leprosy develops among the foreigners, it causes a short-lived stir, or is more often secretly sent to the States; but so long as it is confined to the natives—well, "It is only a native. He will be as well off on Molokai, where he will probably meet friends." He will scarcely have a second thought from the foreigners; but what must he feel who knows that the curse is laid upon him or his loved ones?

People in general think of leprosy as something vague and far away. They have read of it in the Scriptures or elsewhere, but they scarcely comprehend that it is an awful reality to-day. Even here, surrounded by it as we are and witnessing the misery it causes, we seldom think of fearing personal injury. It is not strange that people lose their fear of leprosy. Do not thousands of Americans degrade themselves and their families and die miserably every year from the effect of alcohol? And yet if you should warn a man to beware of it, and point to thousands of ruined lives to prove the justness of your warning, nine times out of ten you would be laughed at for your pains.

On Molokai the 1,400 lepers compose a regularly organized community. They have a court with a leprous judge, a store with a leper keeper, leper officials, hospitals with many leper nurses (some of them are not), a school with a leper teacher, and a church with a leper pastor.

Their marriage laws are much like those of other communities, and there are forty children among them who have leprous parents, yet show no signs of the dread disease themselves.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] twenty minutes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with very great pleasure, as has every other member of the House, to my friend from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON]. It is the second time in this session of Congress that he has given the House his views and arguments upon the Hawaiian question, and I think it will not be regarded as a disparagement of others to say that in the speech which he delivered last winter and the speech to which he has just given utterance he has probably made the strongest showing that has been made against the proposition that is now pending.

If that is so, there is a significant lesson to be derived from a consideration of the effect of his arguments.

My friend himself, when the roll call is taken at 5 o'clock, will begin to distrust the value of the arguments which he has made when he discovers that while the House has accorded universal applause to his eloquence, there is, at least among his associates on this side of the House, a singular absence of votes in favor of the proposition which he has defended. Now, while there may not be much, there is something in the fact that an argument so able and so learned, reenforced by a second appearance of the gentleman in this debate, has not been able to command anything except the applause of the House. [Laughter.]

My friend fears that we are being hurried into a discussion and settlement of the Hawaiian question. The first public question that I have any recollection of is the question of annexing Hawaii. I was engaged in a debate on that subject when I was a boy, and was on the side of my friend from Indiana. I do not suppose I made very much of a speech, but I gathered up all that had been said on the subject up to that day and put it into my remarks, and the fellows on the other side gathered up everything that had been said on that side and put it into their speeches.

I recollect that they quoted Daniel Webster against me. They quoted Secretary Marcy. They quoted William H. Seward. I was a little troubled about that phase of the matter, but at that time I thought that I knew more about the business than any of them, and I discounted the authority of any statesman, however great, whatever his politics; but the longer I have lived the more I have come to value the mature judgment of the great statesmen of the last generation. And I say to this House that there can be no better evidence of the merit of the pending proposition than the fact that for nearly sixty years it has been the opinion of our great Secretaries of State that this thing ought to be done.

They never expected that we could accomplish it without bloodshed. They never expected that we could do it without expense. And yet, in the winter of 1893, the hope, the aspiration, and the dream of the statesmen of the last generation came true in the United States, without the loss of a dollar or the shedding of a drop of human blood. This possession in the Pacific Ocean fell into the hands of the American people. Unfortunately we had that year a change of Administration.

Mr. Cleveland made haste—I had almost said indecent haste—to withdraw from the consideration of the Senate the treaty of annexation which had been negotiated by President Harrison. All through his Administration, while he bore many burdens of popular odium and distrust, I think his position on Hawaii did more than any other one thing to enable the Democratic party to cast him off, in a matter in which he was not only strong, but right, without incurring the hostility of the entire American public. [Applause and laughter.]

I recollect that I spent four years among the people of my district disputing the wisdom of the policy of the President of the United States on the Hawaiian question, and so far as I was able to see, I had the sympathy not only of the people of my political way of thinking, but practically of the whole population.

Now, for the second time a treaty has been negotiated annexing these islands, and the opposition of less than a majority in the Senate has held up the treaty and we are driven to the unusual expedient of a joint resolution of Congress to accomplish a thing which ought to have been accomplished nearly ten years ago.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] complains of the action proposed here at the end of a six years' debate, because, he says, it will lead us in the direction of territorial aggression. He says that already our high motives in incurring the burdens of war have been diverted in the direction of conquest. To his imagination the Administration and the American people have already turned aside from the humane purpose with which we entered into this war and are to-day waging it with the design of conquering and taking possession of the islands of the sea; and yet when he comes to the proposition that Great Britain or Germany, or some great commercial power, will possibly in the future take possession of Hawaii, he says such a thing is not to be thought of, that it is incredible and not to be anticipated for a moment.

He seems to see nothing in the action of his own country but the evil passions of national greed and injustice, while the other commercial and military powers are acquitted of all base schemes of selfish aggrandizement. In this he seems to differ from those who champion the minority resolutions, upon which we are shortly to vote. They seem to think that other nations ought to be warned away from Hawaii; that we have enough interest in the islands to protect them from the world, even at the expense of their independence in the matter of choosing their own destiny.

What a jumble is this! The gentleman from Indiana is nearer right than those whose case he has been arguing. We either have an interest in acquiring the islands or we have no interest in standing guard over them against others. If they are important enough to defend from others, they are important enough to acquire for ourselves. I for my part have more confidence in our own country than I have in any other country in the world. We know there is no nation in Europe that does not appreciate the strategic value of this halfway station in the ocean. My friend started out with the proposition that it was not necessary for us in this war.

That is not the question. This war is an incident, a noble and splendid incident, but only a transient incident in the life of a great community like ours. We are not dealing to-day altogether with the war with Spain. We are not acting for this hour, or for this year, or for this century, or for the next century; we are acting for the millenniums yet to come, with our hearts full of the sublime hope that the institutions planted by our fathers shall endure through long distant ages. [Applause.] The fate of the Hawaiian Islands will be settled in the near future, and the nation that gets possession of them, if that nation survives, will hold them for centuries to come; and, therefore, I say to my friend from Indiana, that even if he had succeeded in showing that they are not needed in the emergency of the present war, a proposition which he fell short of maintaining, he has only approached the question here at stake, which touches all the commercial and military problems of the coming generations. Most of us have a little hesitation in putting our judgment against the judgment of the great statesmen of the past. My friend has overcome that. Most of us have a little hesitation in putting ourselves against the military authorities of our own times. My friend from Indiana has overcome that, also. I regret to see so good a man setting himself to write a platform for all the street-corner strategists of the country to stand on. It would seem that we have had enough of cheap and furious general orders issued on the dry-goods boxes in the villages of the United States.

When I want to get light on a military question I go to a man who has made war a study, and for that reason I can not accept my friend's opinion of the military necessity for the annexation of the Sandwich Islands. We have in the United States several great soldiers, men trained to the profession of arms, and who in the civil war proved that they were masters of all its mysteries. All these agree, and their common verdict in this case is against the gentleman from Indiana. I like the gentleman, and confide in his abilities as a lawyer, but in this matter I prefer to go to General Schofield, who says that from a military standpoint the annexation of these islands is a necessity to the United States.

We have also the authority of Captain Mahan, in some respects the most influential living authority in naval matters, an authority on war recognized by the whole world, who says that the annexation of these islands is of immense importance now and hereafter to the successful naval operations of the United States. Now, the gentleman from Indiana ridicules this, and says that the officers of the Army and Navy of the United States, having been educated at our academies, are circumscribed in their outlook and liable to give an unreliable counsel in these matters on account of the selfish prospect of their own promotion.

I am ashamed to listen to such a judgment offered upon this floor. Is it any wonder that my friend, who has pored over the Hawaiian question until he has lost confidence in the foremost statesmen of both parties in the past fifty years, has also had his mind poisoned by the atmosphere which surrounds the position he has taken, until it appears credible to him that the opinions of our great soldiers and sailors are worthless, because, in his judgment, they are actuated by a desire for promotion in the national service? I do not believe it. I believe Captain Mahan's opinion as to the necessity of the acquisition of the Sandwich Islands is not only wise, but entirely patriotic.

In the midst of the thick darkness that surrounds so many of these questions to the uninitiated inquirer there is one thing about Captain Mahan's reasoning that I like, and that is that, notwithstanding my meager technical knowledge, I can understand this man. He says that few ships of war can carry fuel enough to go from San Francisco to Asia without stopping to recoal, and he says that no ship can come from an Asiatic station to our shores to attack our coast and be able to get back without having a place to coal. Even a landsman can understand that; and therefore I put my faith in him when he points out that since these islands must harbor the coal supply of the mid-Pacific, they literally command that ocean, so that if our country controls them we have in them an absolute protection for our coast. [Applause.] Therefore, in view of what now is, in view of all that is to come, I favor the immediate annexation of these islands.

My friend says you can go to China and the East by a shorter route. If that were true, it would not touch this question. This is a question of national defense, not a problem for passenger agents. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in the great speech that he made in this House yesterday, quoted the statement of Captain Bartlett, former Hydrographer and now Chief of the Office of Naval Intelligence, in which he points out in plain terms the reasons which offset the geographical advantage of sending ships from San Francisco to the Orient by way of the Aleutian Archipelago.

And the explanation which he gives seems in my mind to be reasonable and conclusive. Ships going by that route encounter a current running at the rate of more than a mile an hour, and ships passing through that latitude encounter fogs and foul weather at all seasons, and therefore this practical student of the problem is convinced that that route is not advantageous, even if it is pursued by some lines of steamships. If what is said about this Alaskan port is true, it is another evidence of the farsighted wisdom of Secretary Seward in boldly rejecting the counsel of the enemies of that annexation in his day. But what has that to do with this question? What comfort is the United States to get out of this Aleutian harbor if a hostile squadron, approaching us from Asia, is admitted to the coaling privilege at Honolulu?

But my friend says we are about to annex all the Spanish islands, east and west, as well as this Hawaiian group. Now, the question of the Sandwich Islands arose fifty years ago, and, as I have indicated, it has been up in the United States ever since. It was here in a lively form before we had any problems in the Philippines. We have an interest in the Orient to-day. It is not our fault. When we entered on the war with Spain we entered upon a duty to strike Spain wherever we could find her, and in the discharge of that duty the Philippine question has come suddenly upon us. We have a little squadron of our Navy there, with the most famous admiral of the world on our flagship in the harbor of Manila. [Applause.]

Nothing has happened at Manila for which I shall ever be persuaded by friend or foe to make an apology. We are there in the providence of God, and not by any human design. I sometimes think that we have been caught in a great current, an inscrutable movement of events not altogether subject to our poor guidance, but I have faith to believe that if the American people will go forward in the discharge of their duty, the same Providence that has guided us until this hour will direct us in a wise solution of every question that is created by our new relations to the civilization of the world. And yet, my countrymen, there is no excuse for a man who rises upon this floor to make what he complacently describes as a dispassionate argument on the subject of annexation of Hawaii to say that those who favor the proposition are insincere, and that their real purpose is to force the country into a wicked policy of conquest all over the habitable globe.

The American people will take care of the Philippine Islands when our campaign in the Orient is at an end. They will take care of Puerto Rico; they will take care of Cuba, and that afflicted community will find in the hearts of our people, when our work in Cuba is done, the same sympathy, the same anxiety for their welfare, that persuaded the great Republic to enlist an army and send its Navy on its mission of mercy and peace in the West Indies. [Applause.] My friend need have no fear. Every question that arises will be taken care of; but we must take care of the question of Hawaii first, because it had the floor fifty years before the other questions arose. [Laughter and applause.] Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor now and here of making an end to this controversy and raising in that fortress of the Pacific the old flag of our fathers, once hauled down, but about to be run up again, forever afterwards to glorify the skies of the Southern Ocean. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH].

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, it is with some misgiving and trepidation that I rise toward the close of this discussion, so full of interest and enlightenment. I do not take part, however, with any expectation of affecting the vote soon to be taken, but solely for the purpose of reflecting public sentiment in the district which I have the honor to represent and to discharge my duty as a Representative upon this floor.

Through four sessions of Congress I have willingly followed the wise leadership with which we are favored, and in much of my public work have been blessed with the wisdom and experience of older Members, whose right to lead has been earned by long and faithful service in legislative affairs.

Even now, were the latitude less circumscribed and the subject under discussion less important, I would not venture to take the time of the House, but as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, charged with the preliminary responsibility for this legislation, I owe a duty to you, which it shall be my privilege to perform.

Our action to-day will mark a new era in national affairs. God grant that it may be wisely performed, and that the century now closing may lose none of its luster thereby, and the proud and honorable achievements of our country may be made more secure and enduring by our legislation to-day.

"The world will little note nor long remember" the petty struggles of individuals for honor and place, but in the world's grand pageantry of glorious and progressive enlightenment, along whose fitful highway nations travel in their onward march, these epochs constitute the century marks upon eternity's dial.

Not a determined navigator upon unknown seas, not a faithful explorer in darkness and gloom, not a struggling genius whose mind, clogged with cumbersome detail, finally bursts into practical invention, not a sturdy pioneer in the march of progress, who has not builded better than he knew.

Perhaps, sir—who can say nay?—we are building better than we know for the future grandeur and greatness of America.

The important question of Hawaiian annexation is not new to the country. Nearly fifty years ago our Government undertook negotiations for its annexation, and the American minister to Hawaii was at that time instructed that we were ready to receive the formal transfer of the territorial sovereignty of the islands, and there has never been a time since when important negotiations were not pending for their absorption into the Union.

Why have we delayed? Through whose instrumentality have we been influenced?

With a constancy born of sincere desire, this little group of Pacific pearls have maintained their friendship for us through strife, revolution, and disaster, refusing alliances from others, helpful and honorable.

Four times she has been seized in eighty years—once by Russia, once by England, and twice by France. Hostile demonstrations upon her own part and the threatening attitude of our country caused her release. Finally, for fear and in dread of conquest, the absolute cession of her sovereignty to the United States was executed and delivered in 1851, and a treaty was negotiated in 1854.

Mr. Speaker, there is not a nation in the world that does not recognize the importance of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States. Are we blind to our interests when the disinterested vision of others is so clear? Will we longer neglect this plain duty, now so near consummation?

For one, let me say that no obstacle is too great to be overcome in the definite and distinct purpose of this hour, and the weak and foolish prejudices of men have no terror whatever for me in the performance of plain public duty.

Long before the independence of America from England, the question of island ownership was one of the utmost importance among European nations. With an eye to the extension of her trade and commerce, every island in the Atlantic Ocean, the Caribbean Sea, and the Gulf, which they could trade for or easily conquer, has been brought under the English flag. It is not my purpose to criticize this upon her part, for I believe it to have been wise, farsighted, and sagacious, and worthy of emulation.

Is it not essential that we should be vigilant as to our true interests at this point? Would it not be wise to seize the opportunity presented to us by Providence and the logic of our national fate?

It has been urged that we have no constitutional power to annex new territory. In what line of the Federal Constitution is this prohibited? Who knew more than Thomas Jefferson or Gouverneur Morris, whose pens put the Constitution into form, about the meaning and the purpose of this instrument in the matter of territorial acquisition? At the time of the Louisiana purchase Morris wrote, "No decree de crescendo imperio," especially emphasizing the fact that limitations were not inserted in the instrument, because no boundaries could be safely assigned to our future extension; and he further says:

"I knew as well then as I do now that all North America must at length be annexed to us. Happy indeed if the lust of possession stop there."

While the great Jefferson, whose fertile mind is reflected in so much of our Constitution, wrote, in reply to the letter of Galatin, regarding the Louisiana purchase:

"There is no constitutional difficulty as to the acquisition of territory, and whether when acquired it may be taken into the Union by the Constitution as it now stands, will become a question of expediency."

The turning point in that great question of territorial aggrandizement was solved upon the question of whether or not our young Government wanted a portion of its contiguous soil occupied by the French—whether we wanted to take the chances of a Napoleon at the head of a French army ascending the Mississippi River to reconquer, if possible, a new world; and Jefferson, out of the wisdom of his experience and the courage of his conviction, made a purchase which the American people have approved every moment since it was consummated; and never in the history of the Republic was fifteen millions of American money better invested to secure wise territorial addition and to secure the peace of our border.

When Spain offered to this Government the Floridas, or at least a quitclaim of her title and pretensions, in 1819, the Supreme Court of the United States, called upon soon thereafter to define our relation to the new acquisition, held, to the great surprise of some of the strict constructionists of the Constitution, that the right of the United States to wage war and to make treaties necessarily implied the right to acquire new territory, whether by conquest or purchase. This decision came from our greatest

Chief Justice, John Marshall, and has been repeatedly affirmed by his successors upon the bench. (See 136 U. S. Rep., 1-42.)

While Chief Justice Taney, in the celebrated Dred Scott decision, said:

"We do not mean, however, to question the power of Congress in this respect. The power to expand the territory of the United States by the admission of new States is plainly given; and in the construction of this power by all the departments of the Government it has been held to authorize the acquisition of territory, not fit for admission at the time, but to be admitted as soon as its population and situation would entitle it to admission. It is acquired to become a State, and not to be held as a colony and governed by Congress with absolute authority; and as the propriety of admitting a new State is committed to the sound discretion of Congress, the power to acquire territory for that purpose, to be held by the United States until it is in a suitable condition to become a State upon an equal footing with other States, must rest upon the same discretion. It is a question for the political department of the Government, and not the judicial; and whatever the political department of the Government shall recognize as within the limits of the United States the judicial department is also bound to recognize, and to administer in it the laws of the United States, so far as they apply, and to maintain in the territory the authority and rights of the Government, and also the personal rights and rights of property of individual citizens, as secured by the Constitution."

In 1836 there came an application from the Republic of Texas for admission into the Union as a new and equal State. The dominant population there had always been composed of emigrants from the United States. President Adams had tried to purchase it from Mexico in 1827; while Andrew Jackson offered $5,000,000 for it in 1835. A year later Texas claimed to have achieved her independence, and sent commissioners to Washington to negotiate a treaty of annexation. Mexico had not relinquished her claims of ownership, and our Government delayed recognition until Texas had proven its ability to defend its separate existence and diplomatic relations had been established between that independent Republic and the United States, and many European powers.

In 1838 John Quincy Adams introduced in the House of Representatives a resolution denying the power of the United States to annex the people of any independent state into the Union, holding that no such authority resided in the Constitution or Government or any department thereof, and that this exercise would be an assumption of power unlawful and void, even going so far as to hold that if Texas were annexed, it would inevitably result in a dissolution of the Union. The situation there presented, the resistance offered, and the encouragement given were sharp, tireless, and effective. Nevertheless, sir, in 1844 a treaty of annexation was concluded, which the Senate rejected by a vote of more than two to one.

Texas was the issue in the succeeding Presidential election, and the Democratic party scored a great and decisive victory, which President Tyler promptly ratified by recommending an act of annexation. The history of that controversy is well known to those conversant with public affairs. Congress authorized the erection of Texas into a new State of the United States, and President Tyler promptly affixed his signature to the act of union, and this independent Republic, the cause of so much contention in the past, entered the Union over a new legislative highway which has been blazed so wide and so straight that in the present emergency we have a precedent ample indeed.

While there can be no question, Mr. Speaker, but that treaty making was especially lodged by the Constitution in the President and Senate, and that the composition of the Senate was so framed that each State should have an equal voice, nevertheless, the exigencies which at times confront the Republic warn us of the importance of the popular branch of Congress, coming direct from the people; and the Texas precedent has made the votes of a majority of both branches of Congress sufficient.

I am well aware, sir, that Jefferson has expressed doubt as to the wisdom of our Government receiving acquisitions which it would take a navy to defend, but the necessity for a strong navy, able to give absolute security to our commerce upon the sea, has forced its way permanently into the public mind. Secretary Adams, in his instruction to our minister to Spain, once wrote that Puerto Rico was the natural appendage and Cuba had become an object of transcendent importance to the commercial and political interests of our Union. The commanding position of Puerto Rico with reference to the Gulf of Mexico and the West India seas gave to it advantages which could not be easily ignored, while Cuba, because of its situation between our southern coast and the island of San Domingo, with its splendid harbor at Havana, fronting our shores, almost destitute of the same advantage, its productions and its necessities, with mutually profitable commercial advantage, gives this territory national interest with no parallel in either ocean. At least one President (Polk) has tried to purchase it, adding his testimony to the right and ability under the Constitution for our Government to acquire foreign territory.

At the close of the Mexican war we paid fifteen million dollars for New Mexico and California, while the Gadsden purchase of 1853 added southern Arizona at a cost of ten millions more. These acquisitions, understood and appreciated by the American people, have increased our interest at advantageous and desirable points. It has stimulated our desire for a canal across the Isthmus, in accordance with the spirit of progress and development of the world.

Nearly fifty years ago the advantages of this project were hedged about by diplomatic agreements, which during much of the intervening time have been onerous and unacceptable. Whether the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty shall be the basis of such an enterprise and its realization I do not care to say in the present controversy; but Edward Everett in 1852, referring to one of the islands in the Gulf and the effect that a canal might possibly have upon it, said that—

"Territorially and commercially it would in our hands be an extremely valuable possession; under certain contingencies it might be almost essential to our safety."

While the Ostend manifesto of 1854 emphasized these considerations quite strongly, that if a final cession can not be accomplished, that conquest of valuable territory might be dictated by the law of self-preservation. The interests of the American people in properly protecting our Government by the acquisition of foreign territory is reflected upon the statute books to-day, where Title LXXII of the Revised Statutes expressly lodges in the hands of the President the right to acquire foreign territory by right of discovery, and to take possession of any guano deposits on any island, rock, or key, which does not belong to any other government, expressly providing that such island, rock, or key may, at the discretion of the President, be considered as appertaining to the United States. Thus our Government acquired jurisdiction over and title to the island of Navassa, two miles long and lying between Jamaica and San Domingo, discovered in 1857, and for crimes committed upon that island, the courts of the United States have in the past assumed jurisdiction and punished the offender.

Mr. Speaker, when President Lincoln recommended to Congress the advisability of some colonization scheme, he said that the plan which he proposed might involve the acquiring of territory and also the appropriation of money beyond that to be expended in territorial acquisition, adding that—

"Having practiced the acquisition of territory for nearly sixty years, the question of constitutional power to do so is no longer an open one with us. * * * On this whole proposition, including the appropriation of money for the acquisition of territory, does not the expediency amount to almost necessity, without which the Government itself can not be perpetuated?"

The purchase of Alaska from Russia in 1867 for $7,200,000 brought us into possession of large territory remote from our own over two thousand miles. The question of continuity was by this act finally and completely abandoned, there being but two votes in the Senate against the ratification of the treaty.

The same year that marked the extension of our territory by the purchase of Alaska marked the negotiations with Denmark by Secretary Seward for the cession of the West India islands of St. Thomas and St. John for a consideration of $5,700,000, and President Johnson thus tersely and effectively gives the reasons for our course:

"In our Revolutionary war, ports and harbors in the West India islands were used by our enemy to the great injury and embarrassment of the United States. We had the same experience in our second war with Great Britain. The same European policy for a long time excluded us even from trade with the West Indies while we were at peace with all nations. In our recent civil war their piratical and blockade-breaking allies found facilities in the same ports for the work which they were successfully accomplishing, the injuring and devastating the commerce which we are now engaged in rebuilding. We labored especially under this disadvantage, that European steam vessels employed by our enemies found friendly protection and supplies in the West India ports, while our naval operations were necessarily carried on from our own distant shores. There was then a universal feeling of the want of advanced naval outposts between the Atlantic coast and Europe. The duty of obtaining such an outpost peacefully and lawfully, while neither doing nor menacing injury to other States, earnestly engaged the attention of the executive department before the close of the war, and it has not been lost sight of since that time.

"A not entirely dissimilar naval want revealed itself during the same period on the Pacific coast. The required foothold there was fortunately secured by our late treaty with the Emperor of Russia, and it now seems imperative that the more obvious necessities of the Atlantic coast should not be less carefully provided for. A good and convenient port and harbor, capable of easy defense, will supply that want. With the possession of such a station by the United States, neither we nor any other American nation need longer apprehend injury or offense from any trans-Atlantic enemy. I agree with our early statesmen that the West Indies naturally gravitate to and may be expected ultimately to be absorbed by the continental States, including our own. I agree with them also that it is wise to leave the question of such absorption to this process of natural political gravitation. The islands of St. Thomas and St. Johns, which constitute a part of the group called the Virgin Islands, seemed to offer us advantages immediately desirable, while their acquisition could be secured in harmony with the principles to which I have alluded."

Because of the inharmonious relation existing between President Johnson and the Senate, a treaty for the acquisition of these islands was rejected, and the first disturbance of our peace foreshadowed in the recent declaration of war with Spain was sufficient to call the Senate of the United States into executive session for the very purpose of considering the annexation of the Danish possessions, undertaken by Secretary Seward and unsuccessfully carried on under the Administration of President Grant.

The question of the annexation of San Domingo did not turn upon the wisdom or unwisdom of such a course upon the part of this Government; its fate was decided within the narrow confines of spitefulness and personality, and our action to-day must not be supported or opposed by the temporary exigencies of party politics.

As far back as 1843 an English officer, without any authority from his Government, took possession of Hawaii in the name of the Queen, but England's young Queen, who still, by the grace of a generous Providence, occupies the throne, promptly disavowed the movement, when Mr. Legare, writing to our minister to England, said that the Hawaiian Islands bore such peculiar relations to us that we might feel like interfering by force to prevent their acquisition by any of the great powers of Europe.

Great Britain and France immediately thereafter agreed with one another never to take possession of the Islands, or assume a protectorate over them.

Following that, Mr. Marcy, our Secretary of State, in 1853, thus addressed our minister to France:

"It seems to be inevitable that they must come under the control of this Government."

And two years thereafter he informed our minister to Hawaii that this Government was ready to receive the formal transfer of the territorial sovereignty of the islands; while in 1868 negotiations were again undertaken, and Secretary Seward, in view of his failure to impress the Senate with the necessity of annexing the Danish West Indies, wrote our minister to Hawaii that the time for consideration of annexation by the United States was not propitious.

The attempted annexation of these islands by President Harrison is familiar to every citizen of our country, and the course of his successor, in withdrawing the treaty then pending in the Senate, has been the cause of severe criticism and sharp comment ever since.

However honest President Cleveland may have been, his course with reference to this subject, in my opinion, has never met with favor among the people.

Annexation is not new to our country. The area of the United States before the Louisiana Purchase consisted of a million square miles, according to the estimate of Morse's American Geography, while the subsequent acquisition of Louisiana and the Floridas doubled our territory, and Texas brought us three hundred thousand square miles, while Mexico in 1848 and 1853 ceded a larger number.

In Alaska we received in 1867 a large addition, and thus our total area has increased, under this policy of territorial acquisition and annexation, from a million square miles in 1792 to more than three millions five hundred thousand square miles at the present time.

It has been generally supposed that our possessions were large enough, but the area of Canada and Newfoundland, owned by Great Britain in this hemisphere, excels our own by several hundred thousand square miles.

Under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty we have practically pledged our Government against further extensions in South America, but in my humble opinion the whole North American continent and every island in the gulf and the Caribbean Sea, and such islands in the Pacific as may be deemed desirable, are worthy of our ambition. Not that we are earth hungry, but, as a measure of national protection and advantage, it is the duty of the American people to lay peaceful conquest wherever opportunity may be offered. [Applause.]

It has been argued that our Constitution makes no provision for a colonial system, but, Mr. Speaker, if President Monroe had been merely a lawyer, if he had contented himself by looking for precedent which he was unable to find, if he had consulted the jurisprudence of his time and planned his action along academic lines, the greatest doctrine ever announced to the civilized world, which now bears his name, though in unwritten law, but in the inspiration, the hope, the security of every American heart, would have found no voice potent enough and courageous enough to have encircled the Western Hemisphere with his peaceful edict.

Precedent, sir, may do for a rule of law upon which a fixed and definite superstructure must be built, but it is the duty of statesmanship to cease looking at great public questions with a microscope, and sweep the world's horizon with a telescope from a commanding height. [Applause.]

Avoid, if you can, sir, by specious reasoning the history of your own country, but tell me what precedent Thomas Jefferson relied upon when in 1803 he took $15,000,000 out of the Federal treasury and purchased Louisiana?

This great and worthy act of one of the most enlightened of our constitutional authors gave to the country a territory which now composes the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, and Minnesota; west of the Mississippi, Colorado, the Dakotas, Wyoming, and Montana.

Naturally it would have been expected that Jefferson would have been praised for his courage and foresight. On the contrary, he was denounced with bitterness and partisan rancor almost unknown in the discussion of our public affairs to-day.

Notwithstanding the limitations with which he was hedged about, Jefferson believed that each generation was competent to manage its own affairs, and his peaceful accomplishment in 1803 was the most important achievement since the Revolution, and furnished a precedent by which Florida was purchased in 1819 for five million dollars, California and New Mexico in 1849 for fifteen million dollars, Arizona in 1853 for ten million dollars, and Alaska in 1867 for seven million two hundred thousand dollars. The grand total of this territorial investment foots up fifty-two million two hundred thousand dollars—a sum so small as not even to attract the attention of the House of Representatives in a day's debate, in the present period of our country's affairs; and yet the investments made thereby constitute living monuments to the statesmanship that foresaw their importance and the Americanism that prompted their acquisition.

The spirited rivalry among nations for trade early found expression in the exclusive charter given by Queen Elizabeth to the Great East India Company in 1599, and their general monopoly of the market from the Cape of Good Hope to the Straits of Magellan was the resultant effect.

The importance of this company in establishing British supremacy in the East is well known to every student of history. The ostensible object of charity in the Empire of Hindoostan gradually brought the entire Empire into the possession of that company, thus christening Queen Victoria "Empress of India."

Who is not familiar with the escapades of Dr. Jamieson and the South African Company, who undertook, in the interest of trade and conquest, to overthrow the South African Republics and make Victoria Queen of Ethiopia.

Can you read of England's efforts in the Celestial Empire without detecting the important trend of events? Chinese resistance to English opium smugglers opened the way for the English to bombard the forts at the mouth of the river and effect an entrance to Canton, where an indemnity of $6,000,000 was demanded and collected, followed by the siege of Peking, which netted the English Government $21,000,000, and secured for her the cession of Hong-kong, thus securing the commerce of southern China, and placing herself in position to command the trade of 400,000,000 frugal and industrious people.

Mr. Speaker, territorial and trade conquests are world-wide. Russia and England have appropriated the continent of Asia from the Indian to the Arctic Ocean, where our trade is one of purchase only. The Dutch own the great islands of the Indian Archipelago, and England holds the balance, absolutely controlling their commerce.

We must recognize the fact, sir, that England holds the whole of the Australian continent and its neighboring islands, and nearly half the area of our own continent.

Within the last three years the nations of Europe have by mutual agreement divided among themselves the entire area of Africa. England has added Egypt to her other African dominions; France has appropriated a large part of North Africa between Egypt and the Atlantic; all the equatorial region is now divided among Italy, England, France, Germany, and Austria.

South America and the Orient are the natural trade allies of the United States. Their relation to us must grow more important and desirable in the years to come. Then why talk of an Anglo-American alliance? Who is so short sighted as to wish us to assume any responsibility, however remote, for the faithful performance of the multitude of agreements, treaties, and protocols of England? To be sure, they are our natural kin, and we are proud of our ancestry, but our friendship will be more enduring and our burdens easier to bear if we refrain from entangling alliances with any powers across the sea. Such territory in the ocean or in the Gulf as naturally belongs to our Government we can make our own in due season, and wisdom would seem to prompt us to leave no natural or willing ally, weak and defenseless as it may be, to become the mere toy of an aggressive empire, imperiling our peace and good order.

The Pacific Ocean, unfettered by European subjugation, can be made indeed pacific, if we are wise enough to garner the harvest now so ripe for our sickle.

Who opposes this wise policy that has received the sanction of many Presidents? The same halting, hesitating conservatism that admonished Washington against taking on the Northwest Territory, and prompted Benjamin Franklin to favor its relinquishment; the same doubting conservatism that deprived us of Canada in the war of 1812, and defeated by a tie vote in the Senate the treaty for the annexation of San Domingo. [Applause.]

Our military school taught Grant the value of strategic points of defense and attack. His campaigns were marvels of exactness and keen perception, executed with prowess and true military genius. His keen appreciation of the advantage of American ownership and control of the Island of Santo Domingo was in line with his record so amply demonstrated in the field of military triumph. He decided that it was wise for the American nation to accept this island, freely offered by its inhabitants; he believed the acquisition of Santo Domingo to be a strict adherence to the Monroe doctrine—a measure of national protection.

From the formation of our Government it has been important that the American nation control, as far as possible, the West Indies. Our Presidents have expressed an almost universal desire of the people for an advanced naval outpost between the Atlantic coast and Europe. The Dominican people longed for a higher civilization; they had fought for and established their government against oppression and conquest, just as the Hawaiian Republic has since done, and they turned to us as a Mussulman turns toward Mecca. The Commission of Inquiry appointed by our Government, and of which the honorable chairman of the Committee upon Foreign Affairs of this House was identified, made a most searching, critical investigation into the condition, character, and resources of that island, and reported back that the people were courteous, respectful, and polite; that crime was comparatively unknown; that no pauper class existed; that intemperance and beggary were more common among the enlightened nations of the world; that the resources of the island were vast and various, making it one of the most fertile regions on the face of the globe. Fanned by trade winds, they were constantly supplied with pure air from the sea, while the bay of Samana was the most important in the West Indies, being 80 miles long and 10 miles broad, commodious enough to accommodate the largest fleets.

Why did we need this island? For this good and sufficient reason—it sits like a sentinel in the Caribbean Sea, guarding the Mona Passage, destined to be the eastern avenue of communication between two great oceans when the Nicaragua Canal shall be an accomplished fact. A trained military eye could appreciate the importance of this outpost, and President Grant would have made it part of the American Union. How clearly he saw, how courageously he acted, and with what patriotism was he inspired!

Sir, the countries of the Western Hemisphere stand face to face with the necessity of dealing with one another as Americans. This entire group of magnificent islands is naturally a part of the American territory.

"The West India Sea corresponds to that of the Mediterranean from Syria to the Pillars of Hercules. The Mediterranean is divided into an eastern and western basin, and as Italy, Sardinia, and Tunis divide the basin there, so Cuba, Jamaica, Santo Domingo, and Yucatan divide the Gulf and the Caribbean Sea. As the former is fed by the venerable, ancient Nile, so ours is augmented by the pulsating artery of the Mississippi. The Mediterranean is a world's sea, lying in the temperate zone, amid an ancient civilization, and our southern basin is destined to be a world's sea when an international waterway shall pierce the isthmus connecting the Eastern and Western Hemispheres by direct and rapid communication."

This has been the dream of trans-Atlantic thinkers for two hundred and fifty years. Indeed, its importance was first suggested by Charles V after the discovery of America by Columbus, and later by Phillip II, to whom Cortez reported that the greatest service he could render to the King was to find an opening through the Isthmus to the Pacific.

The idea of constructing a canal through Lake Nicaragua was first suggested in 1665. Thus we see why European countries have always been alive to the importance of island ownership in the vicinity of the Isthmus. Its construction will raise the islands to an importance beyond calculation. A lavish nature, tropical climate, and prolific soil have rendered their possession valuable. They will be the cause of contention and competition in the future.

Is it not essential that we should be vigilant as to our true interests at this point? Great Britain already holds the keys to navigation in the West Indies. She owns Jamaica—Cromwell wrested it from the Spaniards in 1655, and Kingston is the base of operations of the British West India fleet. Her flag floats over the Caman Islands, Trinidad, St. Vincent, the Barbadoes, St. Lucia, and the Bahamas, as well as the eastern coast of Yucatan and British Honduras, all strongly fortified. Spain with dying grasp, scarcely felt in her benumbed extremities, clutches at her vanishing dominion in this hemisphere; but the realization of the hopes and desires of humanity everywhere will soon light this dark corner of the world with the bright flame of indignant liberty. [Applause.]

France owns the Islands of Guadeloupe and Martinique, lying well up toward the Mona Passage; but Santo Domingo rises above them all, with special advantages and with special prominence.

Had President Grant's fervent wish been granted, our flag would to-day wave over the island, and from the folds of its stars and stripes, dedicated to liberty and union, would float out over the gulf and sea a spirit of patriotism tempering the entire archipelago. Should it have been accepted when tendered? Then, is it not our duty to accept the Hawaiian Islands, situated with reference to our own country as advantageously in the Pacific as Santo Domingo is at the Gulf? The faintest encouragement would have been sufficient for some countries to have encircled these islands. And this generation will be unfaithful to those that follow if we do not lessen the possibilities of war by taking into the National Union such naval outposts in both oceans as are naturally a part of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the United States is a great manufacturing nation; eventually we must find new markets for our energy and enterprise; such desirable territory is fast passing under the control of other nations; our history is filled with unaccepted opportunities. How much longer shall we hesitate? Is it not time to take new observations of the world's affairs, and be guided by more progressive enlightenment? Just as the mariner scans the firmament, when the compass is doubted, and follows the familiar planet into his true course, so we, in this new period of the world's affairs, should look up from the ledger and receive new inspiration and guidance from the movement and course of nations with whom we share the world. [Applause.]

Sir, the proverbial friendship of the great Empire of Russia, with its population of nearly a hundred and thirty million people, must not be impaired. She is to-day one of the most powerful nations of the earth—a devoted, worthy, and unselfish friend to our Government. When the fate of this nation was struggling in the balance, the Emperor of Russia sent a fleet to our door with instructions to conserve the peace at any hazard, should European unfriendliness become manifest. "Russia was never so powerful, so wealthy, so full of exultant confidence in her destiny; never was there such profound peace and general wellbeing within the Empire; never were her counsels of such weight abroad. The potent and patient genius of Alexander III has made Russia the arbiter of Europe, as Napoleon once made France, and Bismarck made United Germany." We rejoice in her progress, and no alliance must be made that will in the slightest degree impair the friendship we hold most dear.

Commercial scope—internal improvement—an American foreign policy, vigorous and humane—are the necessary accompaniments of greatness. The annual products of our country amounted in 1890 to nearly $14,000,000,000; and is rapidly increasing from day to day. In the present fiscal year the balance of trade in our favor will be $800,000,000; our exports are double our imports, while our total foreign commerce will, upon the 30th of the present month, reach the enormous sum of $1,800,000,000. Our best customers are Great Britain, Russia, Germany, and France. If we will take in the Hawaiian Islands, hold on to the Philippines, and cultivate good neighborhood with the Orient, to which they are the key, the expansion of our commerce will be augmented a thousandfold, and the artisans, mechanics, and laboring men of our own country will then supply much of the genius and the handiwork of the whole world, thus realizing the fulfillment of the prophecy of Gladstone, who, a few years ago said of our country:

"It is she alone who, at a coming time, can and probably will wrest from us that commercial supremacy, we have no title. I have no inclination to murmur at the prospect; if she acquires it, she will make the acquisition by the right of the strongest, but in this instance the strongest means the best. We have no more title against her than Venice or Genoa or Holland against us."

Our manifest destiny is the heritage of mankind; then let us neglect no opportunity to strengthen and conserve our proud and responsible position. The twentieth century will open upon twenty Republics, ours being the first, and perhaps—who knows?

before another century has gone the world may be crowned with a new diadem, sparkling with the jewels of humanity, enthroned and elevated, and empowered with the natural and divine right to govern themselves. What then will our position be? Shall we lead by virtue of being the conservator of good government and the champion of human rights? or shall we, sordid-like and indifferent to the welfare of others, content ourselves to live alone and apart from the rest of the world? From whom did we receive the cup of liberty? From the oppressed and bound of every land. Can we, then, refuse to pass this cup to those thirsting for self-government, liberty, and peace? No, Mr. Speaker, our duty is plain; we must lift up, by example and otherwise, our weak and burdened neighbors; we must take them into the Union when opportunity offers, thus strengthening ourselves and helping those less fortunate.

The Hawaiian Islands possess advantages in the Pacific which can not be ignored; Pearl Harbor is the only great land-locked harbor, easily defended, in the Pacific; we have no rights there that are not determinable upon one year's notice by either party; we should take immediate steps to utilize this great harbor, lying at the intersection of the commercial routes from Vancouver to Australasia, from the Isthmus of Panama to Japan, and from San Francisco to Manila and Hongkong. These watery highways mark the course of commerce in the future. More than one-half the population of the world is bounded by the Pacific and Indian oceans, while the commerce countries bordering these oceans, not including North America, amounts to over $2,250,000,000 a year, of which we get but a small part.

"Over 80 per cent of our exports go eastward, across the Atlantic, and less than 5 per cent westward. We grow 80 per cent of the raw cotton in the world, yet with the cheapest power in the world and the most efficient labor we have only 15 per cent of the spindles of the world. China, Japan, Korea, and India are cotton-using countries, and with changing conditions there is a market worth striving for." Already Russia sees the advantages which will accrue to her in the Pacific, and the construction of its trans-continental railway from St. Petersburg to the Pacific foreshadows her intentions in that rich but long-neglected field. Sir, I favor the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, because it will prevent the establishment of hostile sovereignty at that advantageous point, and will tend to straighten our western border and conserve its peace. [Applause.]

The nearest English station is 4,600 miles distant from San Francisco; the nearest French station is 3,600 miles distant; the nearest Spanish station is 4,700 miles distant, and will soon be removed, thank God, more than twice as far. Russia is 4,700 miles away, and Japan 4,500 miles away, while China is 5,500 miles from our coast. Take these islands into the Union and you will remove other nations far from our door and insure more permanent peace and security. It was upon this theory that the old seers and prophets advocated annexation of contiguous territory as a peace proposition; but it has been said by some opposed to annexation that the population is undesirable; possibly that may be so, but the same argument was used against the admission of California and Texas into the Union, but the undesirable element in both States was soon lost sight of in the sturdy immigration that stable government attracted, and so it will be with these islands. Strengthened by absorption into the Union, they will become attractive and inviting fields to American enterprise.

The strategical importance of the islands has been attested by scientific, military, and naval experts without number, while the ripe testimony of Mahan, Schofield, and Belknap must be accepted as of great value. Some concern has been manifested regarding the character of the government to be established there. It will be such in my opinion as the wisdom of Congress may determine, and the power and authority of Congress in this regard has just received enlarged and high judicial sanction in the decision of Judge Morrow, of the United States circuit court of California, which says:

"Congress may legislate in accordance with the special needs of each locality and may vary its regulations to meet the circumstances of the people.

"The Territories of the United States are entirely subject to the legislative authority of Congress. They are not organized under the Constitution, nor subject to its complex distribution of the powers of government as the organic law, but are the creation, exclusively, of the legislative department, and subject to its supervision and control.

"It may legislate in accordance with the special needs of each locality, and vary its regulations to meet the circumstances of the people."

A hundred years ago it was predicted of our nation that it would some day stretch its arms upon two oceans, and direct the vessels from one to the other by an artificial route through Lake Nicaragua that would change the course of the commercial world and the fate of empires. At such a time how important our action today may become and of what vital value the undisputed possession of the Hawaiian Islands.

Let us rise to the occasion to-day, meet this important exigency in our national affairs with courage and patriotism, and, inspired by the glorious achievements of the past, prepare for greater victories in the years to come, and thus prove ourselves worthy the proud legacy fortune gave us by inheritance. Wave proudly and grandly, O flag of our country; from each of thy folds let some inspiration go out to melt away prejudice and avoid friction; in each star let every republic find its hope and every empire see its duty! [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of the United States, in section 2, Article II, provides that the President "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur."

It seems evident to me that the word "treaties" in this connection means diplomatic agreements with foreign nations.

But when in pursuance of a treaty it is proposed to annex additional territory the question is not one for the President and Senate, but the people through their Representatives in Congress should be consulted.

Annexation should be made by law and not by treaty. Where annexation heretofore has been attempted by treaty it has been immediately followed by the enactment of law passed by both Houses, and thus all question of authority has been removed by ratification through act of Congress.

The question as to whether territory might be constitutionally annexed without the authority of Congress is an interesting one and one that is not likely to be decided in such form as to be deemed closed.

I feel confident that a fair and reasonable construction of the Constitution would require that the House of Representatives should act before any additional territory could be annexed. To assume the contrary might lead to endless confusion.

Suppose a treaty should be made by which a tract of territory shall be ceded to the United States, and by the terms of the treaty such additional territory shall be at once admitted into the Union with Senators and Representatives in Congress and the number of Representatives agreed upon; we would then have representation in the House of Representatives determined by the President and Senate. Or the Senate and President might agree to annex the Sandwich Islands as five separate States, with ten Senators, and change the entire complexion of our Government, without the people having any chance to protest through their Representatives in Congress. Such possible results will show the impropriety of annexation in any method other than that of the enactment of a law by both Houses with the approval of the President. I think, therefore, that this question has now been brought up in the proper form, and should be considered on its merits by both Houses.

In the Fifty-third Congress I took occasion to speak in behalf of annexation. The opinions I then expressed are only strengthened by subsequent events. I will not repeat the arguments then made. These islands are the key to the trade of the Pacific Ocean. We must take them with some incumbrances of population.

There are elements among the inhabitants of these islands which we would not admit to our shores as immigrants, but fortunately the population is not large enough to involve us in any difficult social problems. The importance of these islands to our people for either commercial purposes or for defense entirely overshadows the conceded disadvantages which are involved in the addition to our population of a considerable portion of their present inhabitants.

No change of policy is involved in this annexation.

For fifty years the final incorporation of this archipelago has been anticipated, and their commercial annexation has already practically occurred.

The Pacific, with our present rapid means of communication, has become a great lake, and the central location of Hawaii makes it the controlling center of the commerce of the future.

Conceding the disadvantages involved in taking nearly a hundred thousand people of an alien race into our population, I feel sure that this is a small incumbrance when compared with the great importance that these islands must be to our commerce on the one hand and to the defense of our Pacific coast on the other.

It is contended that by annexing these islands the country will become committed to a new colonial policy. The same argument might have been made as to Alaska. The extension of our domain into the far East is not at all involved in the present question.

The Hawaiian treaty was made five years ago, when we were free from the present difficulties with Spain. It can and should be settled upon its own merits, entirely independent of any of the problems which grow out of the Spanish war.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD].

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, the importance of the pending resolution, by which it is proposed to annex to the territory of our Union distant islands of thesea, many of whose inhabitants differ from us in language, religion, and social customs, can not be overestimated. I have therefore listened with interest to the arguments of those gentlemen who have so ably opposed the resolution, actuated by motives which, I trust, are patriotic, and for reasons which, in their judgment, are for the best interests of the American people.

And, sir, I too should view this action with alarm if I thought their fears and objections were well grounded and that it was the purpose of this measure to inaugurate an era of imperial aggrandizement by an aggressive colonial policy through military conquest over weaker nations, resulting in riveting a more rigorous and centralized government upon our citizens, enforced by a great standing army. If I thought this was the inspiring motive, I should give both my vote and voice in opposition.

But, sir, I am glad to say that, highly as I personally respect the opponents of the measure, I believe their fears are largely groundless and that a careful survey of the entire question furnishes an overwhelming evidence in favor of annexation.

NO CONQUEST CONTEMPLATED.

It is known to everyone that the proposed measure does not contemplate any invasion of the islands by force of arms or their conquest by what is often a more dangerous power, subtle diplomacy. On the contrary, the contemplated action is one that was first urged by the Hawaiians themselves nearly fifty years ago and which they have ever since had constantly in view. It is no new question or policy of either our nation or the little commonwealth that seeks the protection of our flag, the fellowship of our people, and the benefits of our civilization. I shall briefly review the history of these interesting negotiations, the reasons in favor of annexation, with a glance at the history and nature of the islands, and the objections urged against the adoption of this resolution.

THE CONTEMPLATED ANNEXATION THE RESULT OF FRIENDLY NEGOTIATIONS.

In 1851 the King, hard pressed by the aggressions of England and France, first formally sought the protection of our nation by delivering to our representative a deed of cession of the islands to the United States. In 1854 our Secretary of State authorized a treaty of annexation, but the negotiations were broken by the death of the King while they were pending. In 1893 a new annexation treaty was negotiated, but while pending in our Senate a change of Administration caused its withdrawal by the President before ratification. June 16, 1897, a treaty was again negotiated similar to the pending resolution, and which, with other papers related to the subject, I will submit as an appendix to my remarks. This treaty has been already approved by the people of Hawaii and ratified by their Senate.

There is, therefore, no hasty action by either party to the compact; no undue stress; no objection by foreign nations which would lead to international complications. It is only the natural and logical result of intelligent negotiations for many years between two sovereign nations, through their accredited representatives, acting in friendly concert to promote the mutual interests of both nations.

WE SHOULD BE GOVERNED BOTH BY ENLIGHTENED SELF-INTEREST AND THE CLAIMS OF HUMANITY.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that nations, like individuals, should be actuated by the highest considerations both of their own welfare and that of humanity. The law of nature, through which we have life, makes it the first duty of every being to protect and extend its own existence so that it can best fulfill the mission of its Creator. As the Creator has placed under the control of every person the development of his own faculties and holds him responsible for their proper use and preservation, it may be well said both of nations and individuals that "self-preservation is the first law of nature." But while our first duty is to ourselves, it can not be severed from our obligations to a world-wide humanity, of which we are all a part. I wish, then, to discuss this question both from the standpoint of American interests and welfare and of mankind at large.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the motives which led us to the present war with the Kingdom of Spain are analogous to those which have brought forward the present measure. In both resolutions the protection of the rights and interests of our own nation stand side by side with the interests of humanity. In the joint resolution (H. Res. 200) which I had the honor to introduce in Congress March 30, declaring the independence of the Cuban Republic, to be enforced by armed intervention, if necessary, the outrage to the humane and Christian sentiments of the American people, through the barbaric cruelties of the Spaniards toward an oppressed people beyond the jurisdiction of our Government, were placed side by side with the assassination of our own seamen, the destruction of an American battle ship, and the interests of American industries and commerce.

And, sir, the result of the magnanimous spirit and lofty motives which inspired our nation to prevent at any sacrifice the continuance of Spanish atrocities on the Western Hemisphere has been that in this struggle of arms we have had the moral support of the great nations of the earth. Had we been actuated by merely selfish motives or a desire for conquest, the nations of Europe would have found in our aggressiveness a menace to the security of their own territorial possessions. Nor could we then have implored the blessings of Almighty God upon our cause, nor would His Providence have so ordered events that the struggling native islanders of the Philippines as well should be freed from the barbarisms of the land of the Inquisition. Nor could we have hoped for the splendid and speedy triumph of American arms in the Pacific which has inscribed the name of Admiral Dewey and his brave seamen above that of Lord Nelson, and made Manila Bay more historic than Trafalgar! [Applause.]

THEIR STRATEGIC IMPORTANCE.

Our war with Spain has emphasized the fact that our national safety and prosperity require increased harbors for vessels both of war and commerce. While opposed to inaugurating an era of imperial conquest at the expense of our free institutions, yet believing that this nation has a God-given mission to perform as the standard bearer of civil liberty and progress for the ultimate advancement of all the nations of the earth, it becomes our duty to use all the means which Providence has placed before us for maintaining the integrity of our possessions and due respect for our demands, always to be founded on justice. The hostilities in which we are now engaged demonstrate that, as war may be sometimes unavoidable, it is necessary that our ships, both of war and peace, should have convenient harbors of refuge for safety in times of storm, accident, or war, as well as convenient stations for coal and supplies.

England, with rare foresight, many years ago secured insular and littoral possessions in every corner of the earth, by which her interests and power on land as well as sea have been greatly advanced.

On the other hand, the lack of adequate coaling stations has, fortunately for us, greatly crippled the efficiency of the Spanish navy. It is well known that modern men-of-war, especially those which attain high speed and whose engines in some cases develop 18,000 horsepower, rapidly consume enormous quantities of coal and, owing to their special construction, have coal storage but for short trips only. In fact, the question of coal supply has perplexed the Spanish thus far on the Atlantic more, perhaps, than any other condition relative to their naval strategy.

But aside from the necessities of our Navy, our merchant vessels as well need, both in peace and war, both in accident and safety, harbors under the protection of our flag for all of the needs of commerce, travel, and the advancement of science, to be liberally encouraged by our Government.

A BRIEF VIEW OF THE ISLANDS.

The Sandwich or Hawaiian Islands lie about 600 miles north of the equator, their capital, Honolulu, being 2,089 miles southwest from San Francisco, 3,399 miles west of Yokohama, 4,917 miles west of Hongkong, and about 4,000 miles from the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand. Their combined area is about 7,000 square miles, two-thirds of which is contained in the principal island, Hawaii. The capital city, Honolulu, is located on the island of Oahu, and on the coast of this island, 12 miles away, is situated the famous Pearl Harbor, now under control of our Government, said to be the finest natural harbor on the globe, capable of floating all the navies of the world. This harbor consists of a large inland lake, broken by islands which maintain a smooth surface of water, protected by hills from storms and the guns of hostile fleets, and connected with the sea by a long and narrow channel, easily fortified.

It is objected that we have already a shorter route to China and Japan, with opportunity for a coaling station at Unalaska, in the Aleutian Islands, about 2,000 miles north of Hawaii; but that route is rarely taken, owing to storms, fogs, and floating ice from the polar sea prevailing there, dangerous to navigation. On the other hand, the route via Hawaii is an ideal one in every respect, and its freedom from storm is typical of the name of the ocean traversed—Pacific. In the event, also, of the completion of the great Nicaragua Canal, through which all of our ships of commerce and war will quickly pass from ocean to ocean, these islands will be on the most direct route to China, Japan, and the Philippines. They are also on the direct route to Australia and New Zealand, with whom we have a large commerce.

Regarding the climate and the other physical and natural attractions of the islands, an enthusiastic traveler says:

"It is simply 'Fairyland,' 'Rainbowland,' a land of perfect rest and repose; a land of color; a land of magnificent hills, cloud-topped, of a thousand valleys and ravines, of streams and waterfalls, of glorious sea and sky."

I had the pleasure recently of spending an evening with the able and statesmanlike minister of the Hawaiian Republic, Hon. Lorrin A. Thurston. He showed me an extensive series of photographs illustrating the islands, their people, products, vegetation, etc., and it certainly seemed like fairyland indeed.

Each island consists of one or more mountains, with valleys and plains between. The soil is decomposed lava, irrigated by mountain streams and wells. The principal products are sugar, coffee, and fruits. About 80,000 acres are devoted to sugar cane, and in 1896, 221,000 tons of sugar were exported. If annexed to this country, this sugar will reach American consumers free of duty, and the combine of the oppressive sugar trust may be broken.

The healthful and balmy climate has given these islands the appellation of "The Paradise of the Pacific." The temperature is mild and even, averaging about 83° in summer and 74° in winter. The lowest temperature at the level of the sea in winter is about 56° and the warmest in summer about 86°. The cool northeast trade winds blow eight or nine months in the year.

With all these gifts of nature inviting us, as well as the entreaties of the citizens of this little Commonwealth, who desire to enjoy our institutions, how can we refuse? As the muse best expresses it:

O how canst thou renounce the boundless store
Of charms which Nature to her votary yields:
The warbling woodland, the resounding shore,
The pomp of groves, and garniture of fields;
All that the genial ray of morning gilds,
And all that echoes to the song of even,
All that the mountain's sheltering bosom shields,
And all the dread magnificence of heaven:
O how canst thou renounce, and hope to be forgiven?

THE NATIVE RACE.

When Capt. James Cook discovered (or rediscovered) these islands December 8, 1778, while circumnavigating the globe with his armed vessels, the Resolution and Discovery, as so interestingly narrated in his famous Voyages, he found a confiding race of aborigines, who welcomed him and afterwards worshiped him as a god, the number of whom he estimated at 400,000. During fierce wars for supremacy among rival chiefs nearly one-half of the inhabitants lost their lives about the beginning of the present century.

THE DESTRUCTIVE EFFECTS OF "MODERN CIVILIZATION" UPON THE ISLANDS.

It is a sad fact that although in 1840 King Kamehameha III, called "The Good," granted the people a constitution, abolished idolatry, and encouraged Christianity, yet contact with "civilization," through contagious disease, and more especially the importation of intoxicating liquors, with the art of producing them, has so decimated the population that in 1896 but 31,000 native Hawaiians remained! And all authorities agree that in but a few years a once happy people of trustful and confiding "children of nature" will be extinct, with no trace except in history! What a commentary on our civilization! Our own country is witnessing a like passing of the "Red Men of the Forest." And if the influence of strong drink has so rapidly decimated the aborigines, injured to privations and hardships, who can measure the extent of its baneful effects on the happiness, the power, and the lives of our "civilized" Anglo-Saxon nation!

POPULATION.

The census of 1896 shows the population to be 109,020.

In round numbers the different nationalities are represented as follows:

Native Hawaiians	31,000
Japanese	24,400
Portuguese	15,100
Chinese	21,600
Part Hawaiian and part foreign blood	8,400
Americans	3,400
British	2,200
German	1,400
Norwegian and French	479
All other nationalities	1,055

Expressed in percentage the population is as follows:

Native Hawaiian	Per cent. 28
Japanese	22
Chinese	20
Americans and Europeans by birth or descent	22
Mixed blood	8

FORM OF GOVERNMENT, PAST, PRESENT, AND AS PROPOSED BY ANNEXATION.

Early in the present century the tribes of the various isles were united in a Kingdom by Kamehameha I, chief of the most powerful tribe. This, said to be the "noblest of all savage dynasties," ended in 1873 by the death of Kamehameha IV. The Government, however, remained a monarchy until January, 1893, when Queen Liliuokalani attempted to abrogate certain constitutional rights and to disfranchise the white population.

Thereupon a provisional government was established and a constitution framed and adopted, which was promulgated on July 4, 1894, the people desiring that the two nations should be united by the same historic birthday. Thus by every avenue open to them the Hawaiians show the sympathy and love for our country and its institutions.

CHINESE WILL BE EXCLUDED.

Objection is made that Asiatics will be thus allowed citizenship, and that the interests of American labor as well as the safety of American institutions will be jeopardized. If this were true, I should oppose the measure with all my power. Happily both the facts and effects are the opposite, for it will be seen by referring to the resolution of annexation that the islands are to be "annexed as a part of the territory of the United States, and are subject to the dominion thereof," etc.

It is also further provided that, "There shall be no further immigration of Chinese into the Hawaiian Islands except upon such conditions as are now or may be hereafter allowed by the laws of the United States; and no Chinese, by reason of anything contained herein, shall be allowed to enter the United States from the Hawaiian Islands."

"The President [of the United States] shall appoint five commissioners, at least two of whom shall be residents of the Hawaiian Islands, who shall, as soon as reasonably practicable, recommend to Congress such legislation concerning the Hawaiian Islands as they shall deem necessary or proper."

It is also stipulated that pending the above legislation the present laws of the Republic of Hawaii shall be in force, so far as they do not conflict with the Constitution or laws of the United States. By the present laws of Hawaii, Asiatics are not eligible to citizenship or to a vote. Thus the interests of labor as well as the integrity of our institutions seem to be fully protected. Furthermore, labor should be benefited by the enlarged market for its products and the decreased cost of the sugar it consumes.

The present government is almost identical with our own. The members of its senate and house of representatives are elected for the same terms as ours. Their president, whom many of us have met, is of American parentage and a graduate of Williams College. The foundation of their laws, like ours, is the common law of England, and their courts are founded on the American system. Thus they are already accustomed to our institutions and laws.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENT.

But objection is made that there is no authority in the Constitution for acquiring foreign territory. If this were true, Mr. Chairman, a great part, more than half our present territory, including some of our most important States, is not properly within the Union. Who shall say that the many States comprised in the Louisiana purchase, and California, Texas, and New Mexico should have been repelled?

But, sir, on this question as on others we have the highest authorities for saying not only that foreign territory can be annexed when done for just reasons, without a violation of the Constitution as liberally construed, but where the Constitution is defective by reason of contingencies not thought of by its framers, it is our duty then, as always, to be guided by an enlightened conscience as the needs of our nation and those of humanity shall dictate. The Constitution was intended to secure civil rights and enlarge the benefits of free government—not to abridge them.

But happily we have many high constitutional authorities as well as historic precedents for the proposed annexation. These having already been brought to public attention, I shall only briefly refer to a few instances.

When the Louisiana purchase was under consideration, the great Jefferson, who, as the author of the Declaration of Independence, on which the Constitution was afterwards based, should be the highest authority, said:

"There is no constitutional difficulty as to the acquisition of territory, and whether when acquired it may be taken into the Union by the Constitution as it now stands, will become a question of expediency."

President Lincoln also said:

"Having practiced the acquisition of territory for nearly sixty years, the question of constitutional power to do so is no longer an open one with us. * * * On this whole proposition, including the appropriation of money for the acquisition of territory, does not the expediency amount to almost necessity, without which the Government itself can not be perpetuated?"

In the Dred Scott decision Chief Justice Taney said:

"The power to expand the territory of the United States by the admission of new States is plainly given; and in the construction of this power by all the departments of the Government it has been held to authorize the acquisition of territory, not fit for admission at the time, but to be admitted as soon as its population and situation would entitle it to admission. It is acquired to become a State, and not to be held as a colony and governed by Congress with absolute authority; and as the propriety of admitting a new State is committed to the sound discretion of Congress, the power to acquire territory for that purpose, to be held by the United States until it is in a suitable condition to become a State upon an equal footing with other States, must rest upon the same discretion.

"It is a question for the political department of the Government, and not the judicial; and whatever the political department of the Government shall recognize as within the limits of the United States the judicial department is also bound to recognize, and to administer in it the laws of the United States, so far as they apply, and to maintain in the territory the authority and rights of the Government, and also the personal rights and rights of property of individual citizens, as secured by the Constitution."

So, according to this learned judge, the power of Congress in regard to territorial acquisition is supreme, and not subject to the review of the Supreme Court.

It simply remains, then, to decide "What is for the highest interests of our nation and humanity?" Having faith, Mr. Speaker, that the American people will continue to be inspired with humane and lofty motives, I trust the proposed measure will pass and that our action in rescuing the oppressed people both of the West Indies and the Philippines, joined to this, will be the auspicious introduction to a century of advancement for us and for all mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Is it proper at this time to offer an amendment to this resolution, to come in at the end, to include what is known as the home-rule bill for Arizona?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks, from the gentleman's description of the amendment, that it would hardly be germane to this bill, even if it were proper to offer it at this time.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, while the House is waiting for gentlemen to proceed on the side of the negative, I will ask the House to adopt a formal amendment to the resolution, to strike out, on page 3, line 12, the words "of the exchange." It was a mistake in copying the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 12, strike out the words "of the exchange," so that it will read: "the public debt of the Republic of Hawaii lawfully existing at the time of the passage of this joint resolution."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority resolutions, reported as a substitute and printed with the views of the minority, be considered as pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the substitute will be considered as pending.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield ten minutes to my colleague from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time allowed, I can only briefly touch a few of the points involved in the question before the House. I can see no present necessity, Mr. Speaker, for the passage of the pending bill for the annexation of Hawaii, and I think that I can see in it the beginning of a policy of territorial aggrandizement, aggression, and imperialism that bodes no good to this Republic. I am in favor of seizing and holding such islands and dependencies of Spain as may be necessary to indemnify us for the costs and sacrifices of the present war.

If, after we have completed their seizure and occupation, the annexation of Hawaii should become a military necessity to enable us to reap the benefit of what we have taken, it will then be time enough for us to consider that proposition, but the unseemly manner in which the pendency of the Americano-Spanish war is being taken advantage of to press the passage of this bill, in advance of any real necessity for the same, is but an additional proof to the multiplying evidence that a war solemnly declared for the cause of humanity, justice, and the vindication of the national honor and the national flag is being perverted from the plain and proper purposes for which it was authorized by Congress and indorsed by the American people.

The bond grabber, the boodler, the land grabber, and the spoilsman are gathering to the front and exercising their baleful influence in every quarter that can be reached. They have forced the needless issue of $400,000,000 of bonds, and in a bill imposing onerous burdens and taxes upon the plain people of the land they have obtained practical exemptions and immunities for themselves. In the matter of supplies and transportation they are bleeding the Government at every point where possible, so that nearly one-half of the appropriations voted here will never inure to the benefit of the patriotic men who have gone and are still going to the front of war to offer their services and their lives for the upholding of the honor and glory of the flag.

That flag, sir, was unfurled and uplifted for a high and holy purpose, and under its inspiration the American people were ready at once to leap to arms. They want that purpose preserved and carried out, and in the end, sir, you will find that their wrath and indignation will be kindled against all of those who have perverted patriotism for the unholy purposes of greed and speculation.

That flag, sir, in all its history, was never uplifted in a foreign war for unjust conquest and aggression. It has always been glorious and honored among all the nations of the earth, because wherever it floated, upon the land or upon the sea, it was recognized as the emblem and very symbol of freedom, humanity, and justice. [Applause.] God grant that it may ever continue so to be! In all its beauty of blended colors and glorious emblazonry of stars, it is honored and respected throughout the world.

Of all the flags of all the governments of all the kingdoms, principalities, empires, and nations of this earth, there is no other flag that shines so resplendent with the light of human freedom, none that is lifted higher in the march of human progress, and none that is greeted more gladly in its coming than the banner of the great Republic. Let us stand true to the lofty principles of those who gave it to our keeping. Let it continue in the future, as in the past, the symbol of honor, of equity, humanity, freedom, and justice, and it will continue throughout the centuries to be honored among all the nations of the earth, and will go forth leading the van of that mighty march of civilization and enlightenment, which, moving out in ever-widening circles toward the uttermost parts of the earth, is as resistless in its advance as the tides of the ocean and as glorious in its glad coming as the waves of the morning light. [Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

[Mr. GAINES addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, at this time I offer and ask the Clerk to read the following amendment to the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be read for the information of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask the Clerk to read it in my time, and whatever purposes I can make of it afterwards I shall do.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it further resolved, That on Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1898, at the general election then to be held in the Territory of Arizona, the following-named Territorial officers shall be elected by the qualified electors of said Territory, who shall hold their respective offices for the term of four years, unless otherwise prescribed by the legislative assembly of said Territory, to wit: One governor, secretary of state, and auditor, treasurer, attorney-general, superintendent of public instruction, one chief justice and three associate justices of the supreme court of Arizona, and when elected said justices shall exercise and have the same powers, duties, jurisdiction, etc., as is now prescribed by law. The election of said justices shall in no wise interfere with the jurisdiction of the courts as now established, the purpose being only to change the manner of selecting the judges.

The board of control shall consist as now prescribed, except that the citizen member thereof shall be elected at the time and in the manner hereinbefore provided. There shall also be elected at said election a Territorial board of equalization, consisting of the number of persons now constituting said board, whose duties shall be such as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by the laws of said Territory.

All other Territorial officers not herein named shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the consent of the Territorial council. The clerks of the district court in each county shall be elected by the qualified electors of the county in which he resides and is to serve.

Nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the power of the legislative assembly of said Territory over said officers, nor from abrogating the same, except the offices of governor and the justices aforesaid.

The salary and compensation of said officers, when elected, shall be paid at the time and in the manner now prescribed by law.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that this is only read for information.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is not my only purpose, as I stated. I wish to know, as a parliamentary inquiry, whether there is now or whether there will be an opportunity to offer amendments to this resolution. I want that amendment voted on by the House, if I can get the opportunity—if it is germane. If, in the opinion of the Chair, it is not germane, I should like to be heard a minute on that whenever it is in order. I do not wish to interrupt the orderly proceeding of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that the gentleman from Arizona was not recognized for the purpose of offering the amendment, but was recognized in the time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], and the so-called amendment could only be read for information in the time of the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not know for what purpose I was recognized, but I know for what purpose the floor was accorded to me.

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] ten minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, no man rejoiced more than I did when I heard that the bestial Queen of the Sandwich Islands had been dethroned and a provisional government established. No man rejoiced more than I when the President of the United States recognized that provisional government. No man rejoiced more than I when that provisional government became a republic. And no man felt a greater tinge of shame than I when an ex-member of Congress from Georgia went to those islands, by direction of another President of the United States, and hauled down the American flag that had been placed there for the protection of American citizens. [Applause.] But as an American I felt a greater tinge of shame when that same President made an effort to destroy the little Republic and reestablish in authority the bestial Queen—a fit companion for Queen Isabella of Spain—and was only deterred in his attempt because the Queen insisted upon butchering the patriotic men who had dethroned her and established a republic upon the ruins of her barbaric monarchy. Fitly was he repudiated by his own political party and fitly was his course disapproved by the American people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that Republic has opened its ports to the ships of the American nation. We are at war, and this sturdy little Republic has made its ports practically American ports. She takes all the risks of trouble with foreign nations to prove her sympathy with the American Republic in its hour of trial; and I am not the man to give her a blow in the face in return for that courtesy by voting against this bill. [Applause.]

Sir, territorial acquisition is the desire of every people. With the English-speaking race it is not only a passion, but the source of all their strength and greatness. Not a foot of ground do they demonstrate on but what was taken from strangers. It was not a national movement that planted them on these shores at first. It was a movement of groups, instigated by a desire to escape oppression. From this transplanting came our nation, not by pre-conceived designs, but as a result of the movement. When the thin line was planted on the Atlantic coast there was no idea of overspreading the continent. A commission sent out from Boston to explore the wilderness went as far as Beaver Creek, Waltham, and returned with the report that civilization would probably never extend beyond that limit. But the impulse to expand was at work, and colony after colony appeared. When we separated from Great Britain the idea of continental supremacy was so weak that Jefferson's purchase of Louisiana met with bitter resistance; but with the victory of Andrew Jackson at New Orleans the tide set in, and shortly thereafter we assumed political guardianship of the New World. Then came the Spanish treaty, which gave us Florida and completed our coast line on the Gulf, and also the Spanish confirmation of the French grant, to which up to that time Spain had laid claim. Texas was next admitted. Then came the Mexican grant, after the war with that country, which gave us our possessions on the Pacific. And then the Gadsden purchase.

These were Democratic moves, resisted by opposition. The purchase of Alaska was a tremendous leap over British domain, and was a Republican measure, which has caused us considerable trouble, and which has yet resulted in no permanent benefit, though the Klondike gold mines, it is hoped, will bring us out. It was an out of the way purchase. This objection does not lie against the Sandwich Islands. They are in the strict line of communication, and, except for mere distance, have much the same connection with us as Brooklyn had with New York before the two were made one. The ferry is longer, but the business and government of the island are essentially American.

Moreover, sir, distance on the ocean is fast being annihilated. It does not take much longer now for one of our wave-splitting steamships to go from San Francisco to Honolulu than it did a century ago for a Dutch sloop to run from New York to Albany. The business over the former route is infinitely greater and of vital importance to this nation. Steam has practically condensed the globe and is fast obliterating ocean barriers.

In every essential respect the Sandwich Islands are already annexed. The laws, the manifestoes, and the proclamations there—indeed, all of their political literature—are already in our language. The islands have been civilized by Americans. They are governed by Americans, men of our kith and kin, anxious for the union. They are an essential outpost of the United States. The objections to their annexation are weak indeed compared with those urged against former acquisitions; yet who would give up a single foot of the territory already acquired? Experience has shown that the web and woof of our system grows stronger with territorial extension instead of weaker, as was formerly urged. It is the history of all nations that when they begin to lose territory they decline. The Roman Empire and the Kingdom of Spain, once a province of that Empire, are conclusive on this point. So is the fact that we have not a foot of territory that we have not taken from others. A higher power than that of the sugar kings has decreed that these islands shall become an integral part of the United States. It is the decree of the King of Kings, the Ruler of the Universe. His missionaries rescued the Sandwich Islands from barbarism, and He will preserve them for ages in the bosom of the American Union. [Loud applause.]

[Here Mr. CUMMINGS's time expired.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi twenty-five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have listened, as I always do, with much interest to the various utterances of my friends upon this question, and with especial interest to what was said by the gentleman from New York, especially a friend of mine. The gentleman, however, is not so happy to-day in the conclusiveness of his logic as he sometimes is. In fact, his zeal for Hawaiian annexation has led him to indulge in some of the ordinary fallacies in which men indulge when they are actuated by overzeal. About the last thing my friend said was that the whole history of the world proved that whenever people began to lose territory, they began to lose weight in the affairs of the world and to decline.

My friend has simply put the effect in place of the cause. Whenever people begin to lose weight in the world, then they begin to lose territory. That is the proper way to state it. But wherever people have fairness enough and foresightedness enough to know what is their proper territorial limit and to stop within this limit, they gain strength and do not weaken themselves. The Roman Empire grew stronger when its rulers concluded not to go beyond certain bounds. As long as it had attempted to carry the eagle into lands too far distant it was a source of weakness and death and destruction to the army, the legions, and the people from whom they were drawn. But when Hadrian concluded to stop further conquests and defend its possessions as far as they had gone in the Orient on the one hand and to the Rhine and Danube on the other, it showed itself capable of maintaining an unheard-of stability, of perpetuating itself absolutely in the West or East for a thousand years—longer than any other government ever lasted on the face of this globe.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman reads Roman history differently from what I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think most people will agree with me that when the rule was laid down that the imperial possessions should be confined within certain limits that was the beginning of the stability of the Roman Empire, and as great a man as Gibbon agrees with me, and not with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I say it did not last a thousand years.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, yes; the Roman power lasted fully a thousand years, much over it, before it was disrupted by the barbarians. Now, the gentleman says these people in Hawaii "have taken the chances of a war with Spain in order to be favorable to the United States in the present war." In that assertion there are two mistakes. In the first place, the people of Hawaii have had nothing to do with the action of the Hawaiian Government; secondly, the Government itself has not run the slightest chance of war with Spain. We have coaled in our own harbor, to which we have not only the right to proprietorship, but the right of sovereignty, and we have coaled from our own coal, and we had just as much right to do so as we have to coal in New York Harbor.

Mr. CUMMINGS. You can not sail a vessel into Pearl Harbor, and this House has refused to make an appropriation to clean it out.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You can not sail through the reefs; I know that. Now, I want to dwell on that point a moment, because there seems to be a great deal of difference of opinion and confusion as to our rights at Pearl Harbor. I take it that when a sovereign grants another sovereign "exclusive right to enter" a place, it carries with it, from the very necessity of the expression and the very necessities of the condition of the two parties, a right to sovereignty, unless it is bounded and limited in express terms so as to confine it to the right of proprietorship. Moreover, if I could be mistaken, and we have only a proprietary and not a sovereign right in Pearl Harbor, the peace to follow this war will be of our dictation, and Hawaii knows that we will not forget to protect her.

Now, my friend has indulged, as have other gentlemen, in a discussion of previous territorial acquisition, eminently irrelevant to this particular question. If the purpose and nature of territorial acquisition now under discussion is of like character to the others, if it is to be brought about in the same manner, then all of these arguments will be relevant; but in the first place they were not of like character in many regards, all of which points of difference I discussed and explained at a previous time on the floor of this House. Now, I want to call attention to the fact that the contemplated Hawaiian annexation is not to be accomplished by like methods; and when I say that, I want to first call the attention of the House to the only possible methods by which, under our form of government, with a written Constitution of limited and granted powers, we can accomplish territorial acquisition.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not like to interrupt the gentleman—
Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, I never refuse to be interrupted, and I like to be interrupted by one for whom I have so high a personal regard as for the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Was not Texas acquired by resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Undoubtedly; but I will show the gentleman so plainly that, in its nature, it has nothing to do with this matter, that he, with his clear head, never will ask the question again. I will come to territorial addition by joint resolution later, and to the manner of admitting Texas. The Constitution gives to the President and Senate the right to make treaties. Of course any power under the sun giving the right to make a treaty at the conclusion of a war (which is one of the occasions when the making of treaties is absolutely necessary) carries with it as a necessary incident the power of ceding territory, because it may be absolutely necessary to cede and give up territory in order to conclude a treaty securing peace.

Thus the power to make a treaty of peace carries the right, therefore, to cede territory. E converso, any government having that power has the right also to acquire territory. Mr. Jefferson was at first somewhat in doubt as to whether even this right existed; but he came to the conclusion in his old age that he had been mistaken. And at the time when the acquisition of Louisiana was a live issue, the great majority of his party conferees—the party of strict construction—differed with him in his then opinion and candidly told him so, holding that it was unnecessary to amend the Constitution in order to make the acquisition of Louisiana constitutional.

Now, there is in addition to this power as an incident to the treaty-making power one other method given in the Constitution for acquiring territory; that contemplates the acquisition of a certain kind of territory only. The power to which I now refer is given in that clause of the Constitution which empowers Congress by joint resolution to admit new States. Now, answering the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], Texas was not “annexed” in the sense in which we to-day are talking about “annexing” Hawaii. Texas came into this Union by joint resolution under an express power given to Congress in the Constitution, “to admit new States.” She came as a State. She came under an enabling act passed in order to let her come in as a State. It is only a popular confusion of terms that calls the admission of Texas “annexation.”

Mr. Speaker, I would not care to set my view on a constitutional question before this House as worthy of its sole consideration; but when I am borne out by the United States Supreme Court, I dare set up that view in which the court sustains me. The United States Supreme Court, in the Dred Scott case, takes exactly the position I have stated. Then it goes one step further, and only one step further, and that step is an obiter dictum—not a necessary part of the decision—and being an obiter dictum, and not being binding in law, it seems to me it is not entitled to be received as a correct construction of the constitutional question. But admitting for the sake of argument that it is so, let us inquire what the obiter dictum is. The Supreme Court says that under the power to admit new States into the Union Congress may admit Territories which are in contemplation of formation into States. Now, there is not a man on this floor, there is not a man who hears my voice, who will say that he or this Congress contemplates the acquisition of Hawaii for the purpose of making a State of it. There is not a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee that will risk his reputation in the judgment of men or put his sincerity to the point of criticism by making that statement. On the contrary, this House is full of men who would not vote for this resolution except with the understanding in their own minds that Hawaii is not to be introduced as a State into the Union.

Now, while I am talking about the constitutionality of this step, I want to talk about the democracy of it. And when I say democracy I do not mean democracy spelled with a big “D,” in a partisan sense; I mean democracy spelled with a little “d,” in the sense of popular government. Mr. Speaker, in order to get at the democracy or nondemocracy of this proposition, let us resort to the New England mode of argument; let us ask a question—a question which has been asked on this floor, not once, but four or five times, which the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs will not undertake to answer, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] will not undertake to answer, which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] will not undertake to answer, which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON] will not undertake to answer, which not a man here will dare undertake to answer. That question is: How are the Hawaiian Islands, after admission, to be governed in a democratic way? If they can not be governed in a democratic way consistently with the Constitution, then their annexation is undemocratic. What possible conception of popular government is to be applied to them consonant with the Constitution of the United States? Remember that you can not now, since the enactment of the fifteenth amendment, discriminate against people with regard to the exercise of the right of suffrage “because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.”

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to a recent decision of Judge Morrow, of the United States circuit court of California, who has expressly held that “Congress may legislate in accordance with the special needs of each locality, and may vary its regulations to meet the circumstances of the people.” That is a decision fresh from the United States circuit court of California.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand the gentleman to say that the person who made that decision has declared that Congress has the right to legislate broadly, without any limiting or qualifying words, “to suit the necessities of each locality.” If that is his declaration, then that judge ought to collect his opinions in a volume and ought to dub them “The curiosities of judicial announcement.” There is not a man who ever lived in the blindest, the wildest days of federalistic saturnalia, when the alien and sedition laws were stalking through the country, who ever dared take the position that the Congress of the United States could “legislate to suit the wants of particular localities,” except only when it had a power granted to it, either expressly or by necessary and proper intendment, in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One moment. Now, the Constitution of the United States says to-day that there shall be no discrimination in regard to the exercise of the right of suffrage on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. There is, therefore, no way of disqualifying from suffrage these Kanakas in the Hawaiian Islands unless they be disfranchised in some indirect way. Now, in the State of Mississippi we were confronted with that problem; but we had a different race to deal with—a race that abhors a book just about as much as a Comanche Indian abhors a prayer meeting.

We put an educational qualification into our State constitution, and it had the effect of disfranchising a great number of those people. But the Kanakas are not that sort of people, although they are racially and hereditarily unfit for self-government, because no race ever existed that could equip itself in the short time of one or two generations with those magnificent traits of self-control and comprehensive information that make people capable of self-government. Capacity for self-government comes by long heredity, by inbreeding for a long time. Although those people in the Hawaiian Islands are not fitted for self-government, they happen to be a people who educationally possess a higher percentage of literates, and will continue to do so, than does the State of Michigan or the State of Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman one more question, with his consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Judge Morrow, in this decision, which is likely to become a notable one, said:

The Territories of the United States are entirely subject to the legislative authority of Congress. They are not organized under the Constitution, nor subject to its complex distribution of the powers of government as the organic law, but are the creation, exclusively, of the legislative department, and subject to its supervision and control.

It may legislate in accordance with the special needs of each locality, and vary its regulations to meet the circumstances of the people.

There is a judge, occupying a distinguished place in the judiciary of the Government, and who has occupied a seat upon this floor with honor and credit, and that is his view upon this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I thought the gentleman was going to ask me a question. Now, I understand him to say that this gentleman says that territorial government and the rights of citizens and people in the Territories are exclusively within the powers of Congress. Well, if he said that, you are doing him great injustice to take it for granted that he meant it regardless of constitutional limitations, powers, and defenses. [Applause on Democratic side.] Do you believe that the Congress of the United States could dispense with the right of trial by jury, with freedom of the press, with freedom of religion, or with any other constitutional right in the Territory of Arizona, and that that very judge, if he had as much sense as would fill a mustard seed, would not decide, if Congress attempted either of these things, that the law purposing to do it was unconstitutional?

Mr. KING. There have been dozens of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that all of the personal constitutional guarantees extend to the Territories and the citizens of Territories.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why, of course, there is no doubt about that in the mind of any boy that ever read the Federalist, or who ever had the opportunity of talking half an hour with somebody who did know something about the constitutional limitations of our Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other way in which territory may be acquired, although it does not appear in express terms in the Constitution itself. That is when the territory is a mere attachment to the person of the citizen. If I were to go out, for example, and discover an uninhabited island, as was done by American citizens in the case of Midway Island, and in the case of Navassa and some of these other islands—the Guano Islands, for instance—to which gentlemen have referred, I being a citizen of a State, and therefore, under the Constitution of the United States, a citizen of the United States, and being upon that island without any adverse or prior governmental authority or possession to conflict with that of the United States, I would carry my citizenship with me, and if by right of discovery the island was mine the jurisdiction of my Government would be extended over it as a part of and as an appendage to me. But that is not the case with Hawaii, so that principle does not come in.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if anybody upon this floor can realize more deeply than I do the gravity of this question he must indeed have a weight of sadness upon his soul, if he fears, as I fear, that this thing which seems to me the Iliad of many a yet unforetold woe and war leading to woe will be accomplished. At some times I have felt dissatisfied with the Government. I have felt it at home and I have felt it with the National Government. I have sometimes felt dissatisfied with the expression of the will of the people; but back of it all was the consoling reflection that here was at least one country in the world that was honestly and sincerely trying to make an experiment of having “a just government founded upon the consent of the governed.” And I had hoped until very lately that the time would never come when the United States Government would step out into the arena of nations, under the plea of military necessity or any other necessity—the plea of tyrants now, as always—and undertake anything in direct violation of the very principle upon which you founded the Union, the very principle upon which you founded the independence and the liberty of the colonies and the liberty of the citizens—the principle embodied in the general announcement that all just government under God is a government that is founded upon the consent of the governed, and that no power from the outside has a right to come in to me or to you, our ancestors in the colonies or to us now, and superimpose a government which we do not want.

They may have the power, but they have not the right, and when they do it they are guilty of the act of a tyrant, they are guilty of the contradiction of every sound principle upon which popular government rests. Gentlemen “pooh-pooh” the idea of consulting the people of Hawaii as to whether they desire to be governed by ourselves. Tories pooh-poohed it when our ancestors emblazoned it upon their battle flags.

But notwithstanding the arrogance of power, I honor the man who has the spirit anywhere or at any time to assert it and to fight for it.

Mr. LINNEY. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him in his very able speech, his point, as I understand it, is that we have not the consent of the people of the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. LINNEY. Now, this is a question I want to put to the gentleman as a lawyer: Where there is a governing power in any country, consisting of an executive, like the President of the Hawaiian Islands now, where the courts are open and where there is a regular machinery for collecting the taxes by which the treasury is supplied, is it not the presumption juris et de jure that that is the proper government, and that you can not go behind it?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is undoubtedly a bare technical legal presumption to that effect, which, by the way, would have justified the recognition of the government of Nero and would have justified that of any other government that ever existed.

Mr. LINNEY. Yes; but in the light of present civilization and as a lawyer, is not that presumption conclusive?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I was trying to answer the gentleman's question. I say there is a bare legal presumption which every government will make in dealing with another, that the de facto government is the government of the legal representatives of the inhabitants of the country. But that is a presumption originated for technical purposes, and you and I are not now trying to violate the maxims and principles of our ancestors by bringing in naked technicalities. Now, I say, and I say that the gentleman from North Carolina knows, that the present Government in Hawaii is not founded upon the consent of the people of Hawaii. And I say that he and you all know that long ago if the Hawaiian oligarchy had had the slightest idea that the people of Hawaii would have voted in favor of annexation to the United States they would have had a “plebiscite” and a vote of the people for the purpose of deciding that very thing.

Mr. LINNEY. Now, one other question, if the gentleman will allow me, and I ask it not with any intention of stirring up anything personal or anything sectional. You say only one-tenth or probably only one-thirtieth of the Hawaiian people have voted. In Mississippi not more than one-third of the people have voted. Now, that being so, and I take that from the Congressional Directory—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Never mind about that; just make your statement as broadly as you please.

Mr. LINNEY. I make that statement. Now, would you not think it transcending the powers of this Congress if in any course of legislation it were to refuse to recognize the present government in Mississippi as a proper one, upon the ground that the majority of the citizens have not voted?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, that question is totally unworthy of the intellect of the gentleman from North Carolina, and not altogether worthy of his heart nor of his appearance of sincerity. The State of Mississippi is a State in the Federal Union, with certain rights growing out of the same instrument from which the Federal Government itself derives its rights.

Mr. LINNEY. I admit that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Except that one is derived by reservation and the other is derived by expression, and when our forefathers, wiser, perhaps, than you and I, left the question of the qualification of the voters to the States it was left without any limitation in any way under the sun, except by the fifteenth amendment, which said that they shall make “no discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.” Mississippi has made none, though her enemies have tried the best they could in the Supreme Court of the United States and elsewhere to show that she has. But I was trying to show you that that very same possibility of preserving civilization from negro domination and yet not violating the Constitution of the United States, which has been wrought out and does happily exist in Mississippi, could not be wrought out and could not exist amongst this race known as the Kanakas in the Hawaiian Islands.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if Hawaii were admitted as a State into this Union—and the gentleman and his colleagues know that they have no idea of admitting her as a State—she would have the right, under the Constitution, to limit the number of her suffragists in any way that she chose, provided only that it did not violate the limitation of the Constitution as to “race, color, or previous condition of servitude.” But that is not the question here; and the object of the gentleman from North Carolina, despite his disclaimer of any personal or sectional intent, was the old familiar object that is known to men who are sophists, and that was to prejudice the minds of the audience against the side of the question being advocated by the speaker by attempting to invoke their prejudices against the locality or personality of the speaker; that is all.

Mr. LINNEY. You do me an injustice in that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are overlying all great questions some great general principles, and I want to read to you a little utterance which in my opinion expresses very well indeed the general principle controlling the determination of questions of territorial acquisition, and within the boundaries of the expression of which may be found a proper solution of the Hawaiian question itself. The words come from that matchless and magnificent tribune of the people, that brave soldier, I hope, soon to be, in the esteem of all of his fellow-citizens, William J. Bryan [applause on the Democratic side and laughter on the Republican side], in a speech made the other day in Nebraska. Here it is. I want you Republicans who are so in the habit of laughing whenever there is any attempt to go back to the real principles of popular government and liberty and the rights of the masses against the classes, or at any mention of the name of a friend of the people, and who think you can, in the arrogance of temporary success, safely afford to laugh, to listen to this. It may do you good hereafter if it does not do you any good now, when you are run mad with the war craze and the urging of war emergencies. Here it is:

The manifest destiny of this nation is not to acquire new realms to govern, but to carry out the fundamental principles of democracy, to the end that equality among the citizens may be secured. Mr. Bryan said: “War is harsh; it is attended by hardship and suffering; it means a vast expenditure of men and money. We may well pray for the coming of the time, promised in Holy Writ, when the spears shall be beaten into pruning hooks and the swords into plowshares; but universal peace can not come until justice is enthroned throughout the world. Jehovah deals with nations as He deals with men, and for both decrees that the wages of sin is death.”

And, by the way, the greatest sin I know whose wages has been death in all history has been the sin of overgreed and overexpansion. Macedonia and Greece were comparatively happy and free until they undertook to enslave other people—until they undertook to extend Greece all over the East. Rome was comparatively free and her citizens were comparatively happy until by undertaking to dominate the entire world she brought to the homes and household of Rome the corruption and degeneracy of the Orient and into her senate the bribery of rich peoples from all over the world who wanted to be "annexed" in "friendly alliance." Carthage was a respectable power until by the Sicilian and Spanish colonizations she had overspanned herself and excited envy, hatred, and war. Rome pursued the same course until the barbarians, pressed and pushed behind the wall, where they continued to multiply, came down for safety and from greed both for position and for food itself, and overwhelmed with hatred and contempt the proud oppressors of all mankind.

Yes; it is true with nations as with men that "the wages of sin is death," and that the greatest of all sins is blind greed and selfishness and covetousness. "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." But to continue reading from Mr. Bryan:

Until the right has triumphed in every land and love reigns in every heart, governments must, as a last resort, appeal to force. As long as the oppressor is deaf to the voice of reason, so long must the citizen accustom his shoulder to the musket and his hand to the saber.

FORCED TO TAKE UP ARMS.

Our nation exhausted diplomacy in its efforts to secure a peaceable solution of the Cuban question and only took up arms when it was compelled to choose between war and servile acquiescence in cruelties which would have been a disgrace to barbarism.

History will vindicate the position taken by the United States in the war with Spain. In saying this I assume that the principles which were invoked in the inauguration of the war will be observed in its prosecution and conclusion. If a contest undertaken for the sake of humanity degenerates into a war of conquest, we shall find it difficult to meet the charge of having added hypocrisy to greed. Is our national character so weak that we can not withstand the temptation to appropriate the first piece of land that comes within our reach?

To inflict upon the enemy all possible harm is legitimate warfare; but shall we contemplate a scheme for the colonization of the Orient merely because our fleet won a remarkable victory in the harbor of Manila?

That reminds me that right now gentlemen are urging the annexation of Hawaii as necessary in order to maintain temporary control of the Philippines. It will not be six months, mark my words, before they are advocating the annexation of the Philippines because they are an "outpost" to protect Hawaii. Thus one is made to serve the purpose of the other.

Mr. BRUCKER. Do I understand the gentleman from Mississippi to read the speech of Mr. Bryan as an argument that Mr. Bryan made against the annexation of Hawaii?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I do not think my friend understood me that way, because in private conversation I have found his judgment so clear that I have never heretofore known him to be guilty of so obvious a mistake. But I did say this was an admirable expression of general principles militating against colonial acquisition, within the boundaries of the consideration of which would come the Hawaiian question.

Mr. BRUCKER. But the gentleman from Mississippi knows that when Mr. Bryan was making this utterance he had in view territorial acquisition in the Orient, and not in the West Indies; and let me say to the gentleman—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. We are not talking about the West Indies. The gentleman is taking my time.

Mr. BRUCKER. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Had Mr. Bryan desired to make it understood that he was against the annexation of Hawaii, would he not have said so in language that would have been unmistakable?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The question before the House at the present is not Mr. Bryan's opinion as to whether Hawaii should or should not be annexed.

Mr. BRUCKER. Then why should you read from his letter?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is a question of the right of annexing Hawaii; and Mr. Bryan has given utterance to certain of general principles on territorial acquisition and colonial establishment and conquest, and I was reading them, and I thought them a fit subject to introduce as establishing general principles as a deduction from which and within the limits of which the right determination of the Hawaiian question is included.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi such time as I have remaining, that is, seven minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this is going to be the first time since I have been on the floor of the House that I have ever declined to yield to interruptions, but the continuity of my argument has been broken. I have not reached, and in the seven minutes remaining will not be able to reach, the point I wanted to discuss. I decline, therefore, to be interrupted hereafter, though I do not want to be discourteous to anybody. I want to put the balance of what Mr. Bryan said in the RECORD, but I will read this much of it:

Our guns destroyed a Spanish fleet, but can they destroy that self-evident truth that governments derive their just powers, not from superior force, but from the consent of the governed?

[Applause.]

That is where he drops the Hawaiian questions within the general principle most beautifully.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am aware that gentlemen in favor of the annexation of Hawaii say it is not a first step in any scheme of colonization or the acquisition of a colonial empire. Some of them say that. But the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] this evening, honest, brave, bold, stood out and gave them the denial. He boomed Santo Domingo as a thing we ought by all means to have. He concluded that everything in the Caribbean Sea and everything in the Gulf of Mexico ought to belong to us. He bewailed the fact that the Bermudas threatened our Atlantic coast, and he was in favor of taking about everything I heard him mention during his remarks. I believe he is one of the very fairest weather vane. I do not mean that in any sense derogatory, and I did not mean to use the word at all, but his standing on any question is one of the very best indications of the average sentiment of the men upon that side of this Chamber that I know of. From the fullness of the heart, without any express intention, the mouth spoke. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, when I made a speech some time ago in opposition to Hawaiian annexation, I said that when we got as far as annexing Hawaii we should want to go from island to island until there was no end to the places that would be annexed; each place would be an outpost to the next one. Now gentlemen are crying for the Philippines. Why? Simply because Admiral Dewey happened to demolish a Spanish fleet there—happened to land some marines at Cavite. I suppose if he had happened to fight off the coast of Spain itself, and had won a victory in the Bay of Biscay, these gentlemen would have been contending for Spanish annexation, and would have contended most earnestly today for the annexation of the Canaries, as a bridge between the two on the way over, so that we might call there more conveniently. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, in this connection every single effort made by the gentlemen on the other side to show that there is a commercial or military necessity for the possession of the Hawaiian Islands has failed. Admiral Walker was before the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House and testified that very few of the ships that sail to the Orient from San Francisco do land at Hawaii at all, and that they do not land there because commerce does not justify it and because it would make a detour and consume more coal. So much for the coaling-station and commercial-necessity argument.

Now, let us see about the military necessity. Gentlemen, in giving their general opinion, like General Schofield, said it was important—aye, necessary—as a matter of strategy to the United States. Now, although I am not a military man, I am a lawyer, and as a lawyer practiced in getting at facts I cross-examined General Schofield. This morning one of the gentlemen on the other side, my friend from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], was laughing at the idea that a man in this House should "set up his opinion as to military necessity against that of the officers of the Army." We have not done that; we have merely taken the liberty of cross-examining them, just as the gentleman from Iowa has cross-examined an expert medical witness on the stand, not because he knew more about medicine than the witness, but because he was better qualified in getting at facts. What I want is not the opinion of these men so much, but the facts upon which they base their opinion.

Now, I am going to publish the cross-examination of General Schofield made by me before the committee, and I do not believe there will be a member of this House who will not agree that General Schofield did say that "the only essential thing"—I am quoting his very language—was "the harbor at Pearl Harbor." Then Admiral Walker came, and he was asked a question as to the possibilities of fortifying this position, and he said it would cost $500,000, and with that amount of money all the navies in the world could not take it if we did not own anything else in the Hawaiian Islands. [Applause.]

The following is the cross-examination of General Schofield referred to, quoted from the committee's publication of the hearings had before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on May 10, 1898, beginning on page 4:

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the capacity for defense of the harbor already granted to the United States? How far does it extend, how is it situated, and how could it be defended?

General SCHOFIELD. As it exists to-day it has no capacity for defense at all, but its natural adaptability is very great, and it is naturally as perfect as any harbor I know of in the world. It consists of a narrow channel several miles long leading from the ocean into a deep bay, where there is ample anchorage for all naval fleets of the world.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is our present grant there?

General SCHOFIELD. Just the right to hold and use, and improve and fortify that harbor, as I understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In peace or war?

General SCHOFIELD. I believe there is some question about the perpetuity of it, but that is a question—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Leaving the question of perpetuity aside, as long as the grant exists it is a grant extending to time of war as well to time of peace?

General SCHOFIELD. Undoubtedly, and yet the condition of the grant is that it shall be improved in time of peace. When a time of war comes on, you could not improve it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have the right to hold and fortify and use it in time of war as we choose?

General SCHOFIELD. That is the original grant.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there any difficulty, say, in a fleet sailing from San Francisco to relieve the Philippine Islands going in that harbor—

General SCHOFIELD. You can not get in there; you have to cut open a channel before you can get into a safe harbor. The harbor at Honolulu is absolutely worthless as a war harbor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reason you can not get in there is on account of the physical trouble in the channel, not a political or sovereignty trouble?

General SCHOFIELD. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You speak of the easy defense of the harbor in your main statement. Does that easy defense of the harbor apply with equal force to the defense of all these islands?

General SCHOFIELD. They need no defense. There is no other harbor in all the islands except this one valuable for a naval harbor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If there is no other harbor in these islands of any value to any naval force, there is no other harbor where they can make a depot against us in time of war; so if we hold the harbor without holding the islands they would have no place that they could use as a basis of supplies and attack us?

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask the General if he has finished his general statement?

General SCHOFIELD. Yes, sir; I had gone as far as I intended at that point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I took it for granted that he had. A single question, and I am through. As you say, if we can hold it and fortify it the foreign powers could not take it, and that applies to the harbor, as I understand.

General SCHOFIELD. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not apply to all the Hawaiian Islands because, as I understand you, we could not fortify them because they have no harbors and nobody else could use them as a basis of supplies against us. Now, one other thing. You say that if we do not perfect our title in due time others will take those islands. What do you mean by "due time"?

General SCHOFIELD. I think that is a matter that is beyond my political acumen. I should think probably a week, myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When we first took that harbor, I understood you to say that you were one of the gentlemen who made the negotiations?

General SCHOFIELD. I did not negotiate, but I made an official report—a purely official report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You thought it was wise to get the harbor because that was about the only thing valuable to us?

General SCHOFIELD. The only thing essential to us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Are you still of the opinion that the harbor is the only thing essential to us?

General SCHOFIELD. From a military standpoint; the others I did not discuss.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A military or a naval standpoint is the only standpoint on which we want these islands at all, as far as your evidence goes?

General SCHOFIELD. No; I did not wish to discuss that matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What I mean to say is, the only standpoint from which you would justify it is that?

General SCHOFIELD. Yes.

Testimony of Admiral Walker (ibid., page 14):

We found we could come down without the slightest trouble as deep as we wanted to go; but this is fine sand, which can be sucked off with a suction dredge with the greatest ease. That entrance through the reef was in its narrowest part about 500 feet, as I recollect. When that should be opened, which could be done at small expense, it would leave an entrance varying, say, from 800 or 1,000 feet to 500, every inch of which would be covered by the guns placed in the fortifications on the beach, and it would not be a straight channel, it would be a curved channel; and by means of mines and a few guns on the beach all the navies in the world could be stopped from entering in there.

Mr. DINSMORE. What distance would these batteries be from Honolulu?

Admiral WALKER. They would be about 7 or 8 miles from Honolulu.

Mr. DINSMORE. And at what distance from the entrance to the harbor would the batteries be?

Admiral WALKER. The batteries would be right at the entrance; they would be on either side of the entrance.

Mr. DINSMORE. I understand now; the entrance to this lagoon.

Admiral WALKER. Yes, sir; it is called Pearl Harbor and it is called Pearl River and it is called Pearl Lagoon. It is practically a lagoon open to the sea.

Mr. NEWLANDS. How large is that lagoon inside the coral reef?

Admiral WALKER. It is very large, and cut up by points and islands so it is very smooth water, always as smooth as the water of the Potomac here, and it is entirely secure as an anchorage. There is plenty of depth of water.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How deep is it?

Admiral WALKER. You could always get 6, 7, or 8 fathoms of water; all the water a ship wants.

Mr. COUSINS. How much would it cost to make the Sandwich Islands impregnable to a fleet such as composes a first-class power now?

Admiral WALKER. It is not at all probable that any power would send a very heavy fleet out there, as it is a long way from Europe.

Mr. COUSINS. It is presumed that would be their business, to send one there. How much would it cost to fortify this harbor?

Admiral WALKER. That is a question I could not answer. It would not be very heavy of making fortifications for Pearl Harbor so it could not be taken at all, and the only other secure landing place would be at Honolulu, which is from 7 to 10 miles away, and it is perfectly easy to fortify that sufficiently to prevent anybody from landing there.

Mr. BERRY. It would cost less than to build a battle ship now?

Admiral WALKER. Yes.

Mr. PEARSON. I suppose half a million to deepen it and half a million more to build fortifications.

Admiral WALKER. I can not speak as an engineer as to the fortifications. I should think a half million would put up all the fortifications we would want there.

Advocates of annexation strive strenuously to produce the impression that the issue to be met is the alternative either to annex the islands or to leave them a prey to any nation—leave them as Henry VIII left Woolsey, "naked to their enemies."

Not at all. We have a policy. It is that of more than a half century, announced by our Presidents and our Secretaries of State; announced awkwardly, it is true, but sufficiently by the last Republican national convention, which dared not declare for annexation, though Republican Representatives in the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses prated much about it.

That all may understand, I here insert the report of the minority members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, giving their "reasons for the faith that is in them," and terminating with the resolutions which they offer as a substitute for the majority resolutions of annexation. The Hawaiian plank of the last national Republican platform, above referred to, is as follows: "The Hawaiian Islands should be controlled by the United States, and no foreign power should be permitted to interfere with them."

REPORT AND RESOLUTIONS OF MINORITY.

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, report adversely to the passage of the joint resolution, for the following reasons:

First. The people of Hawaii have not been consulted about the proposed annexation.

Second. The people of the United States have not been consulted about the proposed annexation. In fact, we believe and charge that the only hope for Hawaiian annexation, and therefore the desire of the annexationists, is to consummate their scheme under the cry of "war emergency" before the American people can be consulted. In the case of Texas the question of annexation had been one of the issues before the people and had been decided by the nomination and election of those favorable thereto.

Third. The annexation in the manner proposed is unconstitutional. There are two constitutional methods of increasing the domain of our country. One is under the treaty-making power, as all of our territory, including Louisiana, save Texas, has been acquired. This is not the means resorted to here. It was the means first tried, and confessedly it failed. The other is under that clause of the Federal Constitution which gives the power to "admit new States." The power applies only to States, not to territory avowedly not wanted for purposes of statehood, not to colonies, not to military or naval stations. It is true that the Supreme Court, in an obiter dictum, has construed the language "new States," beyond its manifest intent, to mean territory avowedly proposed to be erected into a State or States. Even granting, for the sake of argument, that this obiter dictum is court-made constitutionality, it does not apply to the case of Hawaii, because the advocates of its annexation not only do not avow any purpose to erect it into a State, but base their argument upon a contrary intent, and thereby obtain the votes of many who would otherwise be against the scheme. (10 How. U. S., 446, 447.)

Fourth. The islands are too remote, being 2,100 miles from the nearest point of our coast, and furnish too much additional coast line to be defended, the patrol line around them being over 800 miles.

Fifth. The population is not racially, nor religiously, nor otherwise homogeneous with our own.

Sixth. Political dominion over the islands is not commercially necessary.

Seventh. The islands are not from a naval or military standpoint necessary to our defense, as was admitted by General Schofield before the committee when he said there was but one harbor on the island which could be fitted up as a point d'appui against us. That harbor we already have. Nor are they in any manner necessary, unless we wish as a people to take a new departure from our historical course and become a "colonial power," and, therefore, one of the troublesome and entangling "concert of great powers." If that course shall ever be wise, we are not ready for it now, and are not even willing or ready to get ready for it. At least fifty years of home strengthening and home growth may well be given our people before launching out into this new departure, inimical to our present, if not to our ultimate, interest, and contrary not only to the teachings of our fathers, but to the lines of policy along which we have been so marvelously successful and peaceful and happy in the past.

Eighth. Even if, for the sake of argument, it be granted, first, that Hawaii would be a source of material danger to us if in the hands of a foreign power; and, second, that there exists a single nation willing in the face of our repeated diplomatic declarations of our position with regard to the islands to incur the dangers of war with us in order to seize or hold them—and we refer to history, including diplomatic correspondence with Great Britain and Japan, and also to our geographical situation with regard to other and nearer islands under the sovereignty of foreign powers for a disproof of both assertions—then this danger may be met when the first overt act or open declaration shows its actual existence, or may be prevented and forestalled now by the passage of the following resolutions, which we offer as a substitute to those reported by the majority, to wit:

"Joint resolution to announce the policy of the United States relative to the Hawaiian Islands.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, 1. That the United States will view as an act of hostility any attempt upon the part of any government of Europe or Asia to take or hold possession of the Hawaiian Islands or to exercise upon any pretext or under any conditions sovereign authority therein.

"2. That the United States hereby announces to the people of those islands and to the world their guaranty of the independence of the people of the Hawaiian Islands and their firm determination to maintain the same."

HUGH A. DINSMORE,
CHAMP CLARK,
JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
WM. M. HOWARD.

Mr. HITT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, complaint has been made by gentlemen as to the inadequacy of time devoted to this discussion. It will be remembered that four days have been given to the discussion now. Five years ago this same subject occupied the attention of the country for many weeks. During the period from that time to this on various occasions our relations with the Sandwich Islands, their importance to us, have been a matter of discussion here and elsewhere. I think I am justified in saying that no subject of general importance is more thoroughly understood by the American people than is the one involved in the resolution now pending before this House.

I have been surprised during this debate, now and heretofore, at the character of the objections made by gentlemen who oppose the resolution. In every instance, Mr. Speaker, their arguments have been based not upon conditions existing, not upon realities as they are, but on a possible fulfillment of a prophecy that they indulge in. They tell us that we are now starting upon a new departure, that the counsel of the fathers to maintain close relations only with those nations that are near to us on this continent and to avoid all entangling alliances, to confine ourselves, our efforts and our hopes, to home interests, is about to be abandoned, and we are starting out now upon a new rôle of colonial acquisition. They do not tell us that they object to the acquisition of these islands except as this is the entering wedge to a policy which they assure us must be disastrous in the extreme. For one I commit myself to no policy of that kind in giving an affirmative vote upon this resolution. I can distinguish between a colonial policy and a commercial policy. I can distinguish between the policy that would scatter colonies all over the islands of the sea and the lands of the earth and that policy which would secure to us simply those facilities of commerce that the new commercial methods make absolutely essential. There is a broad distinction between colonial possession and the possession of frequent friendly ports. The last I want; and I commit myself to nothing more than that by the vote I now give.

But, Mr. Speaker, is it not true that the Sandwich Islands in their relations to us stand alone as a type? It seems to me their acquisition does not present the same considerations as would the acquisition of the Philippine Islands. We not only want to possess all commercial advantages and all warlike advantages that are incident to the ownership of the Hawaiian Islands, but we want to prevent every other nation from having the same rights in those islands. [Applause.] If we could take Pearl Harbor and by that means exclude all other nations from those islands or from proximity to our western coast, I would be content. But we can not do that. We must take all, in order to have all of the advantages of possession by us and exclusion of others.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

Mr. HEPBURN. I prefer not to be interrupted; I have only seventeen minutes.

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen tell us—and they seem to derive gratification from the illustrations that they make—that if we pursue this course, of acquisition of these little islands, the fate of Greece, the fate of Rome, the fate of all the old empires or republics will surely be ours. I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, that the fall of those empires was not a blessing to mankind. I am not sure that their self-aggrandizement, carrying their civilization, as they did, to all parts of the world, was not a blessing to mankind, although it might have resulted (yet no man can say it with certainty) in their own overthrow.

Where did Alfred get the knowledge of law and jurisprudence that enabled him to found the British Empire save from Rome; and how could he have had that knowledge had it not been for this lust of power that gentlemen now so much condemn? Where did Charlemagne learn that which enabled him to lay broad and deep the foundation of the French Empire? Was it not this same "greed" which carried the eagles of Rome and the civilization of Rome into those far-distant provinces?

Who dares to say that, even if we should enter upon this new policy, the fate which befell the Roman Empire would be ours? Look at England. What would she be to-day if confined to her insular domain? What could she be? The mistress of the seas? Ah, no! One of the leading nations of the earth? Ah, no! Giving her laws, her literature, and her civilization to all the world? Ah, no! She would have been powerless for this great end. Had there not been a Frederick the Great, who can say that the little Duchy of Brandenburg would have extended itself into the great German Empire of to-day? This same "greed," this thirst for annexation, this desire for new territory, this passion for extending civilization, has blessed the earth.

And while I listen to gentlemen here who are full of forebodings—while I have great respect for their learning—yet I have more respect for the statesmanship of England, of Germany, of Russia, of France, nations that are to-day pursuing successfully and to our detriment this same colonial system that gentlemen here tell us is to be ruinous to us if we follow their example. The statesmanship of the earth to-day is in favor of this system of colonization, of territorial expansion, of breadth and greatness and grandeur, of extension of empire. All the statesmanship of the world, save that of the Democratic party here in the United States, says "aye" to the proposition; they alone are halting in the procession. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Speaker, how strange is this attitude of the Democratic party! Gentlemen, what inspires you now to this new departure? I say it is a new departure. Heretofore you have been the annexationists. Every argument that you have made here to-day or during this debate was refuted by the friends of Mr. Jefferson in 1803; again in 1819; again in 1845; again in 1848—refuted over and over again. Let me read a sentence or two of Democratic doctrine to remind you gentlemen how far you are departing from the faith of the fathers—your fathers, not mine, thank God! [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I read from a document that forty-odd years ago occupied more of public attention, that commanded more of the respect of the Democratic party, than any other single document that you can find, unless it is the Declaration of Independence:

It must be clear to every reflecting mind that from the peculiarity of its geographical position and the considerations attendant on it Cuba is as necessary to the North American Republic as any of its present members, and that it belongs naturally to that great family of States of which the Union is the providential nursery. Its immediate acquisition by our Government is of paramount importance, and we can not doubt but that it is a consummation devoutly to be wished for by the inhabitants. Our past history forbids that we should acquire the Island of Cuba without the consent of Spain, unless justified by the great law of self-defense. After we shall have offered Spain a price for Cuba far beyond its present value, and this shall have been refused, it will then be time to consider the question, Does Cuba in the possession of Spain seriously endanger our internal peace and the existence of our cherished Union? Should this question be answered in the affirmative, then by every law, human and divine, we shall be justified in wresting it from Spain if we possess the power.

Gentlemen, do you remember who penned those words? They were not the utterances of obscure individuals. Let me read the names: James Buchanan, J. Y. Mason, Pierre Soulé. They were addressed to Hon. William L. Marcy, Secretary of State. The three gentlemen first named were at the time—the first, the minister to England; the second, to France; the third, to Spain. They were instructed by the Secretary of State, by order of the President, to formulate the statement of the United States with reference to the acquisition of Cuba. They met at Ostend. This is from the Ostend manifesto, one of the sacred canons of your party, one of the documents that all Democrats revere. This is not ancient history. That paper is dated October, 1854, and responsive to that paper your Democratic convention—or both of them, for in the multitude of blessings that year, 1860, you had two conventions—both in their platforms made expressions upon the subject. One of them says:

Resolved, That the Democratic party are in favor of the acquisition of the Island of Cuba on such terms as shall be honorable to ourselves and just to Spain.

The other one says:

That the Democratic party are in favor of the acquisition of the Island of Cuba on such terms as shall be honorable, etc.

That was your doctrine, gentlemen, only a little while ago. What now has become of your then passion for territorial aggrandizement? What has given birth to these new fears of yours? There was no fear in 1854 or in 1860 that through the acquisition of Cuba we should have implanted in the system of the body politic that thirst and hunger, that greed for territory which would lead us on to that kind of expansion that resulted in the destruction of Rome. No man seemed to care a "continental" then about Rome [laughter on the Republican side]; no Democrat in the land was howling then about the example and fate of Greece; no man was fearful that we should extend our territory over Africa and Asia and the islands of the sea. Are you gentlemen wiser? Ah, no. Those gentlemen—all Democrats—who assembled in this Hall last night after the adjournment of the House paid a tribute to the old doctrines of the Democratic party. They passed a resolution that declared "that the annexation of Hawaii is dangerous and unwise."

Mr. Speaker, the morning print informs us that when that resolution was introduced it read: "That the acquisition of Hawaii is dangerous, unwise, and un-Democratic."

But they struck out the word "un-Democratic." [Laughter on the Republican side.] Why did you do that except in recognition of the time-honored policy of the party? This time-honored policy was established when James Buchanan, when Pierce, when Soulé, when Hunter, when Douglas, when men of that class were the leaders of the great Democratic party, and before the era of William J. Bryan, of Nebraska, and Mr. BAILEY, of Texas. [Laughter on the Republican side.] The old men thought that what brought about the grandeur of their country, territorial expansion, was Democratic. The new men are unwilling that anything of that kind shall be done by a Republican Administration.

Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to say how Hawaii would be governed if a part of the United States, but I undertake to say that if the Republican party is in power and has control that it will be well governed. If there is slavery there now, as gentlemen tell us, it will be obliterated. [Applause on the Republican side.] I can promise you that. If there are unjust laws there now, they will be repealed then. I can not tell you whether Hawaii will be a State of the Union, or when. I undertake to say, however, that with the experiences that we have recently had they will be permitted to undergo such period of probation as will assure us that they are fitted for republican institutions. [Applause on the Republican side.] I do not know how long that time will be, but I am reminded that the State of Louisiana was kept in "vassalage," as the gentleman from Arizona would say, for nine years; the State of Arkansas for seventeen years; the State of Montana for eighty-six years before it was given Statehood. We have an abundance of illustrations, if we choose to follow them, that we can take such time as will fit those people for self-government.

Mr. Speaker, there are three methods of acquiring territory—by discovery, by conquest, by purchase. Each is legitimate and recognized by the family of States in the law of nations. We are now engaged in war against Spain. It is our duty to cripple Spain in her navy, in her army, in her revenues, in her possessions. We hope, every patriot hopes, that Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands will be ours by conquest. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Successful war demands that this should be. When you gentlemen say that you will have none of it, are you praying that disaster shall come to our fleets and to our armies—that we may fail in conquering those islands? Surely I know that you do not mean that. Therefore you must be consenting that we may acquire in legitimate and lawful ways—by conquest—these possessions of Spain. What we will do with them afterwards is a question for the statesmanship of this great nation. That we will act wisely I have no doubt. But whatever we do with that territory, I am persuaded that this side of the House, and I believe that side, will insist upon retaining such portions of that territory as will enable us to meet all of the requirements of modern commerce. In the old days, with the old instrumentalities, we did not need the frequent friendly port. Now we do. We must have it or drop out of the procession of nations in their great effort to capture the commerce of the world. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the order of the House, which is equivalent to the previous question, requires no motion, but brings the resolution to a vote, first on the substitute and then on the resolution recommended by the committee, to the final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, under the order of the House made on Friday last the time has now come to take a vote on the resolution. The first question will be upon the adoption of the substitute offered by the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, 1. That the United States will view as an act of hostility any attempt upon the part of any Government of Europe or Asia to take or hold possession of the Hawaiian Islands, or to exercise upon any pretext or under any conditions sovereign authority therein.

2. That the United States hereby announces to the people of those islands and to the world their guarantee of the independence of the people of the Hawaiian Islands and their firm determination to maintain the same.

The question being taken on the substitute,

Mr. DINSMORE and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 96, nays 204, answered "present" 3, not voting 53; as follows:

So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have received a telegram from the gentleman from New York, Mr. McCLELLAN, telling me he has missed the railroad connection, and it was impossible for him to get here in time to vote, and requesting me to say that he is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and that if present and not paired he would vote "yea" on this motion and vote against the annexation resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is paired.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I have voted "yea" upon this proposition. I have a general pair with the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. GUNN. I do not know how he would vote upon this proposition. I know how he will vote on the original proposition. I therefore withdraw my vote, and ask to be marked "present."

Mr. KING. I voted "yea." I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present." I am paired with the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. GREENE.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. EDDY, is at home on important business. If present, he would vote "nay" on this proposition, and would vote in favor of the annexation of Hawaii.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. STURTEVANT. I have transferred the pair to the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and I have therefore voted "yea" on this proposition.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea" on this resolution, but I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GILLET, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague from Ohio, Mr. BURTON. If he were present, he would vote "nay" upon this proposition, and I should vote "yea."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TAYLER, is absent, and he requested me to say that if he were present he would vote "nay" on this proposition and "yea" upon the passage of the joint resolution.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. ROYSE with Mr. ZENOR.

Mr. SPRAGUE with Mr. LENTZ.

Mr. LORIMER with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. SMITH of Kentucky.

Mr. EDDY with Mr. TALBERT.

Mr. CASTLE with Mr. HUNTER.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts with Mr. TERRY.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska with Mr. KING.

Mr. BURTON with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.

Mr. BEACH with Mr. BRENNER of Ohio.

Mr. COLSON with Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. ODELL with Mr. DE ARMOND.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. ALLEN.
Mr. BARRETT with Mr. COOPER of Texas.
Mr. W. A. STONE with Mr. McCLELLAN.
Mr. ARNOLD with Mr. COX.
Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. MIERS of Indiana.
Mr. QUIGG with Mr. CRANFORD.

For this day:

Mr. GARDNER with Mr. LATTIMER.

Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. OTEY.

On this question:

Mr. GUNN with Mr. BURKE.

Mr. STURTEVANT with Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. REEVES with Mr. BARLOW, on Hawaiian annexation. Mr. REEVES for annexation and Mr. BARLOW against it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts with Mr. MADDOX. Mr. WALKER would vote for and Mr. MADDOX against the resolution.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. CATCHINGS, on Hawaiian annexation. Mr. TAYLER would vote for and Mr. CATCHINGS against it.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my associate, Mr. OVERSTREET, is absent. If present, he would vote "nay" on this proposition, and would vote in favor of annexation.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The yeas and nays.

Mr. DINSMORE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, and take the vote on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the order for the yeas and nays will be vacated.

There was no objection.

The question was then taken, and the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HITT. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 209, nays 91, answered "present" 6, not voting 49; as follows:

So the joint resolution was passed.

Pending the announcement, the following took place:

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present." I am paired with the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. GUNN.

Mr. DE VRIES. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by my colleague, Mr. CASTLE, to say that he is unavoidably absent, but that if present he would vote "aye."

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote. I voted upon this roll call. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GILLET. If he were present, he would vote "aye" and I would vote "no."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. LORIMER, is detained at home by illness. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. GREENE, is absent. I have a general pair with him. Not knowing how he would vote, I desire to be marked "present." I think he would vote "no," and I would vote "aye."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York, Mr. McCLELLAN, is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "no."

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with my colleague, Mr. BURTON, and I wish to vote "present." I think if he were present he would vote "aye," and I think I would also.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say on behalf of my colleague, Mr. VINCENT, that he is temporarily absent. I am satisfied if he were present he would vote "aye."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. TAYLER of Ohio, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). Before announcing the result of the vote I desire to say that the Speaker of the House is absent on account of illness. He authorizes me to say that if present he would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I want to say that I have this day reported a bill from the Banking and Currency Committee, and I ask, as agreed upon in the committee, that the minority have ten days to file their views.

Mr. BAILEY. Is that the agreement of the committee?

Mr. McCLEARY. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4764. An act to repeal so much of the act approved July 31, 1876, as forbids publishing in the District of Columbia certain advertisements for contracts;

S. 2059. An act to authorize a retired list for enlisted men and appointed petty officers of the United States Navy;

S. 3795. An act for the relief of Hubert Nyssen;

S. 4840. An act for the relief of Charles T. Rader;

S. 4036. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Des Moines Rapids Power Company the right to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a wing dam, canal, and power station in the Mississippi River, in Hancock County, Ill.;" and

S. 2821. An act to provide a home for aged and infirm colored people.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 6098) to correct the military record of N. Ward Cady, late major, Second Mounted Rifles, New York Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10423. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the administration of justice in the Army," approved October 1, 1890, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6679. An act to repeal an act entitled "An act to perfect the military record of James T. Hughes;" and

H. R. 1307. An act to correct the naval record of G. K. Knowlton, late of the United States Navy.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4764. An act to repeal so much of the act approved July 31, 1876, as forbids publishing in the District of Columbia certain advertisements for contracts—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 2059. An act to authorize a retired list for enlisted men and appointed petty officers of the United States Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 3795. An act for the relief of Hubert Nyssen—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4340. An act for the relief of Charles T. Rader—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3701. An act authorizing the President of the United States to nominate Lieut. Commander R. M. G. Brown, now on the retired list, to be a commander on the retired list—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 4036. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the Des Moines Rapids Power Company the right to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a wing dam, canal, and power station in the Mississippi River, in Hancock County, Ill.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 2821. An act to provide a home for aged and infirm colored people—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. VINCENT, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SHUFORD, for two weeks, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. FOWLER of North Carolina, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. TALBERT, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

The motion of Mr. HITT was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service submitting estimates of appropriations for additional clerical services, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. OSBORNE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3140) to reimburse the State of Wyoming for money expended by the Territory of Wyoming in protecting and preserving the Yellowstone National Park during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1571); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10691) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes, reported the same, accompanied by a report (No. 1574); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McCLEARY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10289) to provide for strengthening the public credit, for the relief of the United States Treasury, and for the amendment of the laws relating to national banking associations, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1575); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4439) to relieve owners of mining claims who enlist in the military service of the United States for duty in the war with Spain from performing assessment work during such term of service, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1576); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 421) providing for an additional circuit judge in the sixth judicial circuit, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1577); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GRIFFIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8272) providing for the extension of the Loudon Park National Cemetery, near Baltimore, Md., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1578); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BABCOCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10667) to change name of Capital Railway Company, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1582); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. McEWAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9191) for the relief of Philip Hagne, as administrator of the estate of Joseph Hagne, late of New York City, N. Y., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1569); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RIXEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3261) for the relief of P. F. Dandon, of San Francisco, Cal., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1570); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6545) for the relief of Smith R. Mershon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1572); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULZER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6971) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Eugene Ellard, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1573); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6137) for the relief of Henry C. Rawson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1579); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2035) for the remuster of Francisco V. De Coster as captain of Companies A and D, Mississippi Marine Brigade Cavalry Volunteers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1580); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. DAYTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6188) to amend the naval record of Lieut. Commander William L. Stone, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1581); which said bill and report were laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CANNON (from the Committee on Appropriations): A bill (H. R. 10691) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Also, resolution of Stockton Grange, No. 70, Patrons of Husbandry, San Joaquin County, Cal., urging the completion of the Nicaragua Canal by the Government—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HOWE: Petition of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association of New York City, asking that the Evans-Bromwell bill be amended by striking out sections 4 to 9, inclusive, and the bill be expeditiously passed—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MANN: Paper of Henry A. Fleckles, to accompany House bill granting a pension to Johann G. Fleckles—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 16, 1898.

Prayer by Rev. W. R. STRICKLEN, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. BURROWS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SEIZURES OF TIMBER BY SPECIAL AGENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to the instructions given to Charles E. M. Schlierholz, special agent, General Land Office, at Batesville, Ark., as to seizing timber, etc., together with a copy of Instructions to Special Agents of the General Land Office Relative to Timber on Public Lands, and a copy of Compilation of Public Timber Laws; which, on motion of Mr. JONES of Arkansas, was, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4741) to authorize the construction of a bridge over Tombigbee River, in the State of Mississippi, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1114) for the establishment of a light and fog signal on or near Sabine Bank, Texas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4774) for the settlement of Piute war claims, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4774) entitled "A bill for the settlement of Piute war claims," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1046) to correct the military record of James P. McGee, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. FAIRBANKS on the 30th of March, 1898, proposing to pay $150 to John Brady, an employee of the Senate, for injuries received while in the discharge of his duties, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4635) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4712) designating Titusville, Pa., a subport of entry in the customs district of Erie, Pa., reported it with amendments.

Mr. PETTUS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4728) to change the time of holding the United States courts in the eastern district of North Carolina, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4757) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Gulf, Chickasaw and Kansas Railway Company for the purpose of constructing a railway, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4742) providing for the appointment of a military secretary to the Secretary of War, reported it with amendments.

JAMES A. STODDARD.

Mr. CARTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3071) for the relief of James A. Stoddard, to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to correct the military record of James A. Stoddard, late corporal in Company B, Eight Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, by removing the charge of desertion therefrom and granting him an honorable discharge; but no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTH CANADIAN RIVER.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4759) to authorize the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company to straighten and restore the channel of the South Canadian River, in the Indian Territory, at the crossing of said railroad, to report it favorably, with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill may be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 2, page 3, line 11, after the words "for the," to strike out "northern or central district" and insert "district in which the lands lie;" so as to read:

In case of failure to make amicable settlements with any occupant, the railway company may file its petition in the United States court in the Indian Territory for the district in which the lands lie, reciting its failure to make such amicable settlement, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Does this interfere with navigable waters?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, sir. This is for a bridge across the South Canadian River, which is not a navigable stream.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

CLAIM OF METHODIST BOOK CONCERN SOUTH.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER on the 14th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to investigate the claim of the Methodist Book Concern South, as authorized by Senate resolution No. 182; and that the necessary expenses incurred therein be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee.

EDWARD T. MATHEWS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. SEWELL on the 2d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Sally T. Mathews, Margaret S. Mathews, and Harriet E. Mathews, daughters of Edward T. Mathews, deceased, late clerk to the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate per annum allowed by law to the committee clerk aforesaid; said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLISON, May 27, 1898, reported it without amendment; and the resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearing before the Committee on Finance, May 3, 1898, on the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

MARY BROGGAN.

Mr. TURNER. By direction of the Committee on Pensions, I report favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 7844) to increase the pension of Mary Broggan. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions was, in line 5, after the word "month," to insert "the same to be in lieu of the amount she is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase to the sum of $14 per month, the same to be in lieu of the amount she is now receiving, the pension of Mary Broggan, widow of Francis Broggan, late a corporal, Ordnance Corps, United States Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 4782) granting a pension to Elizabeth Comer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PRITCHARD submitted an amendment relative to the payment of George H. Smathers for professional services rendered the Eastern Band of North Carolina Cherokee Indians, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to confirm a contract between said George H. Smathers and said Indians, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the payment of the claim of J. B. Fortune for fees earned as clerk of the United States district court intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ANNEXATION OF HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the joint resolution from the House of Representatives just communicated to the Senate may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the joint resolution may be read the first and second times by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order. [A pause.] The morning business appears to be closed.

ELIAS B. BELL.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2844) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Elias B. Bell.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion now borne on the records of the War Department against the name of Elias B. Bell, formerly a member of Company E, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Usually there is inserted in such bills a provision "that no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. McMILLAN. That is provided for, as I understand. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] reported the bill favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have always understood that all of these bills should contain the provision I have stated.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I move to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall accrue on account of the passage of this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF RHODE ISLAND AVENUE.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4571) to extend Rhode Island avenue.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION OF FLOUR IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3041) regulating the inspection of flour in the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 5, section 7, line 11, after the word "merchants," to strike out "two of whom shall be residents of that part of the city of Washington formerly known as Georgetown and one a resident of Washington east of Rock Creek;" and in line 21, after the word "commissioners," to strike out "or" and insert "of," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 7. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to appoint three good and competent judges of flour (practical millers, bakers, or flour merchants) as commissioners of flour inspectors, whose duty it shall be on the 1st day of September, 1898, and monthly thereafter, to select the standard for each grade of flour named in the sixth and tenth sections of this act; and each commissioner shall keep a standard for each grade for the examination of inspectors and for their government in inspection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, section 14, line 4, after the word "laws," to strike out "applying to the inspection of flour in the District of Columbia" and to insert "in conflict with the provisions of this act;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. LOUIS, OKLAHOMA AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 4070) to amend an act granting to the St. Louis, Oklahoma and Southern Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said St. Louis, Oklahoma and Southern Railway Company be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct a branch line of railroad, and telegraph and telephone lines, starting at a point on the main line of said road at or near Little Blue Creek and running in a southwesterly direction to a point on the Santa Fe Railroad at or near Dougherty, and then southwest to a point on Red River to be selected by said company, with all the rights, privileges, and conditions appertaining to the main line of said road, and heretofore granted by the said act of which this is amendatory.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the bill if there is any real necessity for striking out section 2, which simply extends the time for the construction of the road?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The reason the committee struck that section out was that over that same line exactly another road is partially constructed; and it was the impression of the committee that this company wanted to get the right to build over the route and compel the other company, whose road was partially constructed, to sell to them upon their own terms. While we were willing to extend the time, we were not willing to extend it so as to give that advantage over the people who had partially constructed their road. As the time of the old company will expire very soon, if this right were granted the new company, they would have the old company entirely at a disadvantage and where they could make such terms with them as they chose. That was the committee's reason for striking out the second section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee striking out section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The bill (S. 3969) to extend the time for the construction of the railway of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company through the Indian Territory was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, at the end of the bill, in line 16, after the word "act," to insert:

Provided, That said company shall build at least 50 miles of its railway in said Territory within one year after the passage of this act; and provided further, That the right of way granted for stations be limited in length to 2,000 feet for each station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESERVOIR DAM AT LAKE WINNIBIGOSHISH.

The bill (S. 4079) providing for the immediate repair of the reservoir dam at Lake Winnibigoshish, Minnesota, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator introducing the bill is not present, and I ask that it may be passed over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say in reference to that bill that, in company with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I visited the point where that dam is located, and if we are to retain the reservoirs on the Northern Mississippi River, this improvement ought to be made, and it ought to be made speedily. The dam is in very bad shape, as I know from having personally inspected it. I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill is a very necessary bill. The dam was inspected by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and my colleague [Mr. NELSON] last year, and this bill is the result of their observations. The bill was introduced by my colleague, who is not now present, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the bill been reported by the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been.

Mr. COCKRELL. My copy of the Calendar does not show that the bill has been reported.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that it was very carefully considered by the committee, the subcommittee having made a report to the full committee on the subject.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which proposes to appropriate $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, for the purpose of making immediate repair and renewal of the reservoir dam of the United States at Lake Winnibigoshish, Minnesota, to be expended under the direction of the War Department under such plans as the Department may adopt.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRADE OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. 123) to revive the grade of Lieutenant-General in the United States Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will probably lead to discussion, and it ought to be passed over for the present.

Mr. WARREN. Do I understand that there is objection made to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I said it would probably lead to discussion and that it had better be passed over for the present, without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I have no disposition to discuss it on the standpoint of its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know, but some others do desire to discuss it.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, if objection is made, I suppose the joint resolution will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I ask, that it be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie over.

SCHOOL LANDS IN ALABAMA.

The bill (S. 3890) to grant lands to the State of Alabama for the use of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Alabama for Negroes and the State Normal College at Florence, Ala., was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. Let that be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the bill be considered, unless there is objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator's colleague has asked that it be passed over.

Mr. PASCO. I hope objection will not be made to the consideration of the bill. It was reported by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], and a similar bill passed the Senate during the last Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw my objection to the bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA MERKEL.

The bill (H. R. 9856) for the relief of Anna Merkel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund and repay to Anna Merkel, or her legal representatives, $77.27, being the residue of interest and penalties upon arrearages of general taxes paid by her on lot 300, in square 131, for the fiscal years 1892, 1893, and 1894.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is some discrepancy about this matter. I have on my Calendar as Order of Business 736, Senate bill 3142. Doubtless it arose from the fact that when the House bill was reported the Senate bill was stricken from the Calendar, and this bill was substituted in its place. The Committee on the District of Columbia recommended that the Senate bill should be amended, but the House bill took the exact form of the Senate bill as proposed to be amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Calendar seems to contain the House bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I said.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is reported without amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEE IN SUITS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

The bill (H. R. 5879) to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 3, 1887, 24 Statutes at Large, chapter 359, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That section 2 of the act aforesaid, approved March 3, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto at the end thereof the following: "The jurisdiction hereby conferred upon the said circuit and district courts shall not extend to cases brought to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of officers of the United States or brought for such purpose by persons claiming as such officers or as assignees or legal representatives thereof."

Mr. COCKRELL. In the print I have of the bill section 2 is not stricken out. I ask that the section be retained.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to remark that the proper parliamentary action would be to disagree to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF SUBWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 4107) for the protection of subsurface pipes, cables, wires, and other metallic constructions in the District of Columbia from danger by electrolysis, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. REANEY.

The bill (S. 3723) for the relief of William B. Reaney, surviving partner of the firm of Reaney, Son & Archbold, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $97,128.78 to William B. Reaney, surviving partner of the firm of Reaney, Son & Archbold, of Chester, Pa., in excess of the contract price for work done and materials furnished in the construction of the iron double-enders, hull and machinery, Suwanee, Wateree, and Shamokin, being the amount found to be due Reaney, Son & Archbold by the naval board convened by the Secretary of the Navy May 25, 1885, by virtue of a resolution adopted by the Senate of the United States March 9, 1865, and called the Selfridge Board, which shall be in full discharge of all claims against the United States on account of the above-named vessels, upon which the board made their allowance as per their report, Senate Executive Document No. 18, first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF THE CENSUS BILL.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed the usual number of Senate bill 4545, the census bill, as it passed the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the request?

Mr. CARTER. The request is that the usual number of copies of the census bill as it passed the Senate be printed. The bill, I am told, has not been referred in the House of Representatives to any committee, and consequently it has not been printed as it passed the Senate. There is a great demand for copies.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a great demand for copies, and we ought to have more than the usual number printed. Let the usual number be printed, and that will give the House their share, and then let 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. I modify the request so as to embrace the printing of 1,000 extra copies for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the modified request? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3872) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $17,000 to Dr. John B. Read, his claim as royalty on all rifle projectiles with iron sabots furnished, as found by the board of Army officers, to the United States, under resolution of Congress, the sum to be received by John B. Read as royalty upon all such projectiles so furnished to the United States and in full satisfaction of his claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4326) to regulate the sitting of the United States courts within the district of South Carolina.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SISSETON AND WAHPETON BANDS OF SIOUX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, and it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That the annuities of the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as the Santee Sioux Indians, arising under and by virtue of the treaties with them of September 29, 1837, and August 5, 1851, between said bands of Indians and the United States, which annuities were declared forfeited by the act of Congress approved February 16, 1863, be, and the same are hereby, restored to said Indians and their descendants residing in the United States, to the full extent and effect as if said act of Congress attempting to forfeit the same had never been passed, all of said annuities so restored to commence from the last payment of the same actually made and not diverted to other uses under any of said treaties, and to continue until the expiration of the same by the terms of said treaties; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to state an account between the United States and the said bands of Indians, giving them credit for the unpaid installments of annuities arising under and by virtue of the above-named treaties made with them, and charging them under and by virtue of said treaties since the passage of said act of Congress of February 16, 1863, and the amount, if any, found due them under and by virtue of the treaties of August 5, 1851, up to and including the 1st day of July, 1902, and the amount, if any, found due them by virtue of the said treaty of September 29, 1837, shall be placed to their credit on the books of the Treasury of which amount found due and placed to their credit as herein provided there shall be, and hereby is, appropriated the sum of $300,000, to be immediately available, and out of which sum so appropriated the Secretary of the Interior shall pay attorneys' fees on the amount found due said Indians and placed to their credit on the books of the Treasury in accordance with contracts with said Indians approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and on file in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the balance of the sum so appropriated remaining after paying attorneys' fees as herein authorized shall be paid per capita to said Indians, and the balance of the amount found due to said Indians and placed to their credit on the books of the Treasury as herein provided and not hereby appropriated shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, and shall at all times be subject to appropriation by Congress for the use and benefit of said Indians: Provided further, That this act, and all its benefits, shall apply to and include all Dakota or Sioux Indians who were members of said Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians at the time of the making of said treaty of August 5, 1851, and their descendants, whether of the full Indian or mixed blood, who are living in any part of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope there will be some explanation made of this bill by the committee. It is an important measure.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There is a typographical error in the amendment. On page 4, in line 6, "ninety-eight" should be stricken out and "thirty-seven" inserted; so as to read "1837." The date is wrong.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a clerical error, I suppose.

The SECRETARY. Amend the committee amendment, in line 6, page 4, by striking out "ninety-eight" and inserting "thirty-seven;" so as to read:

And the amount, if any, found due them by virtue of the said treaty of September 29, 1837, shall be placed to their credit on the books of the Treasury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is simply a clerical error.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before the Senator from South Dakota begins, I should like to ask him if he will not accept an amendment which I think should come in at the end of line 9, on page 2, in the following words:

Provided, That in any statement of account with said Indians under said treaties there shall be deducted from the aggregate amount found due them all sums paid to said Indians under the treaty proclaimed May 2, 1867, and appropriations made in pursuance thereof: And.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I accept the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from South Dakota accept the amendment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I desire to add some other amendments if this is accepted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Insert the amendment before the word "Provided," and after the word "Provided" insert the word "further."

The SECRETARY. Before the word "Provided," in line 9, page 2, insert the following:

Provided, That in any statement of account with said Indians under said treaties there shall be deducted from the aggregate amount found due them all sums paid to said Indians under the treaty proclaimed May 2, 1867, and appropriations made in pursuance thereof: And.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then where the word "provided" follows in the bill make it read "provided further."

The SECRETARY. Insert "further" after the word "provided," so as to read "And provided further."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment? Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from South Dakota accepts the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is accepted by the Senator from South Dakota. It is agreed to without objection.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have action upon the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs to insert as an additional section section 2.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer an amendment now which will come in at the end of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the end of the committee amendment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; at the end of the committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment insert:

And provided further, That no person who was actually engaged in the Sioux outbreak of 1862 shall be entitled to participate in the benefits of this act or receive any of the moneys hereby appropriated.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the amendment by adding "or his or her descendants" after "person."

The SECRETARY. Amend the amendment by inserting after the word "person," where it occurs, "or his or her descendants."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs to insert section 2 as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have not objected to these amendments simply for the reason that, as I look at the situation respecting the bill, no part of it should pass. I might say in the beginning that I oppose the bill with some hesitation from the fact that I learn it comes to the Senate on the report of at least a majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs, if not practically with the assent of all the members of that committee.

The bill involves a sum or sums exceeding $5,000,000. I cannot ascertain exactly the amount that will be involved, because, unfortunately, in the bill as reported amounts are not stated, except the amounts to be paid for attorneys' fees, but from the best data attainable the first section of the bill involves about $2,800,000 and the second section involves over $2,000,000. As I look upon it, both these sums are pure gratuities and do not rest upon any treaty or law and have no foundation in equity.

My attention has been called to this subject for a good many years. It has been, in various forms and ways, a subject before the Committee on Appropriations for several years. It rests upon the theory and idea that in 1863, during the period of general excitement in our country, and during the period of absolute unrest among all the Indian tribes, the Congress of the United States declared a forfeiture of certain annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton tribes and the Medawakanton and one other tribe now known as the Santees, because of an outbreak in the State of Minnesota, resulting in the loss of a good many lives of men, women, and children, and that it was the result of a combination of these two tribes of Sioux Indians. It is argued by those who favor the bill that, inasmuch as in other instances we have restored to other tribes their rights which had been forfeited by war or by participation in the civil war, we should do the same thing with these tribes.

Mr. President, as I look upon these treaties, that is not at all the situation as respects these tribes. Although the statute of 1863 does use the technical word "forfeiture," it was not, in fact, a statute of forfeiture and has not been treated as such from that time to this, either by the Government of the United States or by these Indians.

It is necessary, therefore, for me in what I have to say to examine somewhat the treaties, and I will do so, having the treaties before me. I will say to Senators who are interested either for or against this gratuity of $5,000,000 that they will find interesting information in Senate Document No. 9, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, being the present Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the present session?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; and also in Document No. 67, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is Document No. 68?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the first print. This is the second print, with the maps.

This report was made by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress in pursuance of a provision which was inserted in the Indian appropriation act in the last Congress. The matter had been pressed upon the Committee on Appropriations and was not assented to by that committee, although an amendment was reported favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Committee on Appropriations, however, were willing that the matter should have fair consideration and a fair trial, and therefore they desired information, and a portion of the information desired is found in the two documents to which I have alluded. The amendment proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, and agreed to, provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to report to Congress as soon as practicable, or at its next regular session, copies of all treaties or agreements made with the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians prior to and since 1863; also a statement in detail, as far as practicable, of all amounts or sums paid to said Indians under said treaties or otherwise, including amounts for subsistence since said period; also the extent of reservations granted to them by said treaties or agreements, or any of them, and amounts now in the Treasury arising from sale of their reservations or portions thereof; also statement of all appropriations made for or on their behalf since said period, or on behalf of any of them.

It is in response to this provision in the Indian appropriation act of last year that these two documents are presented. They contain copies of all the treaties made with the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians before 1863 and after to the present time. Whatever the obligations of the United States may be, and whatever the equities of the Indians may be, so far as the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands are concerned they are found practically within these documents. Hence it becomes necessary for us to examine those treaties and to ascertain from them first what the United States agreed to do. As respects the Sisseton and Wahpeton Sioux, they do not claim under any treaty prior to 1851. Therefore it is not necessary to make an examination of any of the treaties with those bands before that time.

In 1851 we made a treaty with these bands for the relinquishment of certain lands, which it is not necessary for me to describe, but which are found described in the treaty of 1851 and delineated upon the map accompanying the report. By that treaty we agreed to pay to these Indians a fixed sum of money annually for a period of fifty years. By a supplement or an additional treaty that amount was increased, so that under the two treaties it amounted to seventy-three thousand and some hundred dollars per annum, to continue for fifty years. The method of the payment and the disposition of the fund were provided for in the treaty. I am now speaking of the treaty of 1851, which was ratified with an amendment in 1852, and there was a modification of it which added $112,000 to the principal fund. It was provided in those treaties that this fund should be paid annually, and should be disposed of as stated in the treaty, namely: For a general agricultural improvement and civilization fund, the sum of $12,000, out of the $73,800; for educational purposes, the sum of $6,000, making $18,000 for these two purposes; for the purchase of goods and provisions, the sum of $10,000; and in addition to these several sums which were to be used, as will be seen, for the general comfort and improvement and education of the Indians, there was to be an annuity of $40,000 per annum paid. That was the treaty of 1851, supplemented, as I said, by a treaty made a year later, whereby there was the sum of $112,000 added to the principal sum.

This sum was to be paid in installments of about $73,000 per annum, continuing for fifty years, and it was paid faithfully to the Indians by the Government of the United States until 1858, when another treaty was made with them which materially changed the provisions of the treaty of 1851, adding to it some very important provisions. It provides, among other things, that the sums which were to be devoted to particular objects under the treaty of 1851 might be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior without reference to the provisions of the treaty of 1851. In other words, the $40,000 that was required by the treaty of 1851 to be paid to them as annuities annually might be diverted or used in any way the Secretary of the Interior thought wise to use it for the purpose of promoting the civilization, education, and material comfort of the Indians. But there was also another very important provision in the treaty which, in view of the outbreak of 1863, must have had great significance. It is this:

ART. 6. The Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians acknowledge their dependence on the Government of the United States, and do hereby pledge and bind themselves to preserve friendly relations with the citizens thereof, and to commit no injuries or depredations on their persons or property, nor on those of the members of any other tribe; but in case of any such injury or depredation, full compensation shall, as far as practicable, be made therefor out of their moneys in the hands of the United States, the amount in all cases to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

By the treaty of 1858 these bands pledged themselves that the annuities which had been given to them in 1851 by treaty should be held as a bond for peace on their part. If the peace was not kept, the annuities constituted a pledge that should be devoted to paying for injuries and losses to persons and property that might arise out of the disturbances, if they should occur, with the white people in the State of Minnesota. Thus the sum provided by the treaty of 1851 became by the treaty of 1858 absolutely pledged for the maintenance of the peace, or in case of failure, the annuity should be devoted to paying the losses that might occur to the white people in the State of Minnesota because of depredations. When, therefore, in 1863 these disturbances occurred in the State of Minnesota, the treaty of 1858 was naturally and properly resorted to on behalf of the men who had been murdered in cold blood, and the women and children as well, and whose houses and barns and other property had been destroyed. It was said to the Government of the United States: "You made a treaty with these bands in 1858 whereby you agreed to give them $73,000 per annum for fifty years. Good faith requires that you shall redeem that pledge to the people of Minnesota." And the United States, in the act which is called an act of forfeiture, reimbursed the citizens of Minnesota for the loss of life and property destroyed by the act of these tribes. Not only was that done, but they proceeded virtually to say that it should be paid out of these annuities so far as they could be applied to that purpose.

Mr. GRAY. It was a pledge.

Mr. ALLISON. It was an absolute pledge by the treaty of 1858. It was a pledge that was as binding upon the Indians, and there seems to have been a reason for requiring the pledge of them, which developed in 1863.

Now, the Government of the United States paid out of its Treasury to the citizens of Minnesota for these losses $1,900,000. The Government could not secure it from the Indians and they had to pay it out of the Treasury, and in this act of Congress, which is now called a forfeiture and which is technically called a forfeiture in the law, reimbursing those people for losses they said, "We will take it out of these treaty obligations to these Indians, whereby we agree to pay them $73,800 per annum for fifty years."

This bill now as it stands proposes that the Government of the United States shall credit these Indians on the books of the Treasury with two million seven hundred and some odd thousand dollars, and pay them 3 per cent interest from now henceforth and forever, or until we appropriate money for their use and benefit, save and except that $400,000 of it is to be reserved to pay attorneys' fees in this case as to one tribe and $300,000 as to another.

Mr. SPOONER. Seven hundred thousand dollars for attorneys' fees?

Mr. ALLISON. Four hundred thousand dollars in one case and $300,000 in another. It is, I agree, not provided in the bill that that shall be done, but it is said that there shall be appropriated out of this fund $400,000 for the Sisseton and Wahpetons, as follows:

That of the amount placed to the credit of said Indians on the books of the Treasury as herein provided, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000, out of which sum so appropriated the Secretary of the Interior shall pay attorneys' fees, in accordance with contracts with said Indians, on the amount placed to their credit up to July 1, 1902, as herein directed, and the balance remaining after payment of said fees shall be paid per capita to said Indians or expended for their benefit as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

What that balance is is not disclosed in the bill, and I do not know that it will be disclosed in the debate. That applies to the Sissetons and Wahpetons. An appropriation of $300,000 is made in the amendment to the bill for the Santee Sioux in the same phraseology.

We see now that in 1858 these Indians solemnly pledged themselves to keep the peace or forfeit to the United States for the benefit of the citizens of Minnesota the annuities which had been provided for in 1851. While there may be in the phraseology of the statute a technical statement of forfeiture, the purpose and aim of that statute was to use the annuities to pay the citizens of Minnesota for their losses, and they were so paid out of the Treasury. This outbreak did not occur until 1862, and up to that time the annuities were paid.

Mr. President, in seeking this information we find, on page 21, in Document No. 9, the first document, statement No. 13—

Mr. COCKRELL. The document which the Senator calls No. 9 is really No. 68.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; No. 68.

Mr. COCKRELL. No. 9 is only one page.

Mr. ALLISON. It is on page 21 of the document I have. There may be a difference in the paging.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; it is page 21.

Mr. ALLISON. It is called Statement No. 13, and it is the statement upon which this bill is based as to its first section, now somewhat modified, it is true, by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. But Statement No. 13 discloses that we are to put into the Treasury, if this bill shall pass, on account of the Sissetons and Wahpetons $2,721,432.36. I think it can not be said that we have dealt harshly with the Indian tribes in this body in the last few years, or that we have so dealt with them since 1867, when, after the close of the war, the people of the United States and the Government of the United States entered practically upon a new Indian policy.

As rapidly as we could, after the close of the war, we undertook to make treaties with all the Indian tribes, and in 1866 we made a large number of treaties with the tribes in the Southwest. In 1867 we made a treaty with these Indians, having practically supported them, or all of them that could be brought within our reach, at the expense of the United States from 1863 to 1867. A portion of these Indians, perhaps 1,200 or 1,500 of them, went far to the Northwest and lived for three or four years by hunting when game was very plentiful, as it was plentiful in the years following 1863. There was a wide area of country, extending practically from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean, which was, except in a few spots here and there, uninhabited; and in 1867, with my own eyes, Mr. President, I saw at least 20,000 buffalo in a single herd crossing through the State of Nebraska to the north. So these Indians had every opportunity of living upon game in all that region lying northwest. A large portion of these Sissetons and Wahpetons fled there. In 1867 we endeavored to pursue the policy as to them which we had pursued with other tribes, and we undertook to call them back again within the region of civilization and to place them safely upon reservations, in order that we might give them the benefit of our schools and give them an opportunity to live by agriculture and not by hunting.

So we made a treaty in 1867 with these Sissetons and Wahpetons, and I have that treaty here, which was made by the commissioners sent out in that year. It was a more liberal treaty respecting the amount of money they should receive than was thought wise by the Senate of the United States; and therefore, when that treaty came up for consideration, it was modified to a considerable degree by the Senate; but it was in no way sought to impair the power or the will and purpose of the United States to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to enable those Indians to engage in agriculture and to give them the benefit of schools.

I will not go over that treaty of 1867, but the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in the beginning of this debate asked the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] having charge of this bill to allow him to put in an amendment which would deduct from this $2,271,000 the sum of $616,000, which arose under the treaty of 1867; and I was somewhat surprised to see the Senator from South Dakota yield so willingly to an amendment which changed this bill $616,000, when it had come with such unanimity from the Committee on Indian Affairs, without any notice or care having been taken as respects that enormous sum of money, which now without debate is conceded to be just and right in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to correct the Senator at this point. I do not think it is just and right to subtract $616,000 from the sum due these Indians. Under the treaty of 1867 they granted to the United States valuable rights and valuable concessions which the $616,000 was to pay for and was the consideration for the treaty; and it ought not to be deducted; but I think these people had better receive a portion of that to which they are justly entitled rather than to lose it all, and so I simply yielded for the purpose of assisting in the passage of the bill, which is just and right.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, of course my criticism may not be quite correct, but if I believed those Indians had any claim upon this whole amount of $2,721,000, I should look very carefully into any suggestion which proposed to diminish the amount by $616,000. That is the only reason why I alluded to the matter at all.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question, as he is very familiar with this subject, while a good many of us are not? Do I understand that this $2,721,000—all or any large part of it—was agreed to be paid by the United States to those Indians for concessions of rights and privileges by the Indians in the land that they occupied subsequent to 1863 and to the so-called forfeiture of annuities to which they were entitled by the treaty of 1867?

Mr. ALLISON. No; the treaty of 1867 related to lands to which the Indians had claimed to have a possessory title, but which had been, as was also claimed, forfeited under the act of 1863; but this very treaty of 1867 confirmed those lands to them, with certain reservations respecting railroads, etc. Therefore their title to those lands practically depended on, or at least was confirmed by, the treaty of 1867.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish the Senator would allow me to state that the lands in Dakota were not forfeited in 1863, but only the lands in Minnesota. Therefore there was no confirmation of their title to the lands in Dakota under the treaty of 1867.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Iowa will pardon me for interrupting him, because this is an important question, and it is very important that we should understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. It is very important, and I want the Senator to understand it. I have the treaty here. I confess myself that I have not had time to study this subject as fully as I would desire.

Mr. GRAY. I understand generally and broadly that by the treaty of 1851 or 1852—

Mr. ALLISON. The treaties of 1851 and 1852 together.

Mr. GRAY. These Indians, or some of them, became entitled to payment from the United States of an annuity of $78,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. For fifty years.

Mr. GRAY. For fifty years; and that the treaties of 1851 and 1852, which secured that annuity to these Indians for that term of years, also had a provision in it by which the Indians on their part stipulated that if they should make war against the United States or upon the inhabitants of the United States, should break the peace, or commit depredations on life or property, these annuities then should be practically forfeited, and that the United States could use them so far as they would go in recoupment to those who had suffered losses by the depredations of these Indians. Is that true?

Mr. ALLISON. That is true of the treaty of 1858; and it is not only true respecting these Indians, but it is practically true as to nearly all of these Indian treaties. We now have a committee here which annually makes up our appropriations for Indian depredations, because there are no annuities out of which the sums can be paid, and so they are paid out of the general Treasury.

Mr. GRAY. I understand, further, that in consequence of the outbreak of 1863, that massacre, which shocked not only this country, but the world, and by these very Indians, as I understand—

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. The United States, by an act of Congress, about that time proceeded to declare this forfeiture in accordance with the stipulations of the treaty itself and appropriated a large sum of money, nearly $2,000,000, to pay the inhabitants of Minnesota for their losses by reason of that outbreak. Is that true?

Mr. ALLISON. That is true. The exact sum can easily be ascertained. It was paid at different times when the allotments were ascertained.

Mr. GRAY. I understand it amounted to something like $2,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. It was over $1,900,000, according to my recollection.

Mr. GRAY. And that was paid out of the Treasury?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; that was paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. GRAY. To persons who had suffered loss by reason of the depredations of these very Indians, in contravention of their solemn treaty obligations?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. And in our settlement with them now under this bill it is proposed to pay them, or credit them, with those annuities from the beginning up to the termination of a period of fifty years, with interest, notwithstanding these payments on account of depredations, and notwithstanding the forfeiture which, according to the treaty, they stipulated should be made?

Mr. ALLISON. That is what is proposed, except there is no provision for interest as these annuities occur. The amount the annuities aggregate is to be put into the Treasury of the United States, and from now forward 3 per cent is to be allowed upon the amount with the exception of the deduction.

Mr. GRAY. Now, the question I wish to ask the Senator, if he will allow me, is whether there was anything in the treaties subsequent to 1863—the treaty of 1867, for instance—by which the United States engaged, notwithstanding all that had passed before, notwithstanding all the history which had transpired, to pay these Indians the sums of money which were included in this amount by reason of any concessions they had made about that time of lands, or rights in lands, to the United States?

Mr. ALLISON. The answer to the Senator is that a number of these Indians have, as I said, fled to the Northwestern Territory and others fled westward. In 1867 they made a new treaty. In that new treaty the first article provided as to friendly relations. The second article provided—and this will be found on page 42 of Senate Document No. 68, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session—that they cede to the United States "the right to construct certain wagon roads, railroads, mail stations, telegraph lines, and such other public improvements as the interest of the Government may require" upon these lands, to which they claim to have the possessory title in what is now the State of North Dakota; and the Government proposed by this treaty to pay them certain sums of money, and did pay them certain sums of money, in addition to these rights.

Mr. GRAY. In consideration of these rights?

Mr. ALLISON. For these rights and for other purposes. That treaty is a friendly treaty and was executed absolutely. The expenditures under it will be found in Statement No. 3, on page 17. The United States agreed to pay a certain sum of money annually, diminishing from year to year as time progresses.

Mr. GRAY. Now, let me ask one further question. Is any portion of the sum that is sought to be appropriated by the present bill on account of the obligations incurred by the United States under the treaty of 1867?

Mr. ALLISON. Nothing. That is not in this bill.

Now, having touched on the question of the treaty of 1867—and I do not wish to prolong this debate—I may as well go into the question of what we have done for these Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians, because it can not be gainsaid that at every step we took respecting these Indians after the excitement of the massacre had expended itself locally, the Government of the United States took these Indians in its hands as its wards and cared for them from year to year and from time to time as it deemed wisest and best for the promotion of their civilization and for the promotion of their self-support. So that the treaty of 1867 is only one of a series of treaties which followed relating to these identical Sisseton and Wahpeton bands.

In 1872 we made a treaty with them whereby we agreed that we would pay them $80,000 a year for ten years, specifically, and this sum was paid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair informs the Senator from Iowa and the Senate that the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, and it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 8414.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I desire to secure unanimous consent to have the bill which has been pending taken up to-morrow morning, immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the bill will not be laid aside until the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has an opportunity to finish his remarks.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no wish to proceed now, but I wish to say that I desire to occupy a sufficient length of time to explore this whole subject. I do not know how long it will take, but I do not wish to interfere with the unfinished business.

Mr. FORAKER. Then I desire that the unfinished business may be taken up.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the bill which has been pending since 1 o'clock be taken up to-morrow morning, immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. FORAKER. Not to interfere with the unfinished business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. So as not to interfere with the unfinished business, of course.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will fix the hour at 1 o'clock.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well; I will say 1 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside until to-morrow at 1 o'clock.

Mr. PETTUS. I inquire what is the unanimous-consent agreement which has been asked for?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota has asked consent that the Indian bill which has been under discussion may be laid over until to-morrow at 1 o'clock.

Mr. PETTUS. So far as unanimous consent is concerned, I am not consenting myself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then unanimous consent to take up the bill in charge of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] at 1 o'clock to-morrow is not given.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well. Then I give notice that I shall move to take the bill up to-morrow at 1 o'clock. As I understand, the Senator from Alabama objects to the unanimous-consent agreement which I asked?

Mr. PETTUS. I have.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the Chair's understanding.

Mr. PETTIGREW. One objection, of course, prevents the order being made. I give notice that I will move to take up the bill at 1 o'clock to-morrow.

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3414) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. PETTUS, in paragraph 7, on page 11, line 51, after the word "person," to strike out:

And to act as trustee in any mortgage given to secure such bonds, and to countersign the same as trustee.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] desires to address the Senate upon the bill, and will be here in a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. Might not the pending amendment be voted upon without our waiting for the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. PETTUS. I do not think we can have a vote on the amendment until the Senator from Virginia comes in.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand, Mr. President, that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] is now before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to offer a more comprehensive amendment than that. I move to strike out the seventh clause, on page 11, from line 45 to and inclusive of line 53.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the seventh paragraph, on page 11, beginning with line 45 and ending with line 53, as follows:

Seventh. To act as the financial agent of any nation, government, State, municipality, corporation, or person, and to perform any and all acts and duties not inconsistent with law that it may undertake and assume as such financial agent, including the sale, exchange, or other disposition of any bonds or other evidences of indebtedness issued by any such government, State, municipality, corporation, or person, and to act as trustee in any mortgage given to secure such bonds, and to countersign the same as trustee.

Mr. DANIEL. I offer this amendment, Mr. President, because it brings us face to face with the fact that this is a private charter for gain to be conferred upon certain individuals. The enumerated items of gainful occupation that this corporation is to be employed in are set forth in a number of provisions that include the conferred powers, and some of them are these:

To act as the financial agent of any nation, government, State, municipality, corporation, or person, and to perform any and all acts and duties not inconsistent with law that it may undertake and assume as such financial agent, including the sale, exchange, or other disposition of any bonds or other evidences of indebtedness issued by any such government, State, municipality, corporation, or person, and to act as trustee in any mortgage given to secure such bonds, and to countersign the same as trustee.

This is a measure of much more comprehensive detail than is suggested by this enumeration. It proposes to incorporate an international bank. It also proposes to incorporate an international brokerage establishment. It does not seem to me that it has any association whatsoever with the Government of the United States, except to get the sanction of its name and the benefits of its supervision.

It presents to us, Mr. President, a subject of vast and far-reaching consequence. It is a subject that has not been debated before the people, except in certain financial journals and circles. It has not been called for by the political platforms of any of the parties of the country. It is so comprehensive, so far-reaching, and so important that it demands from us the most careful thought and the most painstaking care in its consideration. I regret, Mr. President, that it should come before us at this season. The country is occupied in war; the energies of the Government are engrossed in war; the time of Representatives and Senators is almost wholly absorbed in their relation to war questions and war duties. I have not been able to spend that time upon this subject that its dignity demands, but I shall endeavor, Mr. President, in such brief and crude manner as I may, to state some objections which I have to it.

I do not know that any written report has appeared with this bill. If so, I have not seen it. It has been presented to us with great ability, learning, and skill by the distinguished and able Senator who is its patron, and he seems to predicate into constitutionality upon the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, if I correctly apprehend him. I beg to state, however, that the utmost scrutiny of this bill will not disclose that it is a regulation of commerce. Neither does it disclose to my mind that it is the appointment of an agent to regulate commerce in the name of the Government or as one of its selected subsidiary deputies. I can not see that it is a regulation of commerce or the appointment of a regulator of commerce. It is simply the clothing with corporate attributes of certain persons to engage in commerce. That is a very different matter from the regulation of commerce; that is a very different matter from appointing an agent to regulate commerce—the simple investiture with corporate faculties of certain persons to themselves engage in commerce for their private gain and behoof, with no governmental faculty, with no other governmental relation, with no other governmental agency concern than that which the Government has in the success and good fortune of every one of its citizens. It presents to us a new question in jurisprudence, as it is indeed a new phase of national polity.

It is true that the First Congress of the United States incorporated a bank. It is also true that various Congresses have chartered banks. It does not follow that because those charters were constitutional this charter is, for this charter differs materially from those which have been sustained by adjudication.

I have before me the text of the great case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, reported in 4 Wheaton. I read a passage from the text on page 422. A great discussion preceded the opinion rendered in that case. It is a leading constitutional argument. In the course of that argument it is said, and I shall not controvert the doctrine, that the Government in carrying out its governmental functions may charter a corporation for the purpose of assisting it in the execution of any of its powers. That passage is as follows:

If a corporation may be employed indiscriminately with other means to carry into execution the powers of the Government, no particular reason can be assigned for excluding the use of a bank, if required for its fiscal operations.

This is the language of Chief Justice Marshall and the opinion of the Supreme Court. Here is the gist of this decision. If the Government of the United States, which is sovereign in its sphere, needs the assistance of a corporation to carry into execution its own powers, it may create that corporation just as it would appoint any other agent to execute those powers.

I would ask the learned and able Senator who is the patron of this bill what power of the Government of the United States is the bank to be created by the bill appointed to carry out? Certainly not to assist it in its fiscal operations. There is no pretense of that as matter of fact. There is not a glint of that as matter of theory as disclosed by the bill. This Government has no fiscal operation to-day in which it needs or claims to need the assistance of this banking corporation. There is no shadow or color of claim in the bill that the bank thereby created is to be appointed a Government agent or is desired or is needed by the Government to assist it in any fiscal operation. We have just provided the most ample means for the conduct of this war. The Government has all the agencies that could be possibly suggested to assist it in its financial operations.

So, sir, I contend that under the decision which has sustained the charter of a United States bank this bill would not have been sustained. The bank whose charter was sustained was a bank of issue. It was also a fiscal agent of the United States. It was the close affiant, ally, helper, and adjunct of the Government in its business.

This bank is not so designated. This bank in its structure is not so designed and intended. It is a mere private corporation for commercial adventure, for speculation, for brokerage, for enterprise, for money-making as its chief object and end. It is a great trust company to make money in that fashion, acting as trustee in deeds of trust to secure bonds. So far from the Government needing it as an agent or looking to it as an agent it is empowered in one of the sections, section 7, clause 7, to act as the financial agent of any nation, government, state, municipality, corporation, or person; and is thus divorced, according to the eternal fitness of things, from being the fiscal agent of the Government.

Mr. President, there may be advantages to be derived to certain citizens of the United States from being invested by the Government of the United States with such a charter as this, for, as was said by the Supreme Court, in Paul vs. Virginia, 8 Wallace:

A grant of corporate existence is a grant of special privilege to the corporations, enabling them to act for certain designated purposes as a single individual and exempting them, unless otherwise specially provided, from individual liability.

Under what plea are we invited to confer special privileges upon a set of enterprising gentlemen who want to range the earth in commercial adventure solely for private gain? Why should we exempt them from individual liability? For no reason in the world except that they want to make money and want us to help them to make money. They are not appointed to execute any power of government, to aid any operations of government, or to subserve any governmental purpose whatever. The fact that they may have a relation to commerce does not make it appropriate that Congress should attempt to regulate them as instruments of commerce. Horses are instruments of commerce, the most frequently used of all animals in creation in commerce between States and nations; but because horses are used in commerce it does not give to Congress the power to charter a livery stable. Baskets are used to carry fruit from one State to another. It would not be a regulation of commerce between States to incorporate a basket company or to regulate the size of baskets.

I know it is extremely difficult to define the limitations of the interstate-commerce clause in the Constitution, but on either side of the twilight line there are things plain to be seen, and it seems plain to my mind that the mere incorporation of persons who are going to engage in commerce is not a regulation of commerce, as to incorporate a society of basket makers would not be a regulation of the commerce conducted by various persons using baskets as a vehicle of their wares.

It seems to me that such thoughts as these were fully upon the minds of the Supreme Court of the United States when it came to consider the case of Osborn vs. The Bank of the United States, in 9 Wheaton, a case which I think has already been referred to by one of the Senators who has spoken on this subject. It will be seen that the court in delivering its opinion in that case had in mind the distinction which I have already taken between a bank such as is here to be incorporated and the charter that was then under advisement. The court in that case, in speaking of the charter of the United States Bank, asked, "Is the law constitutional which levied taxation upon them?" It goes on to say:

The foundation of the argument in favor of the right of a State to tax the bank is laid in the supposed character of that institution. The argument supposes the corporation to have been originated for the management of an individual concern, to be founded upon contract between individuals, having private trade and private profit for its great end and principal object. If these premises were true, the conclusions drawn from them would be inevitable.

Mr. President, no one can read this bill without perceiving that private trade and private profit are the great end and principal object of this incorporation; it is to be founded exclusively "upon contracts between individuals" having that purview, and that being the case, the Supreme Court of the United States declares that its conclusion as to the unconstitutionality of the measure would be "inevitable." So it seems to me.

This incorporation would seem to be the incorporation of a great international syndicate to take charge of matters financial in the United States and to aspire to a powerful place in their control. The minimum stock of the bank is $5,000,000; the maximum $25,000,000. It is to be incorporated, according to the amendment offered by the committee, for fifty years. It is to have all manner of powers as bank and as broker. It is to be empowered to hold stock in foreign banks, and it is to establish, or at least it is in contemplation to establish, eight branches in the United States. It is also required of it, or it is at least empowered, to have branches in Central and South America, in Mexico, and in the West Indies, and here at our own gates it is to be invested with the power of a great trust company to act as trustee, with mortgages given to secure public bonds. It is to officiate as the agent of foreign nations. It is to buy and sell securities. It is to loan money. It may borrow money to the extent of one-half of its stock. It is to hold real estate in ample and liberal measure under the various conditions which are enumerated. I am not sure that such an institution would not entirely dominate the finances of the United States and, by its various branches in the Union and in foreign nations, put society largely tributary to its will.

We do not seem, Mr. President, in this country to be in need of new banks to be incorporated. We have 3,671 national banks in the United States. We have 3,857 State banks in the United States. We have just passed a bill for the borrowing of $500,000,000 upon bonds which will become the basis of new banks. All preexisting banks have a relation to the Government. The existing national banks still have a relation to the Government. They are banks of issue. They have been sustained and patronized as such, and on account of their characteristics have been regarded as constitutional. This bank does not possess their distinctive features. It does not hold any security of the United States nor come in contact anywhere with the Government as its servant, and in no respect, except accredited by its charter and supervision to get the prestige in the world which will come from its patronage and favor. In no sense is it a "fiscal agent" of Government.

I was reading not long since an article in the North American Review of June, 1895. Its author was the Marquis of Lorne, son-in-law of Queen Victoria. In that article he discussed, to some extent, the union of the English-speaking races, and gave it as his opinion that there is little doubt that, were it not for the school-books which teach Young America that Great Britain was a tyrant, we might have the wider union to embrace America. He asked this question:

Could we not make each school, through its history books, a means of showing how our race can be kept together by united financial arrangement?

Mr. President, I am sure there is no Senator here who has greater admiration for the people of the British Isles than I have. I am sure there is none who desires more to cultivate the amenities and the friendships and the courtesies and the confidences of life with them than I do. Their recent expressions of good will to this country intensify this feeling. But I should look with dismay and alarm upon a union with any nation that subordinated our independence in any respect, and especially our independence in the matter of money.

It has been well said that the fisc is the state. The purse must be as independent as the sword, and any union of financial arrangement upon a scheme of conquest which would subordinate this great Republic in any respect whatsoever or in the least degree to any nation upon this broad earth would mark the decline of a great people who may well aspire to lead the world in all the arts of development and of civilization.

It is not for us to imitate the examples of other great nations who, to suit their schemes of conquest, have put their financial fortunes under the control of banks. The Bank of England may suit Great Britain. It does not follow that such a bank or anything like it would suit our people or their genius. The individual should be the constant subject of our favor, of our protection, of our encouragement—the man who stands on his own feet, speaks with his own name, assumes his own responsibility, and challenges the world by his individual enterprise and his personal integrity and sagacity in all the marts of trade and commerce; he is the man to be honored and upheld. Nor are we lacking in such men, nor are they without facilities of proper combination in partnerships and corporations.

There are American bankers in London to-day, where every facility known to most enlightened commerce can be readily supplied. There are American bankers in Paris. A man can travel nowhere amongst mercantile nations that he does not find the American merchant and the American banker. There is no trouble about international exchanges that we need to build up a great financial overtowering and overpowering syndicate to conduct the affairs, not of the Government, but of the American people. Not only have we American bankers everywhere that commerce goes, but we have distinguished American banking houses who have achieved their great position in the world, whose names are credited all over the world, who can meet any kind of a demand made upon them by an American or anyone else, who are not the pampered favorites of government, but who have got in them the blood and the brain that have made this Government great without the patronage of prince, potentate, legislature, or Congress.

I do not speak thus, Mr. President, as an enemy of corporations. I believe that the corporation in its proper sphere forms one of the most beneficial agencies of our modern society. They have enabled people of small means to aggregate their little holdings under a common head and to share in the advantages which come from being able to make large investments at the fitting opportunity and to conduct large enterprises that require many hands year after year.

But, Mr. President, the United States of America does not lean to-day upon any corporations. It does not need any corporation in its fiscal operations. It is a perfectly free and independent nation, with a firm and safe reliance in the spontaneous and generous patriotism of its people. We do not want to send corporations forth to conquer the earth and to subject struggling peoples to Egyptian liens. We do not want to corral either the islands of the sea or any portion of the world's territory which may be inhabited by inferior races with a network of financial jugglery or with mortgages from which shrewd adventurers will derive profit. If we go to a foreign nation with the gallant spirits of our Army and Navy, we want to go with the flag of hope and not to practice the arts of usury upon them.

We want to go with such valiant and great-hearted ambassadors as tread the quarter-deck in the smoke of battle and with men who stand forth as the champions of a great, free, and mighty people. They will be the convoys of our commerce. They will protect individual enterprise. But we do not want either here in Washington or yonder in New York great masses of aggregated capital tied up in the service of the different nations of this earth, when perhaps if we were to appoint it as our financial agent there would be crossing of interests from its preengagement in the service of foreign potentate or king.

Mr. President, I see no necessity or occasion for this bill. Our merchants, our manufacturers, our bankers, our enterprising men will fix the lines of their commerce in every new country and on every fitting shore that invites enterprise. They do not need this great, massive movement to go and preempt the opportunities which will be opened up in territories which may come under our sway. They do not need forehanded and speculative eyes that can sway the million by the touch of a pen to monopolize and to absorb and to aggrandize where others have done the chief and the bravest work of conquest or of progression, whichever it may be called.

I do not regard this measure as republican. It is not democratic. It is not according to the genius of a democratic, individualistic people. It is uncalled for by any public exigency. It does not even disguise itself in the shape, form, or name of any public agency. It does not affect even to be national. The very terms of the title of the bill show to us that it is something extranational. It is to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank. In so far as it is patronized by our own people, it deserves respect; but the recommendations of other nations, although in the line of friendship and comity and the furtherance of trade and all that, are not the main considerations which should influence an American Congress. We had better pursue a policy in strict line with our own thought and our own idiosyncrasies, consistent with the genius of our people, and guarding above all things else the spirit, the habitudes, and the precedents of individual independence and human liberty.

It has been said, "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" What shall it profit the people of the United States if they shall garner wealth from all the quarters of the globe and lose the manly, upright spirit of individuality and independence? Riches are to be desired for their uses, but great riches and the power of congested riches have been the bane of republics, and instead of extending such far-reaching factitious aid to the great and powerful to spread themselves over the earth, I would always prefer to extend the helping hand to the poor and to the weak to struggle up into competence and to spread before them the opportunities of self-development. Such development may not be quite so rapid as the splendid schemes of which this bill is a type, but all great and true growths are slow. The self-containment, the respect for principle, the denial of opportunity to make haste and get gain are as educative, and as expanding, and as ennobling as such schemes of monopolistic mercantile enterprise and domination. I believe in the ancient landmarks on this subject. Thus far we have waxed and prospered without such charters as that now proposed being granted. There is no reason to believe we shall cease to expand if they be now denied.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, in the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] yesterday he quoted disapprovingly the expression of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that it is for the purpose of getting the prestige and the authority and the sanction of the United States that this act of incorporation is asked for at the hands of Congress. The Senator from Georgia seemed to think and argue that in getting the authority and sanction of the United States to this act of incorporation some great wrong were done or would be done to the country. It is precisely because a corporation of this kind is concerned with a function falling within the power of Congress that this sanction and this approval are asked and demanded.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] denied that this act was a regulation of commerce. He contended that it was a simple act of incorporation to carry on a private business without including any power whatever in the terms of the act to regulate commerce. No one can read the extensive and elaborate and minute provisions of the bill without coming to the conclusion that the subject-matter of the corporation is very extensively regulated, and if the subject-matter of the corporation relates to interstate commerce, then the bill does regulate interstate commerce, and, in my opinion, just because the business to be transacted is of a foreign and international character, and because the dealers with this bank ought to be assured of its credit, of its solvency, of its integrity, the seal and approval by corporate act of the United States Government are appropriate and necessary.

I find no difficulty in my own mind as to the constitutionality of the act of incorporation. I find commerce of a very high and extensive character to be regulated. I find that it is interstate and foreign commerce. I find that the bill does regulate it, and I find therefore something that I can stand on of a constitutional character. As to the policy or impolicy of the bill, that is a matter upon which Senators exercise their individual judgment. As to its constitutionality, that clause of the Constitution which gives the right to Congress to regulate commerce among the States is full support and sanction for the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. In what way do we regulate commerce in this bill? What is the provision by which we regulate commerce?

Mr. CAFFERY. This bill prescribes in nearly every one of its provisions how the business of the bank is to be carried on. It prescribes, for instance, that 10 per cent of the stock subscribed for shall be paid at the date of subscription. It prescribes that 15 per cent more of the amount of the subscription shall be paid within thirty days thereafter. It prescribes that within two years the full amount of the capital stock shall be paid in. It prescribes that the whole operations of the bank shall be under the supervision and control of the Comptroller of the Currency. It therefore prescribes in my opinion ample regulations of a commercial character.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if the bank could not do all those things and never do a particle of business that touched commerce? Does the simple fact that the Comptroller of the Currency may pass upon the question when they shall do business make the bank an agency of commerce?

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana, in this connection, if it has not been uniformly held that the encouragement and promotion of foreign commerce constitute a regulation of it?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator another question.

Mr. CAFFERY. I have not answered the first one.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I will call his attention to one provision of the bill which I think will furnish a complete answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would.

Mr. FORAKER. That is the provision in regard to the sale of bills of exchange. This commerce which we are talking about can not be carried on without the instrumentality of a bill of exchange.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that I do not think that is an agency of commerce any more than making a promissory note is. I will have something to say about that later.

Mr. FORAKER. I have a different opinion about it, and I think the Supreme Court has held that bills of exchange are instrumentalities of commerce.

Mr. TELLER. The Supreme Court has held just the reverse of that. If the Senator can show any case where they ever held that way, I will be glad to see it. They have held the reverse of that.

Mr. FORAKER. Day before yesterday I cited an authority to that effect, as I understood it.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to see it.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to see where they held to the contrary.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not think there is any question that the authority of the Supreme Court has been uttered in a number of cases that the regulation of commerce includes every instrumentality of commerce. But I want to answer the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator does not understand me. The point I make is that there is no regulation of commerce in the bill—none whatever. There is no attempt to regulate commerce.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is the very controversy, and of course it can not be decided by direct statement one way or the other. The provisions of the bill, in my opinion, having minute regard, special regard, to foreign commerce and controlling the actions of this bank in every particular, appear to my mind to regulate commerce of a foreign character.

Mr. TELLER. If the issue of a bill of exchange, I will say to the Senator, is a regulation of commerce, then of course there is regulation, but I insist that the issue of a bill of exchange has nothing whatever to do with the commerce of the country.

Mr. CAFFERY. Exactly. I will come to that point.

The Senator from Colorado wants to know, if the functions to be performed by this bank can be performed by a State bank—for that is the purport and substance of the question—what there is in this charter that gives the bank a character to be regulated. There is this in the charter: It is true that State banks may be incorporated in such a way and be supervised in such way by State authorities as to make it safe to deal with them, as to guarantee the creditors and those dealing with the banks of the solvency and integrity of the bank. But I appeal to every Senator on this floor to know whether or not in the days of such banking the banking was not carried on more on wind than on capital. This act is to assure the dealers with the bank that the seal and sanction of the United States are not placed upon it in vain, that they indicate a character of solvency and of security. That is all it is needed for, and that is the prestige and the power of which the Senator from Georgia complains—that this bank is to be inaugurated under such circumstances, with such a guaranty of a paid-up capital, with such supervision over its operations, that those dealing with it can have abundant guaranty that they will not be defrauded.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator tell me how the United States merely in a charter, and allowing anybody to get a charter of the same kind, gives a guaranty that nobody will be defrauded or that the bank will not break? The Pacific railroads were chartered by the United States, and they not only broke, but broke in their debt to the Government that chartered them. We did not by the charter get any guaranty against their breaking. How is this any guaranty that the bank will not break or any assurance of the solvency of the bank any more than if it were chartered by anybody else?

Mr. CAFFERY. When the Senator can show me the parallel between a Pacific railroad and a bank of discount, then perhaps I may answer him more closely. If a railroad discounted bills or performed the ordinary functions of a bank, I imagine his question would be somewhat pertinent.

Mr. DANIEL. There is a distinct parallel in the point I put to the Senator. Both were chartered by the United States. What I want to know is what efficacy the charter had on the question of solvency.

Mr. CAFFERY. The efficacy of the charter of this bank is that before the bank can go into business such an amount of its capital stock must be subscribed for and paid up as will guarantee that it is a solvent institution, such supervision over its affairs must be had—

Mr. HOAR. And the personal liability of stockholders for the debts, besides.

Mr. CAFFERY. Exactly. There must be such supervision over its affairs as amounts to a constant guaranty that the United States itself stands guardian over the bank and prevents banking on wind, prevents fraudulent banking, and guarantees to the dealers with the bank—

Mr. MALLORY. State banks do the same thing.

Mr. CAFFERY. They may, Mr. President, but the history of the United States shows that they have not done so.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to know what amount of responsibility falls upon the Government of the United States in the event of the failure of this guaranty?

Mr. SPOONER. The bill provides that there shall be none.

Mr. CAFFERY. There is no liability upon the part of the United States except a moral liability, except in providing efficient Comptrollers of the Currency, except in making a personal liability upon the part of the shareholders. I think that is sufficient, for, Mr. President, be it known that this is only a bank of deposit. This is not a bank of issue. When the capital stock is paid up—and it must be paid up within two years—when this bank does a business supervised by the Comptroller of the Currency, it must do a safe business, and the history of banking shows that when the business of a bank of discount is carried on with ordinary prudence, the bills receivable of the bank, being commercial paper, always respond to its ordinary liabilities.

Now, sir, with this capital of $5,000,000, which may be increased to $25,000,000, with this bank receiving deposits upon which it discounts paper, together with its own capital—with this minute direction for supervision of its affairs by the Comptroller of the Currency, who at any time can put it in liquidation and wind up its affairs, if not done according to banking rules, I see ample guarantee and ample security for the dealers with the bank. State banks may do this business, but do gentlemen want to know what State banks have not done? Is not the history of the past filled with the wrecks of State banks? After this furious onslaught on the old Bank of the United States and after the inflexible will, the indomitable purpose of Jackson had crushed the old bank, and the public deposits were removed from that bank and placed in State banks, what followed? Universal wreck, universal ruin. It may be that the bank overspeculated; it may be that there was a panic, but the very fact that they held the deposits of the United States as a gratuity tempted them to overdiscount paper, tempted them to inflation.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] invoked the shades of the old Bank of the United States. He quoted from the Thirty Years' View of Benton to show what a monstrosity that was, but ever since 1861 or 1862, after the United States organized the national banks, the present national banks have held and now hold more or as much power as ever the Bank of the United States held. They are the depositories of the public money. They issue currency to the extent of 90 per cent of their bonds. They are banks of deposit and discount. They wield as much power as the old Bank of the United States, and it is useless to talk about the defunct institution of 1830.

Mr. President, it is charged first that there is no constitutional warrant for this bank. The bank is incorporated to deal in foreign exchanges. It is said that foreign exchanges have nothing to do with the interchange of commodities; that dealing in foreign exchanges is not dealing in commerce. Foreign commerce is bottomed upon foreign exchanges. Foreign bills of exchange transfer title to goods to the purchaser of the bills.

Mr. TELLER. May I ask the Senator if he means to say that a bank issuing bills of exchange is engaged in commerce by that act?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, for the bills of exchange are bought by the customers of the bank to use in settling for their purchases or sales of goods. They are grounded upon property. They are not fictitious notes or bills. They represent just so much of commodity, and the bill transfers property.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask if a shipbuilder is engaged in commerce when he is building a ship? He is providing an instrumentality of commerce.

Mr. CAFFERY. No, sir; there is no parallel between a shipbuilder building a ship—

Mr. TELLER. The Supreme Court of the United States said he was not engaged in commerce, but said he had greater claim to that than the man who issued bills.

Mr. CAFFERY. I think that foreign bills of exchange transfer more property than the currency of the United States banks. I think the course of trade will show it. We have more than a billion of foreign trade. I think it safe to say that 90 per cent of the property of that trade is transferred by foreign bills of exchange. If these banks and the banks organized under this charter or those branches were to absorb the whole of that trade, they would effect a much greater purpose in transferring commodities than the $200,000,000 which the national banks of the United States now issue as currency.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Louisiana whether he can not see the distinction between the power to regulate commerce and to regulate the instruments of commerce and the power to charter a corporation for the purpose of engaging in commerce?

Mr. CAFFERY. I see this distinction, Mr. President: That wherever a foreign commerce is carried on by an institution conducted by an individual or voluntary association engaged in a business that needs no regulation, then I do not believe that the power of Congress ought to be invoked; but when I find a business that is a foreign business, and that does need the supervision of Congress, then I think Congress ought to act. I do not think that every dealer in New York purchasing grain to be shipped to Europe, or any number of dealers, ought to be incorporated. I believe that that business had better be left to the individual enterprise of the parties engaged in it. But a bank is an institution of a different character. Everybody deals with it; everybody can not inspect its affairs. It is of that character of public institution which requires governmental supervision, and the only question is whether the United States or the State should make the supervision or undertake the supervision.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Is the Senator contending that this bank is to be established because there is a necessity for it in our trade relations with Mexico, the West Indies, and South America?

Mr. CAFFERY. I say there may be a necessity for it.

Mr. MALLORY. Because there may be a necessity?

Mr. CAFFERY. There may be a necessity. I am not prepared to say right now whether there is a necessity or not; but I do not think that is very material. If there is not a necessity, the bank will not do any business, and if there is a necessity, it will facilitate business.

Mr. MALLORY. If it is necessary, would it not also be necessary between the United States and the Continent of Europe, between Great Britain and the United States, the trade with which is much larger than it is with the countries which I have mentioned?

Mr. GRAY. A thousand times larger.

Mr. CAFFERY. Many times larger.

Mr. MALLORY. Why not, then, establish a bank with reference to the Continent and Great Britain?

Mr. CAFFERY. If the Senator asks me my opinion, I will say I think it would be entirely proper to do so.

Mr. MALLORY. I doubt very much if a bill for that purpose could be got through the Senate.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is another question. My individual opinion is asked.

Mr. President, I fail to see any danger to the institutions of this country by the establishment of a bank. If a bank established to do business between the United States and South America at the present time is not needed, that bank will do no business. A bank incorporated by the United States to do business of a foreign character with England perhaps would do a large business; but, sir, if these banks now doing business between the United States and England—the London banks on the one side and the American banks on the other—are not a menace to our institutions, I fail to perceive how a bank incorporated under the United States authority, supervised by United States officials, should be any menace and danger to the institutions of the country.

A bank is not a trust. A bank does a purely commercial business upon legitimate lines. It charges so much percentage for discounting bills, for granting credit. If it transcends the proper limit, other banks spring up and compete with it. It can not be an oppressor of a community; it follows commercial needs; it is a handmaid of civilization; it is as necessary to the civilized world as currency itself; it stimulates trade; it makes active the capital of a community, and I do not see how a bank of a private character, not having the fisc of the Government in its grasp, not controlled by governmental influences for governmental purposes, can be any danger whatever to a community. The very reason urged by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], that because the seal, approval, and sanction of the United States might give to this bank a better send off in the countries where it is to do business as an opposition to the bank, is, in my opinion, its chief merit, and ought to be the ground of its chief support.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

Mr. CAFFERY. Before I sit down, I will suggest to the Senator from Ohio an amendment which I propose to offer, which I hope he will accept. It is in the section providing for the establishment of branch banks in the United States, providing that not more than eight be established at any one time. I think the Senator would obviate some objections, perhaps, by consenting to an amendment at that point. I have heard the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] object on that score. I wish the Senator would limit the branch banks to eight decisively, and strike out the words "at any one time."

Mr. FORAKER. I accept that amendment, if it is offered as an amendment.

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir; I offer the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment will be that the words "at any one time" be stricken out, in line 7, on page 15, after the word "eight."

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. So that it will read—not exceeding eight, at points to be approved by the Comptroller of the Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 11, on page 15, line 7, after the word "eight," it is proposed to strike out "at any one time."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate, except only very briefly to answer the suggestions of the colloquy which occurred a moment ago with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I do not know that I exactly understood the Senator from Colorado, but I can state how I understood him, and I will be obliged to him if he will correct me if I misunderstood him. I understood him to deny that bills of exchange are instruments of commerce.

Mr. TELLER. No; I did not say that. I said they were not commerce. They may be instruments of commerce.

Mr. FORAKER. But I never contended, and I have never heard anyone else contend, that bills of exchange are commerce; but it has been contended from the beginning of this debate, throughout this controversy, that bills of exchange are instruments of commerce.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly they are, but there must be more than that in this bill, in my judgment, to make an act of incorporation, that the persons to be incorporated are engaged in creating simply instruments of commerce. I said a shipbuilder is doing the same thing, and the man who gets out the masts of a ship is doing the same thing; but the getting out of masts from the forests of Alaska or some other region does not make that occupation commerce.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Colorado is quite right about that; but inasmuch as ships are designed to be instruments of commerce, it would be quite competent for Congress to prescribe how ships should be constructed and what kind of masts should be provided in order that there might be security in the navigation of ships and in order that the transaction of commercial business might be facilitated.

Mr. TELLER. That would be an entirely different thing. That would provide what should be the main instrument, of course, of commerce, and Congress can undoubtedly legislate as to what shall be the character of shipping, and all that.

Mr. FORAKER. Then it would be legislating concerning an instrumentality of commerce in its relation to commerce, and that would be a regulation of commerce. So, too, I answer the Senator from Colorado that the mere issuing of a bill of exchange would not, of course, be commerce; but when a bill of exchange is issued in connection with a commercial transaction that it is competent for Congress to provide a regulation for, then it is a commercial transaction, which the Congress is competent to regulate under this constitutional provision.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will suggest to the Senator from Ohio that ships are regulated.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I know they are.

Mr. CAFFERY. They have to run in a certain way; they have to have a certain number of pilots; they have to have a certain number of lights; they have to keep the road in a certain way; and they are regulated down to the most minute particular.

Mr. TELLER. That is not denied at all.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator from Colorado to call upon me to cite him to an authority showing that bills of exchange were instruments of commerce.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no; I had no idea of that.

Mr. FORAKER. I quote from 7 Howard—

Mr. TELLER. It is not commerce.

Mr. FORAKER. I will come to that in a moment. But, inasmuch as the authority was called for, as I understood it, I want it to go into the RECORD. I stated when that colloquy occurred that I had cited an authority in the course of this debate to the effect that bills of exchange are instruments of commerce. I find I have cited a number. The authority I had particularly in mind was the case of Nathan vs. Louisiana, in 7 Howard, page 73, the second paragraph of the syllabus of which is as follows.

Mr. TELLER. I have that case before me.

Mr. FORAKER. It is as follows:

Foreign bills of exchange are instruments of commerce.

That is as much as I need read of it.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to read a brief extract from the same case, where the court say:

The individual thus using his money and credit—is not engaged in commerce, but in supplying an instrument of commerce. He is less connected with it than the shipbuilder, without whose labor foreign commerce could not be carried on.

Say the court—

Mr. FORAKER. I apprehend there is really no difference of opinion between the Senator from Colorado and myself as to what a bill of exchange is in its relation to commerce; certainly it is agreed that a bill of exchange is an instrument of commerce. That being the case I call attention to the provision with respect to the issue of bills of exchange found in this bill on page 15. Senators must have observed that, after enumerating the powers of this proposed corporation, the bill then goes on to prescribe certain duties it shall perform, certain things it shall do. Among other things it must do is the following:

The directors shall also, within two years after the commencement of the existence of said corporation, open one such branch office in Mexico, one in the West Indies, and two in South America, at such points as the directors shall determine, for the regular sale of bills of exchange drawn upon the principal office of the company, and for the transaction of such other classes of business as the directors may designate; and from and after the establishment of each of such branch offices the said corporation shall regularly sell bills of exchange at its principal office, drawn upon the said branch offices.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks Congress gets jurisdiction of this question by reason of the fact that this corporation is authorized to have a branch in Mexico, for instance? If he does, then I should like to propound another question: What becomes of our jurisdiction if Mexico declines to allow the establishment of such an exchange there?

Mr. FORAKER. It would not affect the constitutionality of this bill if Mexico should decline. I do not apprehend that Mexico will.

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. FORAKER. It would not make any difference if every foreign country should decline to enter into a convention to allow the bank to go there; it would still remain the fact that it would be a law authorizing an agency to be used in the regulation of commerce between the States, and that would be sufficient, so far as its constitutionality is concerned. It does not depend, therefore, if I may answer that proposition further, upon what we are to do in foreign countries, because we know if this bill becomes a law, and is upheld, then it creates a governmental agency to aid in the regulation of commerce between the States, and that the law will be upheld as constitutional on that account, without regard to what foreign countries may do. The law will be enacted, if enacted at all, with knowledge to the lawmaking power that foreign countries may decline to enter into any convention. But we know the States can not decline; they have no voice about it; this being a company of the character that has been indicated, the National Government has a right to say it shall go into any State where it may see fit to send it for its purposes.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that if the Senator is right in his contention that the issue of bills of exchange is commerce within the meaning of the Constitution, then every bank in the State of New York, every private bank, every State bank, without issuing money, but which issues a bill of exchange on another State or another country, is subject to national control. That, it seems to me, would be news to the country.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not said or intimated that the mere issuing of a bill of exchange is commerce. What I have said is that they are instruments of commerce; and if I can get an opportunity, I want to show that this bill provides with respect to them in their relation to commerce in such manner as to amount to a regulation of commerce. But, Mr. President, recurring to the Senator's remark, I have no question that Congress has the right to regulate bills of exchange issued by private banks. I do not see, with all respect to the Senator, that there is any force in that suggestion. The power of Congress to regulate the issue of these instruments of commerce does not depend on the character of the bank that issues them.

Mr. TELLER. It is not simply to regulate bills of exchange, but the company is authorized to issue them, which I have asserted again and again it can not do. I have said here before, and I repeat it, that it is a common-law right for any association or individual to issue a bill of exchange, and it was settled years and years ago that it did not require any authority for that. The law merchant gave that right, and that has entered into and become a part of the common law of England.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me to proceed in order, I will try to answer the suggestion he has made, for I have the most profound respect for the Senator's legal opinion.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator so as to interfere with him, because really I should like to support this bill, if I could see my way clear to do so.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want the Senator to support it unless he can see his way clear to do so. I do not think there will be any real difference between us when we fairly understand what the propositions are.

The first proposition which I wanted to cite an authority to was that bills of exchange are instruments of commerce. The second proposition that I wanted to cite an authority to was that this power to regulate commerce extends not only to the regulation of bargaining and selling, but also to the regulation of all the instruments of commerce, and therefore to the regulations of bills of exchange. I claim, Mr. President, that it is a regulation of commerce within these authorities for Congress, with respect to an instrumentality of commerce, so to legislate as to facilitate the use of that instrumentality or the providing of that instrumentality to those who may have necessity to use it.

What was the case in 135 United States Reports, which was commented on to some extent here a day or two ago? That was a case where the State of Kansas had incorporated a railroad. That railroad wanted to extend southwardly through the Indian Territory and beyond. The Congress by an act conferred the power of eminent domain upon that State railroad company, authorizing it to condemn a right of way and acquire it in that manner through the Indian Territory. It did not say anything about regulating commerce. It was simply a conferring of the power of eminent domain upon a State railway company to be exercised in the Indian Territory.

Litigation arose when it undertook to exercise that power; and when it did, the question was raised whether or not it was competent for Congress to pass such an act as that. It was contended that there was nothing in the act that made it purport to be an act for the regulation of commerce. There was nothing said about commerce. It was the mere conferring upon a railroad of the right to condemn and take property for a right of way. There was not anything said about how freight or passengers should be transported; but the Supreme Court said, in answer to that, it does not make any difference if nothing is said in the act; it is for the court to judge whether or not the power which Congress has undertaken to exercise has any relation to any of the constitutional powers with which Congress is invested.

The court said this is an act passed by Congress under its authority to regulate commerce. Why? Not because it provided how that railroad should be used. Not alone because it was a railroad and, as such, an instrumentality to be used in commerce. As a railroad, pure and simple, it was not commerce. The man building a railroad is not engaged in commerce any more than the man who is building a ship, any more than the man who is issuing a bill of lading. The mere creation of a railroad is not commerce. But, said the Supreme Court, this is an instrumentality of commerce, and whenever the Congress facilitates the creation of this instrumentality, the Congress is engaged in regulating commerce. That is all there is of it. The mere making it possible for the road to acquire its right of way was to facilitate commerce, and, the road being interstate, that was enough.

Mr. TELLER. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but I think he has rather lost the force of what I was trying to make him understand. I mean to say that the power to issue a bill of exchange would exist in this corporation absolutely if nothing was said about it. Therefore the mere assertion that the proposed bank may do what it can do without any grant from the Government of the United States can not bring it within the jurisdiction of Congress.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not lost the force of what the Senator said, but I am coming to that particular phase of it. Just now I want to impress upon the Senator from Colorado—for I want him to support this bill; I have the profoundest respect for his legal opinion, and I do not see how it is possible for us to differ in regard to it—what I want to impress upon him again is that while the mere issuing of a bill of exchange is not commerce, while the mere building of a ship is not commerce, while the mere building of a railroad is not commerce, yet when the Congress undertakes to facilitate the use of the ship or the bill of exchange or the railroad in connection with commerce, it is then regulating commerce.

Mr. TELLER. But the citizens who own a railroad in Kansas had no right by the common law or any other law to build a railroad in the Indian Territory, and they had to have the assistance of the United States in that particular. The Government then had exercised that right—a right which I never doubted they could exercise.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the right to build a railroad was not a regulation of commerce, but the grant of the power to acquire the right of way was a regulation of commerce because that was the facilitating of commerce, because it promoted an agency for the transaction of commercial business. That was enough.

Mr. President, you can not carry on commerce with the South American States, the West Indies, and Mexico without having the necessary incidents of commerce. You may get along, possibly, without having all of them. You can barter and sell, you can exchange products directly, but I mean you can not conduct commercial relations and enjoy modern conveniences in connection therewith unless you employ commercial instrumentalities such as bills of exchange.

Bills of exchange are brought into use to facilitate commerce. That is their only use. They are a recognized necessity of commerce. While the mere issuing by a bank of a bill of exchange is not commerce, and the mere issuing of it not a regulation of commerce, yet when the Congress steps in and says, "Here is a necessity for bills of exchange in order that we may advantageously conduct our commercial relations," and therefore provides that there shall be banks established as branch banks of a parent bank established in this country, a branch located in the West Indies, one in Mexico, a number scattered throughout the South American states, and then requires that each and every one of those banks shall at all times provide bills of exchange so that people having commercial relations with the United States can be provided with them, making that an absolute requirement, I say that is a regulation of commerce.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says the fault in my argument is that banks have a right to issue bills of exchange without that provision in this proposed law. That is true. Every bank has a right to issue a bill of exchange, and a bank has a right to refuse to issue it, too, if it wants to do so. But the point of this whole matter is that we not only incorporate the bank and fix its office here and its offices throughout this country, but we fix its offices in the countries with which we want to trade, and we require that those offices shall be maintained there and these bills be issued. Why? In order that we may facilitate the transaction of our commercial business with those countries where we are now trading and relieve ourselves of the necessity which we have been under for years past, to our very great disadvantage, of operating through the banking houses of London and the banking houses of other countries of Europe.

It is said there is no necessity for this measure. There does not have to be a necessity for it. You might very well have said in the Supreme Court case in regard to the Kansas railroad that there was not any necessity for that railroad to go through the Indian Territory. Certainly there was not, but it was a convenience to have it go there; it facilitated commercial transactions to have it go there; and the Supreme Court held that that was a regulation of commerce, not because it was providing something that there was a necessity for, but because it was providing something that facilitated commercial transactions.

There is not any necessity for us to establish banks in South America, the West Indies, and Mexico, or these particular branch banks throughout this country. There is no necessity in the sense that that kind of business can not be transacted if we do not do this thing. But, Mr. President, the validity of this provision is not measured by necessity. While there is no necessity, it is thought to be a great convenience to the people who will patronize these banks to have the banks established and to have these facilities created. That, as I understand the authorities, is sufficient to make valid and constitutional the provision which we are asking the Congress to enact.

Now, to what extent is it desirable? It has been said here that you can get all the exchange you want from the private banks and get it as conveniently, and I think it has been stated with as little cost, as you can get it from the bank, after we shall have established it, which we are proposing to establish. Such is not in accordance with the information that was given to the Foreign Relations Committee. We were made to understand, and I believe it to be the fact, that when the merchants of the United States trade with the Central and South American states and with the West Indies we trade at the great disadvantage of having to pay double exchange rates as compared with the exchange that we would have to pay if we had this bank established and the principal bank and the branch banks were required to deal directly with each other in the matter of giving bills of exchange, as this bill does provide.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to ask him in what particular this proposed bank will have any facilities for exchange with foreign countries not now enjoyed by any national bank or State bank in the city of New York if it has the capital with which to do the business?

Mr. FORAKER. I am very anxiously looking for the appearance of my messenger. I sent him a few minutes ago to my residence to get a letter which came to me through the mail this morning, in which the Senator is answered far better than I can answer him. I looked in my pocket for the letter, intending to have it read; but finding that I had left it I sent for it. It will be here in a few moments, and then I will have it read. I shall be pleased to pass that by, if it will suit the Senator as well, until the letter comes.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a letter in which a merchant of New York gives an account, simply for purposes of illustration, of a transaction had by his house with some point in Brazil, showing the extreme disadvantages to which they are subjected in their trade with those countries.

Mr. BACON. Conceding it to be true that there was an instance, and that possibly there are daily instances, in which there was this inconvenience, I am sure, however, in the absence of the letter, which simply narrates this particular instance, the Senator can tell us how this particular proposed bank can have the opportunity for exchange which is denied to a bank in the city of New York at this time. In other words, what power is now lacking to a bank in the city of New York to establish agencies in any one of those countries the authority to establish which is proposed to be given by this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. To begin with, I deny the proposition of the Senator from Georgia that any bank incorporated in this country under a State charter has authority to go into foreign countries and there set up banking. To do that would be as clear a case of exceeding corporate authority, it seems to me, as could be suggested, unless the constitutions of other States are different from the constitution of Ohio.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Now, to answer the Senator from Georgia a little further, if you will allow me, the bill provides that these branches shall draw bills of exchange directly on the principal office and the principal office on the branches, respectively. There shall be but one transaction and but one charge. When a merchant ships goods he can step into the bank here and by depositing his bill of lading and drawing a bill of exchange against it get his money on the spot.

But now I am very happy to be able to inform the Senator from Georgia that the letter I spoke of a moment ago has just arrived, and I send it to the desk and ask that it may be read. I invoke the attention of Senators to it; for if you will allow me, before the Secretary commences the reading, you will find that this is an enterprise not for the benefit of the people who are the incorporators of this bank alone. Of course they will have some benefit or they would not engage in it. I do not know the measure of their benefit. But that is not the concern of the Senators who reported the bill from the committee. On the contrary, it is an enterprise for the benefit of all the people of the United States, and our only concern has been to remove such disadvantages as the letter speaks of. Now, if the Secretary will be kind enough to read it, I will suspend a moment for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, June 15, 1893.

DEAR SIR: According to press reports of proceedings in Senate on June 14 on international bank, Senator TELLER claims that any of the large banks in New York by virtue of agencies they have in all parts of South America can offer the same facilities to exporters in the United States of America as would the international bank or as do the large English banks in Europe. This is a great mistake, as you will see. We inclose letter of Bank of New York of February 9, 1893, offering to attend to collections of drafts in South America for us.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Secretary will suspend for a moment, in order that Senators may fully understand what is meant by the circular letter of the bank, I send it to the desk and ask that the Secretary read the letter referred to, which is a solicitation on the part of the bank of their patronage in the matter of foreign exchange.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE BANK OF NEW YORK, New York, February 9, 1893.

DEAR SIR: We beg to inform you that we attend to collection of drafts on South America, and respectfully solicit a share of your patronage.

Yours, very truly,

THE BANK OF NEW YORK, N. B. A.,
Per C. S. MACALPINE, Attorney.

Messrs. KURZMAN BROTHERS,
No. 33 Pearl Street, City.

Mr. FORAKER. Now let the Secretary resume the reading of the letter from Kurzman Brothers.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, as follows:

We availed ourselves of this offer and were compelled to draw in pounds sterling against our shipments of butter, which drafts were sent by the Bank of New York, through the British Bank of South America, to the Banco de Pernambuco, which alone charged three-fourths of 1 per cent collecting commission, and then remit a draft on London in pounds sterling, which draft, after long delay, was sent to us, and even the Bank of New York refused to buy the returned Bank of Pernambuco draft on the London and County Bank.

We inclose memoranda of George O. Gordon, agent of London and River Plate Bank, by which you will see that on a $1,800.49 draft on Bahia we had to draw in pounds sterling and pay heavy collecting commissions, and finally received remittance via London, netting us a loss in exchange and banking commission of $48.77, or over 1½ per cent, and not counting loss of interest due to the remittance going via London.

It is all very well for Senator TELLER and others in Washington to say that the New York banks offer facilities on the strength of such letters as the Bank of New York sent us, which caused us the loss of the use of our money at least thirty days longer than if the United States of America had direct banking facilities with South America. Furthermore, the heavy collection charges are too great, and the loss in being forced to draw in pounds sterling and then on receipt of remittance to again sell the pounds sterling so as to obtain United States dollars, is also a great drawback.

The above shows you at what a great disadvantage exporters in United States of America are as compared to European houses.

Now let us point out to you an even greater drawback.

In order to facilitate our export trade of butter in South America (in trying to supplant the French and Danish butter), we asked our South American friends to open for us bank credits, so that on delivering shipping documents to the New York agents or New York banks we could obtain our money on the spot, and not be forced to send drafts for collection, which compels us to be out of our funds for three to six months, as in the collections made by Bank of New York and London and River Plate Bank.

Not a single bank doing business in Brazil would grant a letter of credit on the terms that such credits are opened for European trade, even to houses that have the highest rating in Brazil.

First. The banks demand a 1 per cent commission on the amount of the credit, whether used or not.

Second. The banks demand security for 25 to 50 per cent of the credit the moment it is granted, whether it will be used or not.

Third. If the drafts against the letter of credit are drawn as shipping documents at ninety days' sight, the moment the goods arrive in Brazil the banks there demand payment for the drafts before they deliver the documents (goods), notwithstanding that the credit and draft entitles the receivers to ninety days' time.

Such documents the banks doing business in Brazil call credits, and we hope you, Mr. FORAKER, will not allow yourself to be deceived by statements that United States exporters have ample facilities for doing business in South America.

Such banks as the London and River Plate Bank and London and Brazilian Bank have in the past twenty-five years paid dividends of 10 to 15 per cent, besides accumulating a surplus of 75 per cent or more, and most of it at the expense of United States merchants.

We are not interested in the proposed international bank, and we write our experiences to you in the hopes that you will be able to enlighten Senators and Representatives in Washington.

What we (United States of America) need is an international bank, United States steamship lines, and reciprocity.

Is there any prospect of reciprocity with Latin America, from whom we buy three to four times as much as we (United States) sell to it?

Thanking you for the interest you display in trying to increase the foreign commerce of our country, which means increased prosperity to the United States, we are,

Yours, respectfully,

KURZMAN BROS.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER.

U. S. Senator (Ohio), Washington, D. C.

Mr. FORAKER. I had the letter read only that we might have the benefit of that part of it which portrayed the disadvantages our merchants now contend with in carrying on their transactions with these foreign countries and that I might give to the Senate the benefit of that merchant's opinion as to how it would be corrected by the institution of such a bank as is here proposed. As I understand him, his contention is that now it is not only difficult to have his bills of exchange cashed, being compelled to wait from thirty days to six months, as he states, but he is compelled under present arrangements to submit to double charges of rates of exchange, three-quarters of a per cent here and something else yonder, making in the aggregate a cent and a half, which is so burdensome as to make it practically impossible to carry on the business satisfactorily in competition with other countries where they have these facilities provided.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, the point I make I do not think is answered by that letter. It is that whatever may be the present difficulties, and nobody disputes their existence, there is no possible power that we can confer upon these banks which can not be equally exercised by a State bank so far as foreign exchange is concerned, and so far as furnishing all facilities for foreign exchanges is concerned. There are but two things necessary. One is the corporate power, and the other is the requisite amount of money. The requisite amount of money can be secured in the one case as well as in the other. I repeat what has been said before, and which nobody has ever successfully answered and which can not be successfully answered, that there is no corporate power, so far as foreign exchange goes, at least, which we can confer upon this bank which the State of New York can not confer upon a bank chartered by it.

Now, if the Senator will pardon me just a minute, and I do not desire to interrupt him further or to be heard further on this bill, I want to call attention to one little striking coincidence, or rather remarkable fact, it may be called. The Senate will remember that on yesterday I read a very remarkable charter embodied in a bill which had been introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. The Senator from Pennsylvania in the course of the discussion read a telegram from Theodore C. Search. Now, that was for the most unlimited charter that was ever heard of in any legislative body. I notice that Theodore C. Search is one of the incorporators in this bill.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. Search is the president of the National Association of Manufacturers. He is the head of the association, and it would be supposed that he would be one of the incorporators.

Mr. BACON. Yes; and I notice that he is one of the incorporators named in this bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no apologies to offer for the presence in the bill of the name of Mr. Search.

Mr. BACON. Not at all.

Mr. FORAKER. You will find Mr. Search's name written all over this country in connection with its business interests. He is a live, wide-awake, progressive man, at the head of the Manufacturers' Association, and a man who has been engaged for years in trying to build up and develop our trade with South American countries. He is just the kind of a man who would seek out and find out a way whereby to facilitate our trade with those countries, to the end that we might be on an equal footing with other countries. He is just the kind of a man who would find out what the advantages are of an international bank, and he is a man enjoying the confidence of his fellow-men to such an extent that he can associate them with him in business. There is no question about what his purpose is. It has been pronounced in many ways.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, I am not speaking in any disparagement of Mr. Search, but I am simply calling attention to the fact of the kindred character of these two bills, in which it is sought to confer upon incorporators powers gigantic, colossal, dangerous to the public interests and even to the public liberty.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to add only one other thing about Mr. Search, and that is that I do not know him personally. I never saw him in my life. I have no relations with him; but I know of him as everybody else knows of him who pays any attention to what is going on in the business world in this country as an active, progressive man.

As to the bill the Senator from Pennsylvania had in charge yesterday, or that was referred to yesterday as his measure rather, we will discuss that when we come to it. I was not aware when it was referred to that any such bill was pending here. But I do not see any objection to that bill in the sense that the Senator from Georgia objected to it. There may be a question as to the constitutionality of that proposed measure. I do not want to commit myself about that until I have time to examine it further. But so far as there being any danger to this country from having that done which the incorporators under that bill are proposing to do, I do not see it at all. I think it is all intended to advance and promote the interests of the country. And so it is about this bank. I do not find here in this bill any dangerous powers.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator to say that he does not see anything dangerous in that bill. Of course it is not now under discussion, but the Senator has taken occasion to say that he sees nothing in the bill to which allusion has been made that would be dangerous to the interests of this country. Now, the question I wanted to ask the Senator is this—

Mr. FORAKER. I should have stated, I intended to state, and if I did not I will now state, that as interpreted by the letter or telegram from Mr. Search which was read yesterday by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Ohio will understand, of course, that the charter is not to be construed by the letter of Mr. Search, but it is to be construed by the language used in the charter. That is a proposed charter which, without any limitation as to amount, gives to that company the right to buy and hold in unlimited amount all kinds of property, real and personal, which would include all property in the whole United States. The question I want to ask the Senator is if he considers that that sort of a charter is a proper one to grant?

Mr. FORAKER. As I have already indicated to the Senator from Georgia, I prefer to discuss that bill when it comes up for consideration. I have not read the bill. I did not know such a bill was here until yesterday. I did read or heard read the telegram, however, from Mr. Search, saying what it was that the company desired to do if they could get a charter, and I did not see anything that was dangerous to the liberties or the business interests of this country or the rights of individuals in anything that he proposed.

And so it is with respect to the powers of this bank. Senators are speaking about the great and the extraordinary powers conferred upon this bank. There are no great or extraordinary powers, as I understand the bill, conferred upon the bank. The powers are only those powers which are necessary to the conduct of the business which the bank is incorporated for the purpose of doing. The powers that are given to the bank are not given to the bank with a view to the profits of the men who may be associated with the bank, but with a view to making it possible for the bank to successfully accomplish the purposes it is intended to subserve, and we want those purposes subserved not for the benefit of any particular individual but for the benefit of all the people of the country who are interested in international commerce of the character that the bank is intended to deal with.

As I was about saying when the Senator from Georgia interrupted me, and that is all I have to say about this matter at this time, bills of exchange are instruments of commerce. The Supreme Court has so held, and Senators now, whatever may have been their differences of opinion, agree to that. The Supreme Court has also said that it is a regulation of commerce to legislate with respect to an instrument of commerce so as to facilitate the use of it.

What I claim is that the bill does provide that bills of exchange, instruments of commerce, shall be provided under such circumstances and in such a way to the people who have need of them in this trade as to facilitate their employment. The facility which is thus afforded over that which they now have in the use of bills of exchange is necessarily calculated to promote our international commerce with those countries; and that being the case, it is clearly a regulation of commerce under the decisions to which I have been referring.

I ask that there may be a vote on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to strike out paragraph 7, at the top of page 11.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. PETTUS. There is an amendment prior to that, but I think it would be well to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia as the Chair states it, because it includes the part proposed to be stricken out by my amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read. The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 7, on page 11, in the following words:

Seventh. To act as the financial agent of any nation, government, State, municipality, corporation, or person, and to perform any and all acts and duties not inconsistent with law that it may undertake and assume as such financial agent, including the sale, exchange, or other disposition of any bonds or other evidences of indebtedness issued by any such government, State, municipality, corporation, or person, and to act as trustee in any mortgage given to secure such bonds, and to countersign the same as trustee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to strike out the paragraph which has been read.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and that will enable the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY].

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TURNER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and withhold my vote.

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HANNA. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK. I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. As he is not in the Chamber, I withhold my vote. If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. My colleague [Mr. CHANDLER], who is absent from the city, is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY]. I suggested to the Senator from Louisiana that he should vote, which he did. I transfer my pair to my colleague and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BACON. The junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], with whom I am paired, is absent. Under the arrangement announced by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], by which he and I exchange our pairs, the junior Senator from Rhode Island will stand paired with my colleague [Mr. CLAY]. I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], who is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN. Under the announcement just made by the Senator from Iowa, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I make the announcement for to-day and will not make it again. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. McMILLAN. In order to make a quorum, I will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—14.
Bacon, Bate, Cockrell, Daniel,	Gray, Heitfeld, McEnery, Mallory.	Money, Pasco, Pettus, Roach,	Teller, Tillman.
NAYS—25.
Allison, Baker, Burrows, Caffery, Carter, Cullom, Deboe,	Elkins, Fairbanks, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Hansbrough,	Hawley, Hoar, Lodge, McBride, McMillan, Morgan, Perkins,	Platt, Conn. Quay, Sewell, Wilson.
NOT VOTING—50.
Aldrich, Allen, Berry, Butler, Cannon, Chandler, Chilton, Clark, Clay, Davis, Faulkner, Gorman, Hale,	Hanna, Harris, Jones, Ark. Jones, Nev. Kenney, Kyle, Lindsay, McLaurin, Mantle, Martin, Mason, Mills, Mitchell,	Morrill, Murphy, Nelson, Penrose, Pettigrew, Platt, N. Y. Pritchard, Proctor, Rawlins, Shoup, Smith, Spooner, Stewart,	Sullivan, Thurston, Turley, Turner, Turpie, Vest, Warren, Wellington, Wetmore, White, Wolcott.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum of the Senate has not voted. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison, Bacon, Baker, Bate, Caffery, Carter, Clark, Cockrell, Cullom, Davis, Deboe, Elkins,	Fairbanks, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Gray, Hanna, Hansbrough, Hawley, Heitfeld, Hoar, Lodge,	McBride, McEnery, McLaurin, McMillan, Mantle, Money, Morgan, Nelson, Pasco, Perkins, Pettigrew,	Pettus, Platt, Conn. Pritchard, Quay, Roach, Sewell, Shoup, Spooner, Teller, Turner, Wilson.
---	---	---	--

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], which I transfer to my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER]. That will enable the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] and me to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS].

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I make the same transfer that I did before, transferring my pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], so that the junior Senator from Rhode Island will stand paired with the junior Senator from Georgia, which will enable the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and me to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY. I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MANTLE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. McLAURIN (when Mr. TILLMAN's name was called). I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. TILLMAN] with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON. Under the announcement made by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK. My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is absent from the Chamber, and, I understand, is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that we transfer our pairs, which will allow both of us to vote.

Mr. TURNER. Very well; that is agreeable.

Mr. CLARK. I vote "nay."

Mr. TURNER. I vote "yea."

Mr. HANNA. By arrangement, I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SULLIVAN. My pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] having been transferred, I will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—17.
Bacon, Bate, Cockrell, Gray, Heitfeld,	McEnery, McLaurin, Mallory, Mitchell, Money,	Pasco, Pettigrew, Pettus, Roach, Sullivan,	Teller, Turner.
NAYS—28.
Allison, Baker, Burrows, Caffery, Carter, Clark, Cullom,	Deboe, Elkins, Fairbanks, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Hanna,	Hansbrough, Hawley, Hoar, Lodge, McBride, McMillan, Morgan,	Nelson, Perkins, Platt, Conn. Pritchard, Quay, Sewell, Wilson.
NOT VOTING—41.
Aldrich, Allen, Berry, Butler, Cannon, Chandler, Chilton, Clark, Clay, Davis, Faulkner,	Gear, Gorman, Hale, Harris, Hanna, Jones, Ark. Jones, Nev. Kenney, Kyle, Lindsay, Mantle, Martin,	Mason, Mills, Morrill, Murphy, Penrose, Platt, N. Y. Proctor, Rawlins, Shoup, Smith, Spooner,	Stewart, Thurston, Tillman, Turley, Turpie, Vest, Warren, Wellington, Wetmore, White, Wolcott.

So Mr. DANIEL'S amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will wait until we can have a vote on this amendment, at any rate. Another amendment has been offered, and I think it is the last one.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator thinks he can secure a vote, I have no objection to withdrawing the motion.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate any great length of time. I merely wish to say a few words on the bill.

It seems to me that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] confounds the making of an instrument of commerce with commerce itself. Because this bank can make a bill of exchange, he assumes that it is engaged in commerce. I read to him the case that he had before him where the court said distinctly that the making of a bill of exchange was not commerce. I will read as little as I can in order to give it sense:

Now, the individual who uses his money in buying and selling bills of exchange, and who thereby realizes a profit, may be taxed by a State in proportion to his income, as other persons are taxed, or in the form of a license. He is not engaged in commerce, but in supplying an instrument of commerce. He is less connected with it than the shipbuilder, without whose labor foreign commerce could not be carried on.

If because this bank is authorized to issue a bill of exchange we are authorized to give it a charter, we can as well charter corporations to build ships, to build railroads, and to engage in a thousand things that nobody would expect or undertake to have the United States Government interfere with. I have another case decided in 1863.

Mr. GRAY. What was the case the Senator has read from?

Mr. TELLER. It is the case of Nathan vs. Louisiana, found in 8 Howard, page 81.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator at some convenient time a question on that point.

Mr. TELLER. Now is as well as any time.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator if he has adverted to this distinction: It is true that the man who merely engages in the buying and selling of bills of exchange in Boston or New York is not dealing in foreign commerce, although those bills of exchange may be instruments of foreign commerce, any more than a man who in Boston or New York buys and sells or builds ships is engaged in foreign commerce, although the ship is an instrument of commerce. But a man who engages in buying and selling ships from foreign countries, made there, is engaged in foreign commerce, because a citizen domiciled in one country is dealing with one in another. This bank is to deal with bills of exchange, with persons abroad as well as persons at home. It is not the mere fact that the bills of exchange are instruments of commerce, but it is that the bank is dealing with persons abroad in those instruments of commerce which makes it foreign commerce. That does not come within the decision of the court.

Mr. TELLER. I think it does. I call attention to another case, where the court passed upon this very question, and in order to save time I will read briefly from the opinion of the court. I simply say that I am not one of those who are inclined to deny any power to the General Government that may be necessary. I believe that the Government of the United States possesses every power that is necessary to carry on a great national government. But I do not believe it is necessary that we should have the power to authorize the incorporation of a bank to issue bills of exchange.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? It is whether Congress has the power to direct that all ships engaged in foreign commerce shall be built in a certain manner, and whether or not the power to regulate commerce does not involve the power to create instrumentalities of commerce?

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt the Government could regulate the character of shipping, but this bill does not attempt to regulate the character of bills of exchange. A bill of exchange has had a character for the last two thousand years, and it has not been changed and it has still got it. If we were to create some new kind of bill of exchange, perhaps there might be some propriety in it. Here is a case which I think is pertinent, and I will read what was the point before the court:

An act of the legislature of Virginia, passed on the 3d of February, 1866, provided that no insurance company not incorporated under the laws of the State should carry on its business within the State without previously obtaining a license for that purpose, and that it should not receive such license until it had deposited with the treasurer of the State bonds of a specified character to an amount varying from thirty to fifty thousand dollars, according to the extent of the capital employed. The bonds to be deposited were to consist of 6 per cent bonds of the State, or other bonds of public corporations guaranteed by the State, or bonds of individuals, residents of the State, executed for money lent or debts contracted after the passage of the act, bearing not less than 6 per cent per annum interest.

This is very interesting, but I will not read it all. There were two questions in the case. I will deal with only one, however. First, they settled what the power of the State was as to incorporation. The court then finally got down to it, and said:

There is, therefore, nothing in the fact that the insurance companies of New York are corporations to impair the force of the argument of counsel. The defect of the argument lies in the character of their business. Issuing a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce.

It is not an instrument of commerce at all. It may excite commerce; it may stimulate commerce.

The policies are simple contracts of indemnity against loss by fire, entered into between the corporations and the assured for a consideration paid by the latter. These contracts are not articles of commerce in any proper meaning of the word. They are not subjects of trade and barter offered in the market as something having an existence and value independent of the parties to them. They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one State to another and then put up for sale. They are like other personal contracts between parties which are completed by their signature and the transfer of the consideration. Such contracts are not interstate transactions, though the parties may be domiciled in different States. The policies do not take effect, are not executed contracts, until delivered by the agent in Virginia. They are then local transactions, and are governed by the local law. They do not constitute a part of the commerce between the States any more than a contract for the purchase and sale of goods in Virginia by a citizen of New York whilst in Virginia would constitute a portion of such commerce.

In Nathan vs. Louisiana—

The case from which I have read—this court held that a law of that State imposing a tax on money and exchange brokers who dealt entirely in the purchase and sale of foreign bills of exchange was not in conflict with the constitutional power of Congress to regulate commerce. "The individual thus using his money and credit," said the court, "is not engaged in commerce, but is supplying an instrument of commerce. He is less connected with it than the shipbuilder, without whose labor foreign commerce could not be carried on." And the opinion shows that, although instruments of commerce, they are the subjects of State regulation, and, inferentially, that they may be subjects of direct State taxation. "In determining," said the court, "on the nature and effect of the contract, we look to the lex loci where it was made or where it was to be performed. And bills of exchange, foreign or domestic, constitute, it would seem, no exception to this rule."

That was in 1898.

Some of the States have adopted the law merchant, others have not. The time within which a demand must be made on a bill, a protest entered and notice given, and the damages to be recovered, vary with the usages and legal enactments of the different States. These laws, in various forms and in numerous cases, have been sanctioned by this court. And again: "For the purposes of revenue the Federal Government has taxed bills of exchange, foreign and domestic, and promissory notes, whether issued by individuals or banks. Now, the Federal Government can no more regulate the commerce of a State than a State can regulate the commerce of the Federal Government; and domestic bills or promissory notes are as necessary to the commerce of a State as foreign bills to the commerce of the Union. And if a tax on an exchange broker who deals in foreign bills be a regulation of foreign commerce, or commerce among the States, much more would a tax upon State paper by Congress be a tax on the commerce of a State."

If foreign bills of exchange may thus be the subject of State regulation, much more so may contracts of insurance against loss by fire.

We perceive nothing in the statute of Virginia which conflicts with the Constitution of the United States; and the judgment of the supreme court of appeals of that State must therefore be affirmed.

Mr. President, that is stated as clearly as it can be stated, and I will not waste the time of the Senate at this hour of the afternoon by making any remarks upon it. I only wish to say that the making of a corporation of this kind is not a mere idle thing; it is not a thing that ought to be passed over lightly. What the power of the General Government is with reference to corporations I think has been very fairly settled by the courts; and I think the Senate of the United States ought to keep itself within the lines of such adjudications. I am clear that there can be no authority found for the exercise of such power as is here proposed by anything that the courts have determined. The case which the Senator cited in 185 United States Reports of the condemnation of land in the Indian Territory is not a case in point at all.

I will not spend the time of the Senate in going over it. The Senate has given practically no attention to this case. We have discussed it here, part of the time with only ten or twelve Senators in attendance and at no time during the day, I believe, were there more than twenty Senators present until the roll was called. It seems difficult to get the Senate to take hold of a question of this kind, and yet we are starting with a system which, with the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], may become the general banking system of this country, under which may be built up a hundred, a thousand, or two or three thousand great banks. They are banks that must have $1,000,000 and, I believe, not less than $5,000,000 of capital, and in a country as rich as this, if there are special privileges given and some advantages to be obtained under such an act, there is no doubt but the number of banks will be increased and our financial system may be entirely upset, entirely put out of joint, by the passage of a bill here to which I say not one-third of the Senate has given any attention.

This bill ought to go to the Committee on Finance, and it ought to be very carefully considered. It comes from a committee which is not naturally charged with the question of the banking system of the United States. If this bill passes, whenever we come to revise the banking system of this country, it must be in keeping with the system here proposed.

I know this bank is not to issue money, is not to issue bills, but every bank which issues credit issues money in the proper sense of the term. That bank, when it shall have the power to put on its books a credit to its patrons of $20,000,000 or $50,000,000 or any other number of millions of dollars it may think is prudent, will affect the currency of this country to that extent, because when a bank has said to me or to anybody else, "We recognize your right to draw a draft or a check upon us for a hundred thousand dollars," it has practically extended the currency of the country to that extent. When the bank has got out the great issue which it may get out, and then calls upon every one of its customers to repay, and draws in the money it has out or the credit that it has out, it may contract the currency millions and millions of dollars. That such a bank should be created here with so little attention, so little consideration, satisfies me that our financial system is being trifled with, to say the least.

Mr. President, I should like to vote for anything and everything that would extend our commerce. I noticed particularly the letter which was read in which I was referred to, and I want to say to the Senator who has this bill in charge, as I said to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] the other day, the trouble does not lie in lack of bills of exchange; it lies in the fact that you have no communication with those countries. If you charter this bank, it will send every one of its bills of exchange by way of London or Paris or some other foreign city, and you will get no communication so that you can draw directly upon Rio de Janeiro or any other South American city. You may draw upon Rio de Janeiro, but you will send your draft through some London banker, because you have got to send it by a ship to England, and then you have got to send it from England by some other ship which goes from there to South America.

If I believed it was within the province of the Government of the United States to create this bank, if I believed that it would create any additional amount of commerce, that it would stimulate and encourage commerce, I should be very glad to vote for it, for I am one of those who realize that the time has come when the American people have to look for foreign markets. I appreciate that as much as anybody, and I would not knowingly throw any obstacle in the way of any agency which was a legitimate and proper agency for the extension of commerce. I did not like without some explanation to vote against the bill when it was being asserted here so positively that this bank is one of the agencies to extend our commerce, and to have it charged that I am not in favor of every movement which is made in the interest of the extension of our commerce and the increase of our exports. That is my excuse for having detained the Senate.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the time of the Senate more than a minute.

As I understand, the main object of this bill is to create a banking system, not for our own country, but for exchanges, particularly with South America, and the establishment of branches in South America, in order to facilitate the drawing of bills of exchange.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says we have no steamers. If we have no steamers, it is largely because we have no banking facilities.

Mr. TELLER. What is the Senator's statement?

Mr. SEWELL. We have no steamers largely because we have no banking facilities in South America. The object is to advance money to encourage steamships. We ought to have at least ten lines of steamers to South America. We have got to start one or the other. We have got either to start the steamers first or the bank; but if we are not able to start the steamers first, we will start the bank first.

If this power is granted to the gentlemen who are proposed to be incorporated by this bill, who control a large amount of capital, it will not interfere in any sense with the banking interests of the country, but will encourage our foreign trade, which we sadly need. As the Senator very properly said to-day, we have no banking facilities with South America except through exchanges with England, but these men, who are amongst the most active and progressive men of the country, propose to establish just such relations as will encourage American shipments direct and American exchanges direct. If you will look at the foreign shipments in New York, the money exchanges, you will find they are almost entirely in the hands of foreigners; that they are controlling the capital of this country at the present day, and that our people have not gone into it because we have not encouraged them. This is the first active, earnest attempt in a direction that will aid in the establishment of American commercial facilities in Brazil, in the Argentine, so that the bills for the payment of the coffee and the hides and the wool which are shipped from those countries may be drawn on New York or any other point in the United States where they have their office.

As a business man, I commend the bill to the favorable consideration of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I did not say that we lacked banking facilities. I do not understand that we do. I do not understand the reason why we do not sell more goods to South America is because of the lack of banking facilities. I think it is just the reverse of that. We have plenty of banking facilities, but we have not the transportation facilities. This proposed bank is not only an international bank, according to its charter, but it is a national bank, a bank to do business in this country. It can do an unlimited business in this country and do it under this charter, and not do anything in a foreign country unless it sees fit to do so.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I have listened to the discussion of this measure, although I have not heard the entire debate. I desire to indicate very briefly the views which will govern my vote on the bill.

I notice one thing in the votes which have been taken on this measure, when we have been perfecting it, which strikes me as a little remarkable, and that is that there is no division of sentiment whatever concerning this measure upon the other side of the Chamber. Every amendment has been carried with entire unanimity by the votes of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber; and it strikes me as remarkable that every time the question of the incorporation of a company or the question of the protection of capital is involved, the Republican members of the Senate should be found voting solidly and unanimously upon the side of the corporations, of capital, and absolutely ignoring very grave constitutional questions, upon which, at least, it would seem there ought to be some division of sentiment on that side, as there appears to be a division of sentiment on that subject on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. PETTUS. With the leave of the Senator from Washington, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I was hoping that we might be able to get a vote on the bill to-night. I did not know the Senator from Washington desired to speak.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator from Washington desires to debate the subject, and therefore I think the bill ought to be laid over.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope we may now be able to agree upon some time when we can take a vote, if that will suit the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PETTUS. There will be no delay about it.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish we could agree upon an hour. I ask unanimous consent, in order to get it before the Senate, that we vote upon the bill to-morrow at 3 o'clock, say.

Mr. PETTUS. No; I shall not agree to that. There has been no delay; indeed, there has been hurry.

Mr. FORAKER. I know there has not been any delay; I am not complaining; but it will be a great accommodation to me if a time can be fixed for the final vote.

Mr. PETTUS. I have no doubt the Senator can get a vote to-morrow on the bill, but I do not see that we ought to agree to it now.

Mr. FORAKER. It would be a great personal accommodation to me if I could get an agreement to vote upon the bill. Of course that should not be taken into consideration; but that was my excuse for making the request.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PETTUS. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 17, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 16, 1898.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock m. by the Clerk, ALEXANDER McDOWELL, who read the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1898.

I hereby designate Hon. JOHN DALELL, of Pennsylvania, to preside during the session of this day.

T. B. REED, Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore thereupon took the chair.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AMENDMENT OF WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10692, an amendment to the war revenue bill, unanimously reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill supplemental to acts relating to internal revenue.

Be it enacted, etc., That every person, firm, company, association, or corporation liable to any special or other internal-revenue tax, or having possession or control of any article or thing on which the tax imposed by law has not been paid, and every executor, administrator, trustee, or other fiduciary having in charge or trust any legacies or distributive shares, shall file with the collector of the district such inventories, schedules, or returns in duplicate and at such times as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may also require a return or statement under oath to be made by every person, firm, company, association, or corporation engaged in any business or occupation as to which a special tax is imposed, where exemption from such tax is claimed on the ground of any limitation as to the amount fixed by law or for any other reason.

SEC. 2. That the act approved June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: At the end of the paragraph relating to "insurance (casualty, fidelity, and guaranty)," insert the following: "Provided, That casualty, fidelity, and guaranty insurance companies carrying on said business solely for their own protection and not for profit, and having no capital stock, shall be exempt from the tax herein provided."

SEC. 3. That all internal-revenue taxes imposed by an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, shall, when not paid by stamp or in the manner required by law, be assessed and collected as other internal-revenue taxes are assessed and collected; and all existing provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of internal-revenue taxes, including assessable penalties for the failure to make the required return of the tax due, or for the making of any false or fraudulent return, so far as applicable, are hereby extended to taxes ascertained to be due under the provisions of said act.

SEC. 4. That any person or any agent or officer of any company or corporation who neglects to affix to any article, document, instrument, matter, or thing a stamp denoting the payment of the tax or duty imposed thereon, where such stamp is required by law to be affixed, or who shall reuse any such stamp after the same shall have been once so affixed, shall, on conviction thereof, and where no specific penalty is imposed, be punished by a fine not exceeding $50, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 5. That the gross annual receipts taxable under the provisions of any internal-revenue law shall be held to be the gross annual receipts for each special tax year beginning on the 1st day of July and ending on the 30th day of June following, and the first monthly return of such gross receipts required to be made shall be made and rendered for the month of July, 1898.

SEC. 6. That the tax imposed by law on original domestic money orders issued by the Government of the United States shall be payable by stamp to be affixed to such money order by the person to whom and at the time such money order is issued.

SEC. 7. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may make all needful rules and regulations for carrying into effect any provision of law relating to internal revenue.

Mr. BAILEY. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means, but the gentleman from Texas was not present.

Mr. BAILEY. I was not in attendance on the Ways and Means Committee at the time.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill is made necessary in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by what he thinks are omissions in the Senate amendments to the war revenue bill, bearing upon the stamp tax imposed upon sleeping and parlor car tickets in the first place, and secondly on the tax upon the gross receipts of refineries of sugar and of oil, there being inadequate provision for returns in such cases, and also by certain other provisions relative to the enforcement of the law. It is found that in the Senate amendment imposing a tax on refineries of sugar and oil there is no specific statement as to what constitutes the year for which the tax is to be assessed. In order to make that definite, one of the amendments proposes that in such cases it shall be for the fiscal year. Another amendment relates to postal money orders. It will be remembered that the amendment inserted by the Senate, and agreed to by the House, provided that the stamp should be added to the cost of the order. That this cost of the stamp is to be added to the price of the order is made definite.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I can see but one amendment about which there might be a question, and that is the one relating to insurance companies.

Mr. DINGLEY. I was about to call attention to that.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before the gentleman proceeds to that point, will he allow me a question on another matter?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand the statement of the gentleman, the war revenue bill recently passed imposes a tax on domestic money orders, the tax being added to the amount of the order.

Mr. DINGLEY. That provision was added to the bill by a Senate amendment; that has already been agreed to. The amendment now proposed relating to that subject simply makes it clearer.

Mr. DOCKERY. Allow me to ask whether that bill imposes any tax on express money orders?

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, certainly; and that was why the tax was put on postal money orders, because we had imposed this tax on express orders and telegraphic orders.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to what is the only substantial modification proposed in the war revenue act, the others being merely administrative provisions. In framing the war revenue bill, the rule was adopted as to the stamp tax imposed upon policies of insurance that purely mutual or cooperative companies, without capital stock, and doing business for the benefit simply of the policy holders, should not be required to pay the stamp tax. We provided a specific exemption in the case of mutual life-insurance companies and fire-insurance companies. But when we came to casualty and guaranty companies, we were not aware that there were any mutual casualty companies in the country. When the bill went to the Senate, it was ascertained that there were such companies; but by an inadvertence (although that body intended to adopt an amendment on that subject) the amendment was not adopted. The amendment to which I am now referring provides simply for putting mutual casualty, fidelity, and guaranty companies on the same basis as mutual fire-insurance companies and mutual life-insurance companies. Of course the principle should apply to all mutual companies if it is to apply to any.

Mr. BAILEY. I agree with the gentleman on that point; but although I can understand that there might be a mutual casualty company, it is difficult for me to conceive how there could be a mutual guaranty or fidelity company. I am very free to say I did not know there were any such companies.

Mr. DINGLEY. I was not aware at first that there were any mutual casualty companies; but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] is president of such a company; and he has informed me as to the methods of their organization, which brings it within the rule to which we agreed exempting mutual and cooperative companies. This principle, as I think gentlemen will recognize, ought to be applied to casualty, fidelity, and guaranty companies where they are organized as purely mutual companies having no capital stock and not being carried on for profit.

This is the only new legislation outside of administrative features that there is in the bill. As I have already said, the bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The first question is on the adoption of the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, in lines 19 and 20, strike out "payable by stamp to be affixed to such money order" and insert "added to the fee required by law and payable."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SUPPORTS OF ENTRY AND DELIVERY, TEXAS.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3309) making Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, in the State of Texas, supports of entry and delivery.

Be it enacted, etc., That Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, in the State of Texas, shall be, and are hereby, made supports of entry and delivery in the customs district of Galveston, and a customs officer, or such other officers, shall be stationed at each of said supports, with authority to enter and clear vessels, receive duties, fees, and other moneys, and perform such other services and receive such compensation as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury the exigencies of commerce may require.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Ways and Means was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"That Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas, shall be, and is hereby, made a subport of entry and delivery in the customs district of Galveston, and a customs officer, or such other officers, shall be stationed at said subport, with authority to enter and clear vessels, receive duties, fees, and other moneys, and perform such other services and receive such compensation as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury the exigencies of commerce may require."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just reported?

Mr. COWHERD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to know whether, if this bill be taken up, we shall be given an opportunity to discuss it and to offer amendments. If not, I shall object.

Mr. PAYNE. As the gentleman is no doubt aware, the whole controversy arising in connection with this bill is upon the amendment which has been reported by the committee. The controversy is whether there shall be two subports of entry and delivery established, or simply one, to be at Sabine Pass. The Senate bill having provided for two ports of entry, one at Sabine Pass and the other at Port Arthur, the Committee on Ways and Means has reported an amendment providing for the establishment of only one port, which is to be at Sabine Pass. So that the amendment which the gentleman from Missouri, as I understand, desires to have pending, will be before the House, if the bill be taken up. As I take it, the gentleman is in favor of establishing both subports, as provided in the Senate bill.

Mr. COWHERD. That is true. I am in favor of both subports, but I do not like to put myself in the position of objecting to the consideration of the bill. I should like, however, to have an opportunity to place my views on the question before the House.

Mr. PAYNE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, five or ten minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield to the gentleman if the House grants consideration to the bill.

Mr. COWHERD. Then, as I understand, the proposition will first come on the amendment to the Senate bill.

Mr. PAYNE. On the amendment to substitute Sabine Pass for both.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, I yield, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] ten minutes.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the attention of the House for a few minutes in the discussion of this measure, and for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I ask for order before I begin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will please be in order. Mr. COWHERD. This bill, as originally introduced, made both Sabine Pass and Port Arthur subports of entry. Neither are cities of great importance, commercially or otherwise, at this time. Sabine Pass is a small port on the Gulf that has never done any import business of any importance whatever, and almost its entire export business consists of lumber. Within the last two or three years a railroad has been built extending from Kansas City to the Gulf in a direct line, terminating at Port Arthur. Over $25,000,000 has been expended in constructing the road and in preparing for terminals at Port Arthur. There is no deep water at this time at that point. Some contention arose between the proprietors of the land at Sabine Pass and the builders of this road as to where they should put the terminus. Gentlemen will say that the desire to fix it at Port Arthur is a land scheme. Possibly that may be true; but I wish to say to this House that the desire to force this road to put its terminals at Sabine Pass is another land scheme, and what I wish members to remember is this: That it is no part of the business of the Government of the United States to promote one land scheme over another land scheme.

I say here that the men who desire to build a city at Sabine Pass have put these amendments onto this Senate bill; and if there is a desire to build a city at Port Arthur, and my constituents are willing to spend $3,000,000 to bring deep water to that port, what business is it of the Government of the United States to say that it will not give them an opportunity because some man wants to build a city at some other place? When did the Government of the United States rightly become a party to these transactions?

Now, the railroad company whose terminus is at Port Arthur are to-day dredging a canal from deep water at Sabine Pass to Port Arthur. They have raised, and now have prepared to expend and are expending, $3,000,000 to carry that scheme into effect. The most eminent engineers in the United States, in passing upon the project, have said that it is entirely practicable and feasible. A portion of the way to-day there is 15 to 18 feet depth of water, and within a year, if given the opportunity, there will be at Port Arthur deep water floating the great vessels that come into the Gulf. Not only that, but they have chartered and put on steamships carrying the grain of the great valleys of the West out from that port across the Atlantic Ocean to Liverpool and other European points. More foreign commerce has gone out upon lighters and been floated down from Port Arthur to deep water within the last year than ever went out of Sabine Pass during its entire existence.

Now, what are we asking? We simply ask that this Senate provision giving a subport of entry to both of these places stay in the bill. We simply ask that these two towns be put upon an equal footing. We ask no favors. We simply ask that when you put a deputy at one place, you put a deputy at the other and let the fittest survive. I say that if you will do that, the future will show that within one year, for every dollar of revenue received by the Government of the United States upon imports at Sabine Pass, there will be $100 received at Port Arthur. Sabine Pass never has been and never will be a port of entry for imports or for exports, except lumber and possibly cotton, unless they come by way of Port Arthur. Is it fair or is it right to demand of the merchants at Port Arthur when that port is built that they shall travel 12 or 15 miles down to Sabine Pass every time they wish to receive or send out their merchandise?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe I have a few minutes left, and I want to reserve the balance of my time until I hear what gentlemen have to say upon the other side.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course after I conclude I shall move the previous question. If the gentleman wishes to use his time, he had better do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri has four minutes remaining.

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman advances any argument on the other side, he should give me an opportunity to reply.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman knows very well what the controversy is. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] desire some time?

Mr. BAILEY. I think I will only take four or five minutes. Mr. Speaker, the whole contest is between two rival land schemes, and there is no public convenience that can possibly require more than one subport of entry. The demand upon Congress is that in order to adjust the rivalries between the two schemes two offices shall be created where but one is needed. I care nothing about Sabine Pass—

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. Would even one subport of entry be needed if it were not for the commerce created by the Port Arthur road?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I think so. I think the commerce of that great region would require a port of entry.

Mr. COWHERD. It always went by way of New Orleans until this road was built.

Mr. BAILEY. Because we have not had deep water heretofore anywhere on the Gulf. We do have it now, and that creates a necessity for a port of entry. I am very free to say that I would as soon have voted to locate it at Port Arthur as at Sabine Pass, but I would only vote to establish one subport of entry. The gentleman who represents that district is one with whom my relations are as close as with any man in this House; but when he asked me to vote for both, I told him frankly I would not. But I said, "It is your district, and you are entitled to decide it, and I will vote to locate it wherever you say." He said if he could not get them both, he wanted it at Sabine Pass. He is the Representative of those people. If he makes a mistake, they can punish him. We are beyond their control, and inasmuch as it is a local matter, it ought to be dealt with by the Representative of the district, who can be punished if he decides it wrong. I believe every gentleman on this floor would feel that he has not been justly treated if we were to go into his district and say, "You shall not be permitted to select the place; we will select it for you."

Now, if the Congress, in order to reconcile the rivalry of two town-site companies, wish to create two offices where but one is required, gentlemen can vote for the Senate bill and against the House amendment; but if you desire simply to serve the public convenience, then you will vote but for one subport of entry; and if you desire to apply the principle of local self-government and allow the Representative from the district to select the port of entry in his district, then you will vote for the House amendment, and that is the whole of this controversy.

Mr. PAYNE. My colleague on the committee [Mr. HOPKINS] says he desires five minutes, and I yield to him.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill came from our committee, but the members of the committee are not united as to whether the proposed amendment of the House should be adopted or not. Speaking for myself, I believe the necessities of the public would be best served by adopting the Senate bill, which provides for a subport of entry at Sabine Pass and one at Port Arthur. The bill as originally proposed was prepared and introduced in the Senate by Senator MILLS, who is entirely familiar with the situation there, and after the matter had been considered in the Senate, it was thought that it would be better to allow subports of entry at both places, instead of at Sabine Pass, as is proposed by the amendment suggested by the House committee.

Mr. HULL. Is it not also true that the leading boards of trade of Iowa and that Northwest country have petitioned and urged especially that Port Arthur be made a port of entry—

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. HULL. They having direct railroad connection with that port?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is correct, and I will refer to that a little later.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if but one port of entry were to be allowed, in my judgment the commerce of that place demands that it should be at Port Arthur. Sabine Pass is an old place and is reached by a spur of the railroad from the Southern Pacific. It has only a little traffic in the way of lumber. Port Arthur is established to meet the commerce that comes from the railroad that reaches the great Mississippi Valley, the commerce from Illinois, from Iowa, from Minnesota, from Nebraska, from Kansas, from Missouri, and all of that great section of country. It answers the convenience of hundreds of thousands of people and millions of dollars of commerce, while Sabine Pass, before the establishment of this railroad, only inconvenienced a few people living upon that branch railroad.

Now, the people who desire to have a subport of entry at Port Arthur have expended, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has well said, about $3,000,000 for the purpose of facilitating the commerce of the great Mississippi Valley, and there are great seagoing vessels that now load from products that come to Port Arthur and go to various ports of Europe. I think, Mr. Speaker, that inasmuch as there has been a contention over this, and inasmuch as there is a division of sentiment regarding Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, we had better vote down the amendment proposed by the Ways and Means Committee and adopt the bill as it is sent to the House by the Senate. The expense to the Government in that way is but light. But if we are to have only one port of entry, then in my judgment the convenience of the country demands that Port Arthur should be the subport of entry.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman is on the committee, and I should like to ask him if there should be two subports—one established at this place—is it not a fact that one officer could transact the business, so that there would practically be no additional expense to the Government?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, I think so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Do you not know that there would be two sets of officials under this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I do not know any such thing, and you do not know any such thing.

Mr. PAYNE. Under this bill do you not know there would be two sets of officials?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I do not know that.

Mr. HULL. The pay is very small.

Mr. HOPKINS. Even if there should be two sets of officials, the gentleman from New York talks as though that would carry with it an immense appropriation. What does it mean, Mr. Speaker? It simply means that there would be one officer at Port Arthur and another at Sabine Pass, and that would not make any special difference in the general expense to the Government of the United States. That should be fixed in the way of reducing the salary that will be given to the respective parties, so that the general results to the Government would be practically the same. Now, I understand the gentleman from New York favors Sabine Pass, and as I at the time of the investigation made before the committee heard them as well as he did, I know that the interests of the States that I have mentioned will be best subserved by having a subport of entry made at Port Arthur; but in the interests of compromise, to allow all interests to be represented, I would have the Senate bill, allowing a subport of entry at each place.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this proposition is a very plain one. Now, there is not a sufficient depth of water at Port Arthur, and everything that is shipped at Port Arthur has to go through Sabine Pass. The Government has spent $3,000,000 to create a port at Sabine Pass. From Sabine Pass up the same lake about 10 miles is situated Port Arthur. It has only water about 5 feet deep. No ships go there at all to-day. It is the terminus of a road. There are no citizens there, and no village; but this railroad says they are going to build a private canal, and in the course of time they expect to make that canal deep enough for commerce to come up to Port Arthur. All the commerce that comes to Port Arthur, back and forth, has got to pass through Sabine Pass. Now, I say it is not the policy of the Government in making a port of entry to do it in this way, and the only way to do it at this place is through a private canal.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What is the depth of water at Port Arthur?

Mr. SWANSON. About 5 feet.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What is the depth of water at Sabine Pass?

Mr. SWANSON. It is about 27 feet, and that depth has been secured by an appropriation of $3,000,000 by this Government. Then, again, Mr. Speaker, the moment you establish Port Arthur as a port of entry, these gentlemen are going to come here and ask this Government to appropriate $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 to build a canal to it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Allow me right there. Now, the gentleman, who was present in the committee when this matter was represented there, knows that the gentlemen representing Port Arthur disclaimed any such thing, and there is not any foundation for that statement.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, they say they will not do it, but I am informed that a bill has been introduced in the Senate asking the Government to make an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. HOPKINS. You are misinformed.

Mr. SWANSON. I may be misinformed. But, anyway, Mr. Speaker, you will see an effort made in the annual appropriations to expend money for this as a Government canal, and simply to keep up two ports of entry within 10 miles of each other. For what purpose? Not for any purpose of the Government, but simply to help a land-jobbing scheme at Port Arthur. [Applause.] That is all there is in it.

Now, I want to go further in this matter. The Secretary of the Treasury, who has charge of this matter, and the collector at the port of Galveston say there is no necessity for but one port. All of the business coming from Port Arthur must go through Sabine Pass; and it is easier for them at Port Arthur to build a railroad 10 miles long than it is for the Government to build a canal, at the expense of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, and to keep it there. Then, if it is not a Government canal, it is a private canal; and we are expected to make a port or public subport of entry at the end or terminus of a private canal, owned and dominated absolutely by this railroad.

I am unwilling to do it. It is time enough to ask for Port Arthur to be made a subport of entry after these gentlemen shall have completed the canal, and after they have dedicated it to the Government, and then there would have to be subsequent expenditures of from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. For these reasons I, as a member of this committee, am opposed to creating two ports of entry within 10 miles of each other when one only is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the collector at Galveston, and is simply to help two land schemes. The Government has helped Sabine Pass, by an appropriation of $3,000,000, to make it a harbor of refuge on the Gulf; and we can not afford to go and make a greater expenditure simply for the benefit of a railroad company that wants to create a boom town and sell their lots out to people. For that reason I have antagonized this proposition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why can not the railroad go from Port Arthur to Sabine Pass?

Mr. SWANSON. They can go easily. It is only about 10 miles. The ground is smooth, and they were offered, free of all expense, enough land for all shops and all purposes of a railroad that would be necessary.

Mr. HOPKINS. Allow me right there. Within the last few years Sabine Pass has been under 6 feet of water.

Mr. SWANSON and Mr. PITNEY. And so has Port Arthur.

Mr. SWANSON. The evidence before the committee shows that Sabine Pass is quite as well off as Port Arthur in that respect.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no.

Mr. SWANSON. The Government has spent $3,000,000 to make it a port, and this railroad can go to Sabine Pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can this railroad go to Sabine Pass?

Mr. SWANSON. The very facts of the case show us that the railroad can go to Sabine Pass. The gentleman asks why the railroad does not go to Sabine Pass. It is easy, smooth, very little expense, and they have been offered every facility for shop and terminal facilities, but they want to lay out a city at Port Arthur, and they want to advertise to the country that the Government, or they, will build the canal there, and they want to put town lots up for sale. I am not willing that the Government should enter into any such scheme for sale of town lots at Port Arthur when every facility can be given them at Sabine Pass.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. What does the Secretary of the Treasury report about it?

Mr. SWANSON. He says there is no necessity for anything except at Sabine Pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, we have expended $3,000,000 Federal money in getting a deep-water channel as far as Sabine Pass, and our theory in Congress then was that the ships—seagoing vessels—should land at Sabine Pass, but there is nothing there locally, nothing but lumber cut around the shores of the lake, that furnishes any foreign commerce. Then within the last four years the railroad has been built, reaching nearly up to Des Moines, Iowa, and they found that it was impracticable to make a terminus at Sabine Pass for the reason that periodically the whole region is flooded and hundreds of people are washed away.

It is impracticable to make that a terminus there for the railroad. These men, through the hard times when hardly anybody dared to put their money into anything, built this railroad. They spent $28,000,000, and built the road and they have it in operation. What do they ship out of that part of the country? Lumber sawed around Sabine Pass? Oh, no. They carry wheat flour from Minneapolis ground from the wheat of North Dakota and agricultural implements and merchandise from the great cities of Chicago, Omaha, and Kansas City.

Now, gentlemen, you and I are representatives of the whole United States. It is our duty to act for the glory and prosperity of the whole country and not for any local interest. I can appreciate the terrible strain that is put upon the gentlemen from New York; I can pardon them; I would perhaps act just as they do if I were from New York. We found the same opposition when we were building the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, whereby our wheat could pass from Duluth by water to the Atlantic Ocean. New York is losing its grip. New York is passing away as the only port of entry. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, then, when these lakes are frozen up in winter, we are still compelled to pass through New York, and this great railroad, having its terminus at Port Arthur and not at Sabine Pass, is to open to us another way to deep water, to the Gulf and the Atlantic Ocean, so that we can pass unfettered to the great ocean highways in winter. Their warehouses are loaded up now with thousands and thousands of tons of agricultural products of Kansas and Nebraska and the Dakotas and Iowa and Illinois, seeking a chance to load on lighters to vessels already engaged regularly in making their trips to Hamburg and Liverpool. We do not ask you to deepen the channel; the channel is deep enough. All we ask is that you will allow us about $1,200 a year to pay the salary of a deputy collector and give us a decent, reasonable recognition of having Port Arthur on the maps and books as a port of entry, so that these men, when they charter ships and send their goods, can charter them in Hamburg and in Liverpool, or wherever they start from on the other side of the ocean, to deliver them at Port Arthur, and not 12 or 15 miles away at a little lumber camp called Sabine Pass.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words, and—

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I had four minutes reserved, and I would like to know if I can not have them now?

Mr. PAYNE. I decline to yield.

Mr. COWHERD. I can use those four minutes now.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman will have to get the floor before he can use them. I intend to ask for the previous question.

Mr. COWHERD. I am willing to use my time now, and the gentleman can ask for the previous question afterwards.

Mr. PAYNE. I gave the gentleman warning when I had the floor. Now, if I can have the attention of the House and the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] I would like to say what there is about this case.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from New York can speak ten or twenty or thirty minutes, as he pleases, but I submit it is not fair to cut off the opposition and give them no opportunity to be heard.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will yield four minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] that he has once forfeited.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, the only purpose I have in rising a second time is to call attention to the misstatements made, I believe not intentionally, but by reason of misinformation, by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. He has said that this company would come to Congress and ask for an appropriation to build a canal. As a matter of fact, the money is already raised to build a canal, and they do not want a cent or a dollar from the Government of the United States. They have been at work on it and would have had it nearly completed if they had not been stopped by a proceeding in court which is since out of the way.

Mr. BRODERICK. And they will have it done in two months.

Mr. SWANSON. Was not a bill introduced in the Senate—

Mr. COWHERD. I am going to answer that. A resolution was introduced by Senator MILLS providing that the Government should investigate the question of extending this canal to the mouth of the Sabine River. That bill was not only not advocated by the parties interested in building this canal, but they came here, and I went with the vice-president of the Port Arthur road to protest against the introduction of the resolution in the Senate, and at our request it was changed so that it might not affect this company. Not only that, but the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the House will state that at my request, and at the request of the Port Arthur people, that resolution has been held up and practically killed in the River and Harbor Committee, because Port Arthur people do not want any assistance and do not want any interference on the part of the Government of the United States. One other mistake the gentleman has made that I want to correct; he says this is a scheme to sell town lots in Port Arthur.

Gentlemen, I want to say to you that the cutting out of Port Arthur as a support is a scheme to sell town lots in Sabine Pass. The gentleman knows that the owners of that property, Kuntz Brothers, of New York, have been with his committee in season and out of season. Why? We do not object to the establishment of a subport at Sabine Pass; we do not ask any favor over that place. We simply ask a fair show and an equal chance. But the people who want to sell town lots at Sabine Pass desire to kill Port Arthur in order that they may sell those lots. And that is the purpose of this amendment.

One other matter. The gentleman has said that there is no town at Port Arthur and no village there. I understand that there are more people at Port Arthur than there are at Sabine Pass; in fact, double as many. I know that this great railroad that has been spoken of carried last year more of the grain of the West out of the ports to which it ran than any other road that runs through the Mississippi Valley. I know that they transferred the market for wheat and corn bought for foreign shipments from St. Louis to Kansas City and did it because they are 700 miles nearer deep water and therefore can afford to haul it cheaper, and every cent saved in freight is saved to the farmer who produces the grain. The gentleman from Colorado has asked, Why can not this road build a spur down to Sabine Pass? Possibly they could do so. But I ask you, gentlemen, is it fair that the men who raised more than $25,000,000 to build that road and to establish that port should be compelled to go to Sabine Pass on another man's land in order to build up that place as a great port and to sell town lots for the people interested there? I ask whether the people of both places should not be allowed a chance to see which city shall be the city, and let town lots be sold at either place on its own merits?

This will cost the Government of the United States practically nothing. In my opinion, one deputy could do the work at both ports. If there should be any cost, it will be very small. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill as introduced in the Senate provided for making a subport of entry and delivery at Sabine Pass; and in that form it was reported there from the Committee on Commerce. When it came up for consideration in the Senate some gentleman offered an amendment, which was adopted without discussion, inserting Port Arthur—making ports at both places. The bill came to the House and was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. That committee had a full hearing, and decided by almost, if not quite, a unanimous vote that it was necessary to have but one port of entry and delivery, and that this should be at Sabine Pass. A few days subsequently, and after our report had been made, some gentlemen came here representing Port Arthur and very urgently demanding of the committee a further hearing on the subject. The committee gave them a hearing—gave them all the hearing they demanded. The whole matter was discussed, all the facts came out before the committee, and the committee again voted that one port was sufficient and that this port should be at Sabine Pass.

Why? The Government has created a harbor at Sabine Pass—an ample harbor capable of floating all the commerce of the Gulf of Mexico. This has been created at an expense of $3,000,000. The Government has procured over 24 feet of water there. It has given to that port all the conditions of the best harbor known up to this date in the Gulf of Mexico. All the commerce that comes from either railroad—either the railroad having its terminus at Sabine Pass or the road which, for a reason which I will speak of hereafter, stops short at Port Arthur—every pound of freight that comes from either railroad has to be put on shipboard at Sabine Pass. This is done by little boats, known as lighters, which do not draw more than 4 feet of water. These carry the stuff down for 10 miles and transfer it to the vessels in the harbor at Sabine Pass.

It is true, as my friend from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] says, that some gentlemen have come down there and by an expenditure of $28,000,000—not North Dakota capital, but capital from New York—have built a road from Missouri down to Port Arthur.

When they got down pretty near to Port Arthur, the enterprising gentlemen who were running the road—the promoters of it—were looking around for a chance to make a dollar or two outside, for those promoters themselves. They thought they might make a little money outside of the railroad enterprise; that they might have a ring within a ring, a circle within a circle, whereby they might put a few dollars additional into their pockets. So they looked around for a town site; and they found there was abundant land at Port Arthur, because there was not anything there except land, and they could not only get a terminus there for their railroad, but could get land enough for all the towns that could be built in the future in the State of Texas. So they decided to have a town site at Port Arthur.

They realized that in order to make a port at Port Arthur they must have something besides the shallow water that existed between Port Arthur and Sabine Pass. They investigated to see whether there was any way by which they might dredge Sabine Lake and make a channel from Port Arthur down to Sabine Pass. They found that this wide expanse of water at Sabine Lake had been the settling ground of Sabine River and some other river during the centuries past; that it was full of silt; that there was no bottom to it; that the more they dredged the worse they would be off and the less likely to get a channel. So they sought for other means by which they might get a channel for ships from Sabine Pass to Port Arthur.

Finally some clever engineer was taken into the scheme, and he decided that they might build a canal around the shore of Sabine Lake, and so connect the two points and have a ship canal. They went to work and they got the railroad company to put up part of the money, and these gentlemen put up something, and then they sold bonds, and they took possession of the howling wilderness there at Port Arthur to establish a railroad boom town. Well, they went to work at their canal and they pretend to have done some work there. There is a good deal of mysticism about the work that they have done. Some say they have expended a few thousand dollars, and some gentlemen connected with this scheme actually say they have built a canal. Suffice it to say, they have not built a rod of canal by which they can send a vessel drawing 20 feet of water 1 inch from the harbor at Sabine Pass.

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman will pardon me, is it not a fact that they have built that canal some 2 or 3 miles, that it is 15 feet deep, and that they were stopped while in the course of construction by a legal proceeding in regard to the condemnation of some land?

Mr. PAYNE. Now, if the gentleman will wait, I think we shall get along with this. They pretended before the committee that they had constructed a part of this canal, and with 12 or 15 feet of water a part of the distance, but various reputable gentlemen have denied even that. I do not know how much they have built there. They were stopped, and by whom? They were stopped by a report of the Board of United States Engineers and by the local engineer. Why? Because he said if they opened up this canal, as they were proposing to open it up, to the river above, the silt going down the river and going down the canal, instead of being deposited in the broad expanse of Sabine Lake, would fill up the channel at Sabine Pass and destroy the harbor that the Government had been building there at an expense of $3,000,000.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I wish the gentleman would wait until I get through and then ask his question.

Mr. COWHERD. It comes right here.

Mr. PAYNE. I can not be interrupted at every sentence by the gentleman, who is so much interested—

Mr. COWHERD. I wish to state that the engineer has changed that opinion, and that is on record.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). By the gentleman, who is so much interested in the welfare of constituents who are trying to sell town lots at Port Arthur.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman does not say I am interested in selling town lots at Sabine Pass, or Port Arthur either?

Mr. PAYNE. No, but interested in gentlemen who are—the gentleman's constituents.

Mr. COWHERD. I am interested in the men who put the millions into this road to build it—in the interest of my town.

Mr. PAYNE. They were interrupted, as I said, Mr. Speaker, by the report of the engineers, and then these gentlemen—and that is what I suppose the gentleman wished to call my attention to—went to the War Department and got a stay of proceedings on that order; but the engineers did not take back their judgment, notwithstanding the stay of proceedings on the part of the War Department. The engineers say, and still believe, and demonstrate to these gentlemen, that if they have their way about opening up this canal they will open up a channel for the silt and deposits to go down, and destroy the Government harbor at Sabine Pass. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, what excuse was there for two harbors; what excuse was there for two ports of entry and delivery? What excuse for the Government of the United States to spend double money to have two ports of entry and delivery? Why, every pound of freight comes down through Sabine Harbor, must be loaded in Sabine Harbor, whether it comes by a railroad that directly terminates at Sabine Harbor or one that terminates for the present 8 or 10 miles above where the boom is on for the town lots.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we say to these gentlemen, "We will give Sabine Harbor a port of entry and delivery, and it is entitled to it." The amount of exports and imports entitles Sabine Pass to it. We said to these gentlemen, "If in the future your sanguine expectations are fulfilled, if before snow flies you are enabled to make a harbor with deep water at Port Arthur, then we will gladly give you a port of entry and delivery. But we can not go on now and help your town-lot scheme by any such appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States." For one I thought that it was enough for these poor railroad stockholders to have to pay the expense of this thing for the individual benefit of the promoters of this scheme, without calling the Government of the United States into the matter as a partner. My friend from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] seems to think that this is a question between North Dakota, or the wheat-growing region, and the State of New York. He went so far in his zeal as to exclaim that the State of New York had opposed the Sault Ste. Marie Canal.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Oh, not at all. I did not say the State of New York opposed it.

Mr. PAYNE. That New York representatives opposed it.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Oh, no; that there was opposition to it.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman's statement is in the RECORD, and I am giving my impression in regard to it, which is that he said that New York did not want it. Why, if there was ever a Representative from the State of New York who did not advocate that great improvement of the channels of the lakes, he misrepresented every one of the constituency which he had in the State of New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I do not want to misrepresent anybody, and I do not want you to misrepresent me. I was merely saying that we met resistance then, without defining where it came from. It may have come from other sources, but we met with resistance then, as we are meeting it now, and we are trying to find out where it is.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman said he met resistance from the State of New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. We are meeting it now from the State of New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Perhaps the gentleman did not mean that, but that is what he said.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. We are meeting it now from the State of New York.

Mr. PAYNE. You are meeting it from a great many places. You met it from a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, and they are not all from the State of New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. We did not meet it from anybody west of the Alleghany Mountains; not one.

Mr. PAYNE. Why should the gentleman try to make a sectional issue out of this? When we give you a port of entry, does it not give you a chance to send out your wheat, whether the port of entry is at Sabine Pass or whether it is at Port Arthur?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. We will get out with our wheat, and the sooner you quit throwing obstructions in our way the better. We will reach it by the Gulf, we will reach it by New York, or by the St. Lawrence River. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman can not put his finger on a spot or a place in the RECORD, or a vote that I have ever given in this House, where I strove to build up the State of New York at the expense of his section, and he ought not to make any such insinuation.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] have both charged that the interest of the wheat growers and grain raisers of the Mississippi Valley will be promoted by putting a port of entry at Port Arthur in addition to the port at Sabine Pass, but neither gentleman, while I was observing, gave any reason for that. I want to know why a port of entry at Port Arthur will strengthen our Western interests in the Mississippi Valley any more than the one at Sabine Pass will? If I understand the gentleman from New York correctly, he says that all the loading and unloading of grain is at Sabine Pass.

Mr. PAYNE. Entirely.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where the harbor is. Is there any harbor at Port Arthur?

Mr. PAYNE. None whatever. There is only 4 feet of water there.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then I want the gentleman from New York, while he is on his feet, to answer this question: What advantage will the establishment of a port of entry at Port Arthur give my farmers in my district?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, of course the gentleman from Iowa knows that if there was a reasonable pretext for claiming that it was an advantage, and either of these gentlemen could have stated that pretext or that reason, they would have been very swift to state it. There is no reason.

Mr. HENDERSON. They file their petition, but they do not put in their proof. I want to know what you have to say about it.

Mr. PAYNE. They do not put in any evidence, because there is no evidence. The gentleman sees, from the very nature of the case, that it is impossible that it should be any advantage or any detriment to the people of that great valley whether there was one port of entry or whether there were two ports of entry, so long as the port of entry was located at deep water, where all the wheat must be put upon these ships.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true that committees from boards of trade from Des Moines, Kansas City, Council Bluffs, and Omaha sent men especially to investigate at Port Arthur and at Sabine Pass, and that they reported unanimously in favor of Port Arthur, on a personal investigation?

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that representatives did come from a number of cities on the line or within the radius of this railroad and appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means. Of course they came disinterestedly. Of course each one paid his own fare and no one had a free pass over the route. Of course all the telegrams that were sent here—

Mr. GROUT. So far as you know.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). Were paid for by the individual senders. Of course it was not worked up by the promoters of this land scheme at Port Arthur. Now, these gentlemen were not interested in the land scheme. These gentlemen took without a particle of proof the same assertions that have been made by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from North Dakota, that if they did not have two ports of entry there would be some sort of a hindrance to the shipment of the grain of the great Northwest, and when they were told this they were willing to spend their time and money to come down here and appear before our committee and say they wanted two ports of entry and two ports of delivery. But, Mr. Speaker, no reason has ever been given by a living man why the grain from the great Northwest will not reach Europe as easily, as readily, and as expeditiously if it goes from the port at Sabine Pass as if there were two ports of entry, one at Sabine Pass and one at Port Arthur. It would still have to be transferred to the ships in the deep water, and it would have to go through Sabine Pass, no matter how many ports you establish.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman a question in geography. How far is it from Port Arthur to Sabine Pass?

Mr. PAYNE. Twelve miles.

Mr. CANNON. In what direction?

Mr. PAYNE. Sabine Pass is nearer the Gulf—in a southeasterly direction.

Mr. CANNON. I want to know, when you leave Port Arthur, can you get into the Gulf without going through Sabine Pass?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly not.

Mr. CANNON. And it is 10 miles up the river or arm of the sea to Port Arthur?

Mr. PAYNE. On a lake, 4 feet deep.

Mr. CANNON. That is above Port Arthur?

Mr. PAYNE. Above Sabine Pass, and reaches above Port Arthur.

Mr. CANNON. And you say there are 4 feet of water at Port Arthur?

Mr. PAYNE. I said so.

Mr. CANNON. How much at Sabine Pass?

Mr. PAYNE. Twenty-four feet.

Mr. CANNON. And one proposition is to have a port at Sabine Pass and the other is to have one at Port Arthur also?

Mr. PAYNE. The proposition of the House bill is to have one at Sabine Pass. The Senate proposition is to have one at each place.

Mr. CANNON. I did not know, and therefore I am learning some geography.

Mr. STEELE. The deep water is at the town of Sabine.

Mr. PAYNE. Those gentlemen at Port Arthur claim not only deep water at Sabine, but they claim that the deep water extends a mile above.

Mr. STEELE. The town of Sabine.

Mr. PAYNE. The people of Sabine claimed that the town extended the whole length of the deep water.

Mr. NORTHWAY. How do I understand the gentleman to say that the wheat of the Northwest reaches Sabine Pass?

Mr. HOPKINS. It reaches by way of Port Arthur.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow me to occupy my time I will be obliged to the gentleman from Illinois. All the wheat that goes by the Port Arthur route is there put into lighters and taken over this 4 feet of water to the deep water at Sabine Pass, and there elevated into the vessels.

Mr. NORTHWAY. What does it cost the producer to do that thing?

Mr. PAYNE. I really have no information on that.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is not that the only way in which it can get aboard the ships—

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know how that can affect the matter. They can not get the wheat into the ships in any other way—

Mr. HENDERSON. At Sabine Harbor?

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). Unless this company, which has $28,000,000 invested, build 8 miles of railroad down to the deep water of the harbor and cease their endeavor to work a land scheme through here; and the digging of a canal should not be allowed by the Government of the United States unless all the Engineer Department is overthrown in the interest of a land scheme at Port Arthur.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the House fully understands the question—

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Do not the people of Sabine Pass charge this company for anchorage?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, not only have the people of Sabine Pass offered the company all the terminal facilities they might need for the road, but anchorage and dockage on both sides of the harbor. There is no question as to that. They offered it, and offered it again to the road to come down there. There is no impediment. My friend from North Dakota said there was a flood at one time at Sabine Pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Many times.

Mr. PAYNE. He said there was 7 or 8 feet of water. And so there was; and the same flood extended to the land, which is lower at Port Arthur. There was 7 feet at Sabine Pass and 8 feet at Port Arthur. [Laughter.]

Mr. COWHERD. I want to ask the gentleman if during all the years that Sabine Pass has been a port, and during the several years that there has been deep water there, if there was any need of a subport of entry before the trade was established that comes through Port Arthur?

Mr. PAYNE. Since the railroad to Sabine Pass was built and that to Port Arthur was built, of course the port has increased its commerce, and all the commerce as it increases has to go to the deep harbor at Sabine Pass. Now, let us give them a port of entry and delivery, and then, if our friends have their expectations fulfilled or realized, I will be as swift as anybody, when they get 24 feet of water at Port Arthur, to give them a port of entry and delivery. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COWHERD. The first vote will be taken on the amendment, and if that is voted down then it will stand as it passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the House amendment.

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to have the amendment read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. Let us have order.

Mr. HULL. Let us have order, so that we may hear this.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas, shall be, and is hereby, made a subport of entry and delivery in the customs district of Galveston, and a customs officer, or such other officers, shall be stationed at said subport, with authority to enter and clear vessels, receive duties, fees, and other moneys, and perform such other services and receive such compensation as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury the exigencies of commerce may require.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 98, yeas 64.

Mr. COWHERD. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker. [After a pause.] I withdraw the demand for yeas and nays, and ask for tellers.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Thirty-two gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number; and tellers are refused. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the title will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House insist upon its amendment, and ask for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. PAYNE, Mr. RUSSELL, and Mr. BAILEY.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I submitted some remarks on the Army reorganization bill and also on the election of Senators by the people; but I did not print them within the time allowed, and I ask unanimous consent that I may have them extended now in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to print certain remarks in the RECORD which he had leave to print, the time having expired. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Saturday next be set apart for the consideration of bills from the Committee on Military Affairs which have received the unanimous support of the committee. There are four or five bills that ought to be considered at an early day. One pertains to the Inspector-General's Department, one to the Ordnance Department, one to the Engineer's Department, and another bill that will fix the status of the chaplains of the volunteer regiments. These bills ought to be considered and passed this week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that there is already a special order for Saturday.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Saturday is set apart for eulogies on the late Senator Harris.

Mr. HULL. At what time do those eulogies begin?

Mr. RICHARDSON. At 2 o'clock.

Mr. HULL. I think we could get through by 3 o'clock. Would that leave sufficient time?

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will object to any order that does not except the general deficiency bill, for I want to get it through the House. The gentleman can take an order, subject to appropriation bills, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why does not the gentleman ask unanimous consent for the consideration of his bills at the time he wants them considered?

Mr. HULL. These bills are of great importance, and I do not believe they will excite any lengthy debate in the House. I only ask consideration for those bills that have the unanimous indorsement of the committee. Take the bill of the Commissary Department, the Ordnance Department; these officers are all overworked. Take Rock Island; there are only four men that are superintendents there, and the number can not be increased without further law. The force has been increased ten times and there are ten carloads of stuff shipped there every day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We allowed the eulogies on the late Senator Harris to go over from last Saturday, and we are not inclined to have them postponed again.

Mr. HULL. Well, I will make the request for next Tuesday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling to give unanimous consent for the consideration of bills that I do not know what they are about, and unless the gentleman states what they are, and gives the House an opportunity to know what they are before unanimous consent is given, I shall object.

Mr. HULL. I have stated what the bills relate to.

Mr. SULZER. These bills are all unanimous reports of the committee.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, I think it is no more than right and just to the House that these bills should be printed before unanimous consent is asked for consideration.

Mr. HULL. They are already printed. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that next Tuesday be assigned for the consideration of these bills unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4759. An act to authorize the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company to straighten and restore the channel of the South Canadian River, in the Indian Territory, at the crossing of said railroad.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9856. An act for the relief of Anna Merkel;

H. R. 5879. An act to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 3, 1887, 24 Statutes at Large, chapter 359; and

H. R. 3071. An act for the relief of James A. Stoddard.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9729) to increase the pension of William L. Smithson, late Company D, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. SHERMAN was recognized.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a little bill this morning fixing the pay and allowance of chaplains.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1073) to provide for the construction of a bridge across Niagara River.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and with the amendment presented by the committee, and which has just been read, has the approval of the War Department. There has been some controversy as to the width of the spans to be required in the construction of this bridge. Finally, upon the suggestion of my colleague, Mr. HOOKER, an amendment has been agreed upon satisfactory to my colleagues, Mr. WADSWORTH and Mr. ALEXANDER, Representatives from the districts immediately interested. It is acceptable to the Committee on Commerce and will be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out, in line 24, page 2, the words "of 200 feet" and add, at the end of section 2, the following: "The Secretary of War is hereby directed to form a board, consisting of one engineer officer of the United States Army, one line officer of the United States Navy, and one officer of the United States Geodetic Survey, who shall, after examining the locality and giving full hearings to the parties interested, recommend to the Secretary of War the width of said draw or pivot spans authorized by this act, and the assent of Congress is hereby given to the recommendation of said board when approved by the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERGUSSON addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the general deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Before we proceed with that business, I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he will not yield to me to ask unanimous consent—

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that a dozen gentlemen have been wanting me to yield. Already, from good nature and a desire to accommodate the public business, I have withheld my motion for an hour and a half. And I now insist upon it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I make the point of order that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERGUSSON] can not be taken from the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is a privileged motion.

Mr. CANNON. If it is the sense of the House not to go on with the deficiency bill, well and good; I will abandon the effort.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The matter which the gentleman from New Mexico wants to bring up will not take five minutes.

Mr. HANDY. I submit this parliamentary inquiry: The Chair recognized the gentleman from New Mexico. Now, can another gentleman get the floor, even to make a privileged motion, until the gentleman from New Mexico has yielded the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is a privileged motion, and when he insists upon it, it is equivalent to an objection to any request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois made a motion which is privileged.

Mr. HANDY. But could he take the gentleman from New Mexico from the floor in order to make that motion? The Chair had just recognized the gentleman from New Mexico, but before that gentleman got a chance to say a word—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois was equivalent to an objection.

Mr. HANDY. No request for unanimous consent had been submitted, and no objection could be made until it had been.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. CANNON was agreed to; there being—ayes 73, noes 0.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. PAYNE in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10391) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I will now ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] whether we can agree about the time to be occupied in general debate upon the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I think we can very readily do so. There are several gentlemen here who wish to address the committee, but I think an hour on our side will be sufficient. We may not consume all of that time.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may close at the end of two hours or sooner if the time is not claimed, and that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] control one hour and I the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate may proceed for a time not to exceed two hours.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask either or both of these gentlemen whether that arrangement includes the time which I suggested to the chairman of the committee I might want—perhaps ten or fifteen minutes?

Mr. SAYERS. That can be arranged between us.

Mr. CANNON. I think I can yield the gentleman ten or fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the request of the gentleman from Illinois will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries $224,000,000, of which $218,000,000 in round numbers are for war expenditures. The bill cares not only for deficiencies for the current fiscal year, expiring on the 30th of the present month, but also for war expenditures by way of appropriations until and including the 31st day of next December—one-half of the next fiscal year. The war appropriations, including those that have already been made and those carried in this bill, are (a part being estimated as nearly as they can be) $371,637,741.11. That includes all appropriations for the current year and the appropriations, as nearly as we can estimate them, which are recommended for the first six months of the coming fiscal year. I am speaking now of war expenditures, of war appropriations, as contradistinguished from ordinary appropriations.

Your committee has adopted a policy, which they recommend to the House, of caring for war expenditures only for the first half of the coming fiscal year. Congress will meet on the first Monday of next December, and it is hoped and expected that at that time, when the first half of the fiscal year is about to expire, we shall be able with greater certainty to take care of the public wants, whatever they may be, than we can at this time.

Mr. LOVE. I should like to ask a question for information. If I understand the chairman of the committee, it is believed that this $218,202,751.46 will be required to carry on the expenditures of the war up to the 31st of December?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; it is hoped that that money will be sufficient. The bill has been framed after very considerable investigation and many estimates. Estimates have come from the War and Navy Departments time and time again, each time the estimates being the best estimates that the Departments could respectively make, but it has been found necessary to make further estimates. If gentlemen will stop and think a minute, they will see that it is impossible to closely estimate as to the expenditures that will be made. For instance, the first set of estimates came before the first Manila expedition was contemplated. You can see at once that that begot another estimate. Then the second expedition also begot another estimate. Then there have been two or three expeditions attempted to Cuba. How many more expeditions there will be to Cuba, and how many to Puerto Rico, and what the expense will be, what new expenditures will have to be made within the next six months of the coming fiscal year on account of the state of the war, no man can tell. Therefore the appropriate officials have forwarded these estimates, and we have recommended them substantially as they forwarded them.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman permit a question here?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Are these estimates predicated upon the plan of campaign already mapped out, or is there any allowance for contingencies or for the expansion of these plans?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. And a change or modification of them?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; we have allowed for contingencies, or, rather, the Departments in estimating have allowed for contingencies and unforeseen expenditures, a very considerable amount.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman permit one other question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The appropriation for the War and Navy Departments, for carrying on the war up to January 1, will amount to how much?

Mr. CANNON. This bill carries $218,000,000, and that, added to other war appropriations for the current year and the first half of the coming fiscal year, amounts, in round numbers, to $371,000,000.

Mr. KING. That includes the expenses of both the War and Navy Departments?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. Now, your committee have been exceedingly desirous of appropriating sufficient money for the service. It is true, if we had not done so, there is a section of the Revised Statutes that enables the Departments to make expenditures for certain purposes even although appropriations were not made. Section 3732 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made unless the same is authorized by law, or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

Now, the policy of your committee has been not to drive the Department to action under that section, for the reason that if you have the money in the Treasury to pay promptly for service, it can be obtained at a less cost than it could be if it had to be obtained on credit. So that while we have sought not to appropriate more than was sufficient, we have taken care in our communications with the respective Departments to ask them to make their estimates sufficiently large, as nearly as can be with human foresight, so that when we have made our appropriations there will be money enough to ask for the first half of the coming fiscal year. We hope and believe that these amounts will be sufficient; and if, in the chapter of accidents, they should not be sufficient, and Congress should not be in session, then the Department could operate under the section of the Revised Statutes which I have just read, or, as the other alternative, the President could convene Congress in extraordinary session.

Now, I believe that is all I desire to say. The legislative branch of the Government so far has walked hand in hand with the executive, appropriating promptly and fully according to the demands of the executive for the war, and I have no doubt that we shall continue to do so while it lasts.

Mr. LOVE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman a further question for information. Deducting the amount that is appropriated for war expenses, how does the bill compare in the amount appropriated by similar bills in the past?

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is not far different. It carries ordinary deficiencies in other respects. We have already passed some urgent deficiencies that make the ordinary peace deficiencies larger than we anticipated they would be. If I recollect aright, we have already appropriated $8,000,000 for pensions, as the expenditure this year is to be $148,000,000 or $149,000,000, which is an increase of $8,000,000 in round numbers over the provision which was made a year ago for the current fiscal year. But there is not much difference otherwise from the peace standpoint. Of course, I want to say to the gentleman that we all understand one thing. There is something of an increase, even from the peace standpoint. When you have great revenues from taxation or from borrowing, when you have a state of war, and the minds of all the people are upon the war, and the minds of legislators are upon the war, you think about that. Public attention is directed to that. Public sentiment is affected by that, and necessarily, guard it as you may, there comes a fever in the legislative veins, and I may say that fever pervades the sentiment of all the people of the whole country, and increases even the expenditures that are not for war purposes. We have, to the best of our ability, tried to curb that propensity, sometimes where it took something of effort. Sometimes in our efforts to curb that propensity your committee have met with defeat in the House, and no doubt will in the future.

Mr. LOVE. It is with full appreciation of that fact that I have asked these questions and to ascertain if the committee have reduced these amounts to the lowest margin possible.

Mr. CANNON. But we have done the best we could, and as long as your committee prepare these bills, they will continue, in pursuance of this policy, to hold the peace expenditures of the Government as nearly at the normal conditions as the legislative sentiment and the sentiment of the country will permit. And in view of this fact, I ask, in behalf of the committee, that we may receive the hearty cooperation and help of the House upon both sides. Otherwise the committee amounts to nothing. We can only act as the servants of the House, and are powerless without the good will and hearty cooperation of the full membership.

Mr. LOVE. I only desired to find out whether the committee was making these expenditures as low as they well could. The bill carries the largest appropriation of any bill that has ever passed Congress, and only amounts that are absolutely necessary should be included.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly. We have been liberal in our recommendations for war expenditures, because no man, no committee, no Congress, no people can fail to give every dollar that is required in a critical time, when the honor and welfare of the whole country are at stake, in time of war. So we have not in any respect sought to restrain or curb the estimates made for that purpose, and we have endeavored to be just and liberal from the standpoint of a sound public policy as to peace expenditures. We have felt as to those expenditures, the ordinary expenditures of the Government, that we are at liberty to disregard estimates here, curtail estimates there, and we submit our proposed action to the House and ask its cooperation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. If I correctly interpret the report which I hold in my hand, outside of the appropriations made for war purposes the bill carries less than $6,000,000 of deficiency?

Mr. CANNON. About that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Therefore in voting for it we vote for the great increase only by reason of the expenditures incurred in the prosecution of the war?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. And there is nothing extraordinary about it outside of the usual deficiency appropriation except for the necessity of providing for carrying on the war?

Mr. CANNON. That is correct.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is a very large amount to be carried in one bill, and I wanted to get the facts clear as to the necessity for these amounts.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I presume we preserve the principles of civil-service reform in this crisis?

Mr. CANNON. I will come to that later on, in the five-minute debate. Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve my time and yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee for a moment or two to this bill, so that it may be clearly understood why it is that the bill aggregates $324,000,000 in round numbers. In the first place, we provide not only for the deficiencies for the present year, but also for war expenditures until the 1st day of January next. The war expenditures contain, in round numbers, items of appropriation amounting to $218,000,000. This leaves a balance in the bill of less than $6,000,000 for the civil expenses of the Government. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that in the absence of the war appropriations the bill would be a reasonable one. The $218,000,000 to be appropriated for war expenses is, as I have said, to support the Army and the Navy to the 1st of January next, and they are based on estimates coming to us from the War and Navy Departments. As a rule, we have given these estimates just as they came to us, leaving the responsibility for the conduct of the war upon the executive branch of the Government and, in my judgment, taking the appropriations contained in the bill as a whole, the civil as well as military appropriations, any gentleman in the House can afford to vote for it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose and object of the bill for the further exclusion of undesirable immigration, which is upon the Speaker's desk and awaiting action by the House, is the exclusion of immigrants who are not desired by any section or State of our country. They come almost entirely from Austria, Hungary, Poland, Russia, and Italy. Those nationalities can not be excluded by name because of the relations existing between our Government and theirs. The adoption of the educational test will exclude them to a very great extent, and it is the only measure that can accomplish that object. If a more effective one could be suggested, it would be urged instead of this. The present laws have proven inefficient for that purpose. Last year, out of a total of 230,832 immigrants, only 1,890, or less than 1 per cent, were excluded. The leading journal of this country through which labor speaks says, in its issue of January 13, 1898:

The present laws are not effective; they do not afford relief. That they are entirely inadequate and do not meet the requirements of the case is altogether too obvious to need demonstration. Ninety per cent of the immigration that would be affected by this test—the educational—are of a class not wanted in any section of the country. Our organization and work carries us into every State in the Union, and elsewhere. Not only the wage earners but men in every walk of life are pronounced in favor of more effective restriction of immigration.

This bill provides for the exclusion of—all persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read or write the English language or some other language, but a person not so able to read or write who is over 30 years of age and is the parent or grandparent, may accompany such immigrant, or such a parent or grandparent may be sent for and come to join the family of a child or grandchild over 21 years of age similarly qualified and capable, and a wife or minor child not so able to read or write may accompany or be sent for and come to join the husband or parent similarly qualified and capable.

It embodies the only practical method for the exclusion of the undesirable classes. The opposition to it are the old hackneyed cries, "It will cause cruel separation of families," and "A man need not be able to read and write in order to make a good citizen." One is founded on a misreading of the bill, and the other upon a misconception of its purpose. It does not separate families, for those who come over separate themselves from their families of their own choice and volition, and the whole act after its first clause is designed to prevent as far as possible family separation by making exceptions in favor of wives, parents, grandparents, and minor children.

The friends of the measure do not claim that a man must be able to read or write to be an acceptable or desirable American. No one has ever taken such a position. Every sensible person of experience knows that many of our best citizens have by misfortune or lack of opportunities been deprived of an education, and in spite of that serious handicap in the race of life have vindicated their right to a place in the ranks of our best and truest citizenship. The opponents of this measure can not, if they would, deceive themselves or the country as to the real purpose and object of this educational test.

They know that it is aimed solely at those nationalities of Europe which send us undesirable immigrants, but whom we can not discriminate against by name. We are forced to devise a method which will operate to their exclusion without making specific mention of them. Fortunately we have it at hand, and already have too long delayed its application. It is simply this: Those undesirable classes can not stand an educational test, at least a very large per cent of them. It is not a matter upon which there can be differences of opinion, as the tables which I shall read conclusively show.

Our German friends need not become excited, because the bill will not exclude one out of a hundred of them. From the United Kingdom, France, and Scandinavia not two out of a hundred will be unable to stand the test. But it will stand as a barrier against thousands and hundreds of thousands of the refuse of Russia and Southern Europe, with their dangerous, damaging, and degrading competition and influence. That American turns his back upon his own people who would extend a welcoming hand to those foreigners whom this test will exclude.

That is a sickly sentimentality, a false charity, which in seeking to improve the condition of the lowest strata of humanity would place it in a position where it will at once come into active and ruinous competition with our own labor and drag it from its high standard of living and of manhood down to their own level of semicivilization and low wages, opening the doors of a moral pest-house upon our own people. It is Quixotic patriotism and can not act as a guide for American statesmanship, whose imperative duty and highest mission is to protect the interests and preserve the safety of our own people.

No State or community wishes to have thrust upon it the mass of illiterate, unpatriotic, degraded, and pauper humanity which this bill is designed to exclude. Of the States replying to the inquiry of the immigration investigating committee in 1896, not one wished that kind of immigration. There is not a State from which have not come earnest expressions of a desire for this legislation. It has the active support of nearly every labor organization in the country except some of German composition, which particular class of our good foreign-born citizenship seems in some instances and communities to be laboring under a misconception of the purpose and effect of the bill and of its own best interests.

It is practically a plank in the platform of the political parties in the last general election. There is room and welcome for immigration of the right kind. The great West and Northwest, the South and Southwest, have fields of unnumbered acres inviting farmers of all the good peoples of the civilized world. Those sections are ready and anxious to welcome them. The same vigorous, intelligent, and honest manhood of northern and western Europe that has so largely contributed to the wonderful development of our younger States will never find the gates of this country barred to them.

I should not lend my voice or vote to any legislation aimed at them, nor could any such legislation, if attempted, ever be enacted. They are part of the history and best citizenship of the nation. The undesirable nationalities of which I have spoken are of a different race and condition. Their immigration is desired by none except the steamship companies and their influences, which number amongst themselves many German newspapers, societies, agents, and lobbyists.

H. C. Clausenius & Co., of Chicago, general Western agents of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, on January 26, 1897, sent the following telegram to F. W. A. Poppe, Milbank, S. Dak.:

Immigration bill comes up in the House Wednesday. Wire your Congressman, our expense, protesting against proposed exclusion and requesting bill be defeated, informing him that vote in favor means defeat next election.
H. CLAUSENIUS & CO.

On January 28, 1897, Mr. Clausenius stated in an interview in the Chicago Times-Herald that—

We sent similar messages to more than 200 men. They are agents of the North German Lloyd who have been appointed to this office, but many of them doubtless represent others as well. The immigration bill menaces our business and the business of these agents.

The report of the European Immigration Commission establishes beyond question that these companies have agencies in the countries from which the undesirable immigrants come, in Italy alone there being over 4,000; their business being to gather, corral, and ship to this country like so many cattle this plague upon American labor. It says (page 8):

The Hamburg steamers transport the most destitute inhabitants of Russia, Poland, Roumania, Germany, Austria, and Hungary to Hull, whence by rail they are forwarded to Liverpool and booked through to the United States.

Page 34:

A rough estimate would place the number of immigration agents and sub-agents in Italy at about 4,000.

They gather all such immigrants as are unable to obtain passports in their own country, some being fugitives from justice, persons under police surveillance, or detectives. They are fed on the trains while in transit by the railroad company, and are even provided with wine at their meals. Others who are too poor to pay railroad fare for third-class passengers tramp to the border, camp out nights, and finally find their way to Havre or Boulogne, where they make use of their prepaid tickets, on which they are booked through to the United States.

They are assisted by hundreds of discharged prisoners' aid societies and colonization associations, whose mission it is to unload upon us the criminals and paupers of Europe. For the past twelve years these agencies and influences have had a most serious and telling effect upon our citizenship. Our earlier immigrants were of superior nationalities and material. One can not study the statistics of our immigration without becoming impressed with the menacing decadence in its quality. We seem to have gotten down to the dregs. The good old days that brought us the sturdy Teuton, Saxon, and Gaul, who have done so much to enrich and beautify our country, have gone. The sear and yellow leaf of the Italian, Austro-Hungarian, Polish, and Russian immigration is upon us. Let us examine the figures:

The objectionable nationalities furnished almost no immigration in 1860 (less than 1 per cent), less than one-tenth of the total in 1890, and now furnishes us more than one-half. Prior to 1870 three-fourths of all immigrants came from the United Kingdom, Germany, France, and Scandinavia. In 1860 only three-fifths came from those countries, and in 1896 only two-fifths. The same proportions are maintained for 1897. From 1860 to 1897 immigration from eastern and southern Europe rose from 8.5 to 51.7 per cent, while that from western and northern Europe fell from 64.5 to 36.7 per cent of the total.

It is a matter of vital importance to arrest this growing evil. It is an attack upon our citizenship as well as robbing of American labor. Our stream of national life is being polluted by the worthless, lawless, ignorant, pauper, and criminal classes of Europe. Let these figures tell the story:

ILLITERACY.

The number of persons in each hundred immigrants over 15 years of age who can not write or can not read and write their own language, from those nations of Europe which sent upward of 2,000 immigrants to the United States during the past fiscal year, is as follows:

Denmark.....	0.5	Ireland.....	6.4

The foreign element furnishes 14 times as many criminals, 24 times as many insane persons, and 3 times as many paupers as the native element, taking an equal number of each. The Massachusetts prison reports show the following criminals per thousand by nationalities: Germany, 3.6; Scandinavia, 5.1; Scotland, 5.8; France, 6.1; Ireland, 7.1; England, 7.2; Russia, 7.9; Austria, 10.4; Hungary, 15.4; Poland, 16; Italy, 18.2; native, 2.7; foreign, 5.4.

In illiteracy the percentages were: Scandinavia, less than 2; Germans, less than 3; English, 5; Scotch, 6; Irish, 7; Greeks, 26; Russians, 41; Austro-Hungarians, 45; Italians, 55; Portuguese, 78.

A recent report of the United States Commissioner of Labor shows that persons of foreign birth or parentage form 77 per cent of the population of the slum districts of Baltimore, 90 per cent in Chicago, 95 per cent in New York City, 91 per cent in Philadelphia. Of these, southeastern Europe furnished 3 times as many as northwestern Europe in Baltimore, 19 times as many in New York City, 20 times as many in Chicago, and 71 times as many in Philadelphia.

Of the 89,597 who brought less than $30 each, 49,212 came from Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Russia.

In the southern part of Italy 93 per cent of the people are illiterate, and wages average less than 20 cents, according to Signor Luigi Bodio, the eminent Italian statistician.

There is no place in this country for these undesirable classes. They do not seek as farmers the undeveloped sections. They stagnate upon our seaboard and in our large cities.

By the census of 1890, of the 9,249,547 foreign-born population 44 per cent lived in 124 principal cities. Ninety per cent of the immigration of recent years has settled in the Atlantic States and Illinois.

On December 13, 14, and 15, 1895, 1,000 arriving immigrants were examined at New York. Their nationalities and destinations are shown by the following table:

There are but few farmers in their midst. Nine-tenths of the Italian immigrants are laborers. Illiterates are almost uniformly laborers. Of the 230,832 landed in 1897, only 22,560 (not 10 per cent) were farmers. There is enough uncultivated land in southern Italy for all the Italian farmers in the world. Already there are more than enough of them to work the mines, build the railroads, and do similar heavy work. Each year has been adding to the surplus of such labor of each preceding year, while there has been a lessening rather than an increasing demand for it. There is not a pickax, pike, or shovel that has not many idle hands ready and waiting for it.

It is true that, as is triumphantly asserted by the advocates of unrestricted immigration, immigration has fallen off in 1897, as shown by the table I have already presented. That is just what was to be expected. Prosperity attracts them. In years of industrial depression they are less inclined to impose themselves upon us. But the evil is measured not by the immigration of this year, but by the surplus of immigration which has accumulated from the past fifteen or more years.

Once here, as a rule he is here to stay, fastened permanently upon the body of the Republic. The years of adversity and depression must bear the strain of the unwelcome legacy which previous years of heavy immigration have entailed upon them. The ranks of the unemployed are increased by this growth of surplus labor which has been accumulating for years with fearful rapidity. After each industrial depression, when prosperity has returned it has uniformly been accompanied by increased immigration.

The danger is as great as ever, and no more serious blow can be dealt American labor than for Congress to be deceived by this unsurprising decrease in immigration into staying its protecting hand.

This country is in no condition to be made the dumping ground or receptacle for the unemployed of the world. It is no asylum for the worthless and unfortunates of other nations. Bread can not be had for the asking. It comes in exchange for work. Work can not be had by our own people. Every immigrant who lands upon our shores must be fed. Every day's labor given to one of them is taken from laborers already here. The census of 1890 shows an estimate of 1,139,672 unemployed laborers. A census of to-day would certainly show at least that many.

With our own people hungry and homeless for want of employment, it is little short of a crime upon American citizenship to invoke the name of humanity in the effort to add to the ranks of our unemployed by the indiscriminate admission of the lowest types of labor. The voice is that of humanity, but the hand is that of greed on the part of those foreign steamship companies to feed and fatten upon the $18 to $30 per head of those steerage passengers.

Patriotism with them is a plaything with which to amuse and attract our fancies; as a sentiment or inspiration it is to them as sounding brass. And yet the only argument that has been or can be advanced against the bill is sentiment. That is always an unsafe guide to legislation. It is blind even when most commendable. It idealizes where stern facts and conditions must be met by wisdom and practical common sense. This particular sentiment is peculiarly unacceptable because it is totally blind to its first duty to those immediately around it in its effort to aid those in distant lands. It discounts everything in behalf of a mistaken philanthropy which is disastrous to its own people.

There is room enough for sympathy and pity and charity and solicitude in this country and opportunity for satiation without going to Italy, Austria and Hungary, and Russia and Poland, and Turkey in Asia. Gentlemen should reflect that in such frantic efforts they are turning their backs upon their own unemployed people. Those laborers have a right to our protection—to demand that they be not made victims to unrestricted competition with the degraded labor of other countries.

Congress alone has the power to erect the wall that will save them. They contribute their part to the support of the Government in times of peace and to its armies in times of war. Taxation, as levied in this country by the National Government, is not upon property, but practically upon the head. It is upon the clothes and shoes we wear, the food we eat, the household and kitchen articles, the laborer's tools and implements; such things as are incident in varying degrees to all our people. Bonds, stocks, landed estates, dwellings, stores, and all the many species of valuable property which are not imported or which do not consist of liquor and tobacco bear no part of the burdens of the Government.

The laborer consuming $300 for the support of himself and family pays as much taxation as the millionaire who consumes no more than that amount. He is certainly under no obligation to the Government. He pays for everything he gets. Work is his only help and salvation. Take that from him, and he is upon the cold charity of the world. There is no survival of the fittest in labor competition. The fittest goes to the wall in the presence of the cheapest. The great army of the unemployed, struggling with each other for work, with life almost a tragedy in each suffering family, is an argument that will not and can not be answered by a maudlin sentimentality that would open the flood gates to a debasing immigration which will blot every star of hope from the already darkened firmament which is even now the only shelter for many an American citizen.

I would impress the Representatives from the South with the seriousness of the situation. Surely there can be no question as to our course. So far we have escaped the plague. Perhaps because of an unwillingness to enter into competition with the negro labor, or because of reports of violence and disregard of life sedulously disseminated in foreign countries as conditions peculiar to our especial civilization, or from whatever causes, they have not been visited upon us. But this immunity will not long continue.

The eyes of the world are at last opening to our marvelous resources, and the worthless immigrants, failing to find lodging in the North Atlantic States, will be brought by the steamships by the shipload and dumped upon us. Any day may witness the movement. It is a matter of surprise no less than of congratulation that it has delayed so long. As our manufacturing interests develop, still more tempting will be those pastures new, and they will come down upon that fair land as the plagues did upon Egypt.

A misguided sentimentality that would seek, in the name of humanity to turn that loathsome stream into the industrial life of that virgin territory, pure in its centuries of American citizenship, has for its only apology its utter and hopeless blindness. Surely no son of the South will fasten upon her this body of pollution. Protect the South from this degraded population, and her natural advantages and boundless resources will enable her to secure the cream of immigration.

Let gentlemen consider what that section is. It has more coal and iron than all of Europe; it contains nearly all the phosphate rock deposits of the world; it has nearly every mineral known to science or art; one-half of the standing timber in the Union is within its limits; it raises three-fourths of the world's supply of cotton, and can manufacture it more cheaply than any gold-standard country in the world; its products of breadstuffs exceed its cotton crops; its climate is unequalled, and its waterpower is immeasurable in the unnumbered streams and rivers which fall from the great mountain ridges into the Atlantic and the Gulf.

From northern Alabama to West Virginia there stretches a vast belt 700 by 200 miles, which contains a concentration of mineral and timber wealth without equal in Europe or America, and in some sections of it iron ore, coke, and limestone within a few miles of each other, enabling our furnaces to invade even the English markets.

The cotton-factory development of the South would perhaps suffer more seriously than any other by the invasion of this lawless and pauper immigration, because of the ease by which, with the willingness to accept cheap wages, they could underbid and drive out the excellent high-class American labor with which the mills there are now conducted. The Italian and the Austrian would drive out the operatives there, just as the Canadians have driven them from the Northern mills. By the census of 1890 of the 172,061 cotton-mill operatives in the United States only 49,337 were native whites with native parents, while 41,157 were native whites with foreign parents, and 81,567 were foreigners.

We owe it to our people to protect them from this scourge. I speak earnestly, because I see and feel the danger. In my State are more spindles and more operatives than in any other State in the South; in my district are more than one-fourth of those in the State, and in my county are more than in any county of the South. I would use every power in me to shield them and the rest of the South which as yet have been saved from that immigration. The story of development of my people will in a few years be the story of the whole South, for that section must inevitably soon become the home of cotton manufacture. The entire South is at work; there are no white loafers. They are repeating history.

In 1810 by the census the manufactured products of the Carolinas and Georgia exceeded in value and variety those of New England. They relinquished the manufacturing ascendancy in order to devote themselves to the more profitable fields of agriculture. Up to the beginning of the war the South, with less than one-fourth of the white population of the Union, produced over one-half of its agricultural products.

The wonder of the world was aroused when France in five years paid off the German indemnity of $1,000,000,000. But she had not been devastated by war. She had not given up the flower of her youth to bloody fields. She had not been deprived of billions of her property. She was not oppressed and robbed of other millions after the termination of the war by carpetbaggers, with ignorance and vice holding high carnival in her places of power and in her treasury.

How marvelous, then, must be the resources of the South, when within three decades after a war which left her desolate, and within two decades after the alien and the robber were driven from her capitals, she to-day challenges the admiration of the world by her enterprise and leads on to a future of undimmed greatness. That future can not be prevented, hindered, or delayed by attempting to amend the Constitution so as to enable Congress to control labor in that section. It is an empty dream, born of desperation.

It simply discloses a spirit of monumental selfishness which would deprive the States of their right and proper province to regulate their internal affairs in their own way, vest them all in the Federal Government, and then utilize them to foster enterprises of the New England States in their unequal contest with the cotton States in cotton manufacturing. They would protect themselves from foreign competition by a protective tariff and from domestic competition by depriving other sections of the country of their natural advantages.

No amount of legislation will ever make New England an equal competitor with the South in cotton manufacturing. The eternal laws of nature and commerce forbid it. The record of the past quarter of a century points unerringly to the inevitable result. In 1873-74 the Northern mills took 1,192,000 bales and the Southern 128,000. In 1883-84 they took, respectively, 1,580,000 and 711,000, an increase for the Northern mills of 33 per cent and for the Southern of 455 per cent. In 1860 the spindles of the South were 217,291; in 1870, 416,883; in 1880, 667,000; in 1890, 1,700,000; in 1894, 3,000,000, and in 1897, 4,105,667, until they now amount to one-fourth of the spindles in the Union. In 1897, 37 mills, with 256,780 spindles, were constructed in the South, while in the North only 13 mills, with 39,800 spindles, were constructed.

When the South resumed manufacturing the result was predetermined. New England has to import its cotton, its coal, lumber, and food. The charges paid for water power range from $56.25 at Manayunk, Pa.; $48.25 at Warmset; $37.50 at Paterson, N. J.; $30 at Lowell and Lawrence, Mass., to $5 at Columbia, S. C., per 1 horsepower per year, while the average cost of development and maintenance of water power in South Carolina will not exceed $2 per horsepower per year.

Land and building material are cheap in the South, with consequent low rents; the cotton is at the doors, and there is no profit for brokers and middlemen; the raw material is at its first and cheapest cost; there is no loss of weight in transportation; the water courses never freeze; fuel and lights are very cheap and water is free; living expenses are less than in any other section of the country; the temperature is milder and clothing is lighter. Those are natural advantages which no amount of legislation can remove.

Mr. Alfred B. Shepperson says:

It may be stated as a proposition which can not be controverted that cotton manufacturing is far more profitable in the Southern than in the New England States.

Some of the largest cotton-mill interests in New England are erecting magnificent plants in the South.

Latham, Alexander & Co. say:

The manufacture of cotton in the South has indisputable claim to all the advantages that are inseparable from "the eternal fitness of things." The climate is the best in the world for the business. Water power is there in inexhaustible quantity, free as air, or at minimum cost even in exceptionally desirable localities. Labor is abundant at reasonable wages, and thus far there have been less disturbances than in any other sections of the country. Living expenses are light, and consequently the daily earnings of the factory operatives are more than sufficient to keep them in comfort and contentment. And finally, overtopping and crowning all other advantages is the one inestimable and unalterable fact, the cotton itself is there.

No other section of this Union can ever hope to stand on equal terms with the South in the manufacturing of cotton until transportation of our material ceases to be of consequence in the cost of the manufactured product. To dispute the advantages which the South has over any other section of the Union in the manufacture of cotton would be like contending that the mammoth flour mills should be built farther away from the grain fields.

But the greatest element of superiority of the Southern mills is the splendid character, intelligence, and efficiency of their operatives. There are none comparable to them in the country. They are natives and to the manor born; moral, law-abiding, intelligent, energetic, home-loving, patriotic, and excellent citizens. They are none of your spavined, degenerate, dilapidated, spiritless, and worthless imported foreigners.

They are part of us and animated by the same high purposes and aspirations. They are men and women that make glory for this country in time of war and do their part for its prosperity in time of peace. They need no defense or eulogy in their own country; but to you who know them not let me present these disinterested testimonials from men you do know:

D. M. Thompson, president of Corliss Engine Company, Providence, R. I., says:

The operatives are all * * * of exceptionally good appearance, and exhibit a high grade of intelligence and efficiency in the performance of their work. It is a class of help which the best of our Northern mills would gladly employ.

Mr. H. E. Fisher, a New Englander and superintendent of an Atlanta (Ga.) cotton mill, says:

In many respects I consider the Southern labor superior to that of New England. It is quite as intelligent, competent, and industrious, and at the same time it is content. In this last respect the same can not be said of New England. The oily-tongued agitator, together with the hard times the New England mills have been experiencing, have played havoc with their labor.

Mr. Brittain, a New Englander, and superintendent of Whitney (S. C.) Mill, says:

I have employed labor, North, South, East, and West, in cotton mills, and I prefer the labor to be found here. It is the most intelligent, most adaptable, and most practicable to be found on the face of the continent.

Mr. R. H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers' Record, to whom I am much indebted for some accurate information upon this subject, and who went South with a number of prominent New England manufacturers to study the Southern mills, says:

New England papers and many New England people have always taken the ground that the South could not compete with their section in the manufacture of fine goods because of its labor. Their great hobby has been the superiority of New England mill help to Southern help. It is quite amusing in view of these facts to see the revelation which comes to our New England friends when they go South and investigate Southern cotton mills for themselves. The writer recently had the pleasure of visiting a large number of Southern mills in company with a half dozen of the most prominent mill-owners of New England.

The one subject of greatest interest to them—greater than nearness to the cotton fields, greater than cheap cotton, excellent water powers, or freedom from taxes—was the superior character, the quickness, and the inherent adaptability to cotton manufacturing displayed by the cotton mill people. These New England investigators freely admitted the superior character of Southern mill help. They admitted that it was superior to anything now found in the mills of New England, stating that fifty years ago when New England mills had the native American girls as operatives, their help was of the same character that the South now has.

Now, however, the South has the native American, but New England has mainly the foreign element in its mills. To say that New England's cotton-mill help is superior to the South's is simply saying that the lower class of foreigners are superior to the native Anglo-Saxon American—is about the way it was expressed.

This revelation in regard to the excellence and the abundant supply of mill help is having great influence in turning the attention of New England people to the South. At last even some of the New England papers are beginning to admit it.

The Boston Commercial Bulletin (May 31, 1895, page 15), one of the most conservative textile papers of that section, in its editorial discussing labor in Southern mills, says:

In an inspection of Southern cotton mills, nothing strikes the Northern manufacturer more forcibly than the character of the help in the Piedmont region. The observer is attracted by the size, clear complexion, and general appearance of the operatives, which is in marked contrast to that of the heterogeneous foreign horde which fills the spinning and weaving rooms of the Northern mills. The race is of native American stock, hardy from generations of hill and mountain life.

These are the men and women who are entitled to our protection from the invasion of the mills by the class of labor which has taken possession of the Northern mills. They appeal to us for this legislation. They have a right to be heard. It is their only defense against degraded associations that they dread and abhor. And I make this appeal in their name and in the name of the pure American citizenship that now distinguishes our Southland and that has made its history. [Applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. I now yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

[Mr. CARMACK addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SAYERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES. I will take the time some other time, and will yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

[Mr. KING addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON. I ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nicaragua Canal Commission: To continue the surveys and examinations authorized by the act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," into the proper route, the feasibility, and cost of construction of the Nicaragua Canal, with the view of making complete plans for the entire work of construction of such canal as therein provided, $50,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1896.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 3, after line 25, insert:

"Canadian commission: For the expenses on the part of the United States of a joint commission to be appointed for the adjustment of difference between the United States and Great Britain in respect to the Dominion of Canada, including the compensation of the commissioners representing the United States, the pay of expert service for preparation of papers for the portion of joint expenses chargeable to the United States for printing and other incidental expenses, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State, $50,000, to remain available during the fiscal year 1896."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have printed in the RECORD the following letter in explanation of the items.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to print a letter in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 8, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to invite the attention of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives to the following important matter:

For a number of years past the relations between the United States and the Dominion of Canada growing out of their contiguity and intimate commercial intercourse have given rise to questions which have not yielded to the negotiations undertaken as each arose.

During the past year a strong disposition has been manifest on the part of the government of the Dominion of Canada to seek some general and comprehensive settlement of all such pending matters. On the occasion of the friendly visit of the Canadian Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to this capital in November last, informal consideration was given to the subject, and the readiness of the British and Canadian Governments to enter into a frank and friendly conference for the purpose of devising a broad adjustment of all outstanding sources of difference was ascertained.

As the outcome of the initiatives then taken on both sides, the Hon. Sir Louis Davies, minister of marine and fisheries of the Dominion of Canada, recently visited Washington under the instructions of the Dominion government, and in concert with the British ambassador at this capital held formal conference with the Hon. John W. Foster, late Secretary of State of the United States, and the Hon. John A. Kasson, special commissioner plenipotentiary, who were designated by the President as conferees on behalf of the United States. Five meetings took place between the 25th and the 30th of May, inclusive. There was concurrence of views on both sides as to the desirability of amicably settling all controversies between the United States and Great Britain in respect to the Dominion of Canada, to the end that their intercourse shall be established and maintained on the principles of a cordial friendship between coterminal neighbors; that to realize this purpose each government should communicate to the other, in outline, the modifications of existing conditions, the concessions or the adjustments which it believes ought to be made for the removal of grievances and for the improvement of its commercial and international relations with the other; and that for the final consideration and adjustment of the questions so presented a joint commission, to consist of five members to be appointed by each of the governments, should be created with the usual plenary powers, whose conclusions shall be presented in the form of a convention or conventions between the two governments. There was also agreement as to the general nature and scope of the questions to be considered by the respective governments with a view to submitting them to the proposed joint commission.

These conclusions have been protocolized by the conferees and are now under consideration by the respective governments, with every prospect of early adoption as proposed.

It is evident that the comprehensive character of the suggested arrangement and the variety and importance of the questions to be prepared for submission to the joint commission when the same shall be appointed by the executive branches of the respective governments will entail much careful attention and require treatment by the several departments of the government, with such expert assistance as may be necessary for the collection of the facts and the formation of the recommendations of this Government, as well as to supply the United States commissioners with data to support the contentions of their Government.

Besides the preliminary work of collection, preparation, and arrangement of the subject-matters for discussion, the expenses of the proposed joint commission itself will have to be considered. It is the understanding of the conferees that each government should defray the expenses of its own commissioners and that any joint expenses incurred by order of the joint commission, and so certified, should be paid in equal moieties by the respective governments.

In order to meet these several charges and to enable this Government to conduct the negotiation to a satisfactory issue, in which all rights shall be adequately defended and secured for the United States and our citizens, I have the honor, by direction of the President, to request that early provisions be made, either in the pending sundry civil bill or otherwise, in your discretion, for the expense of preparation of the respective cases on behalf of the United States, for the expenses of the commissioners to be appointed on the part of the United States, for the share of the joint expenses of the proposed commission which may be chargeable to the United States, and for the necessary incidental expenses, for all of which purposes an appropriation of $50,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is believed to be sufficient.

I have, therefore, the honor to ask that consideration be given to this request commensurate with its urgency and with the magnitude and benefit of the results which are confidently expected to flow from the contemplated arrangement.

Respectfully, yours,

WILLIAM R. DAY.

HON. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Chairman Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives.

The Clerk read as follows:

And refining and parting of bullion shall be carried on at the coinage mints of the United States and at the assay office at New York, and it shall be lawful to apply the moneys arising from charges collected from depositors for these operations, and also the proceeds of sale of by-products (spent acids arising from any surplus bullion recovered in parting and refining processes), pursuant to law, so far as may be necessary, to defraying in full the expenses thereof, including labor, material, wastage, and loss on sale of sweeps. But no part of the moneys appropriated for the support of the coinage mints and assay office at New York shall be used to defray the expenses of parting and refining bullion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill whether this provision of the bill has any effect upon the refining and parting of bullion at the assay offices in the United States?

Mr. CANNON. No; it does not. It is made necessary by a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury touching sweepings and the by-product that comes from coining that heretofore have been used as if they were reappropriated, but under the ruling they can not now be so used; and we have the two or three items of appropriation immediately preceding this paragraph; and for the purpose of preventing a similar deficiency, we enact this legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then it does not in any manner interfere with the present law in relation to the assay offices in the Western States?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

The Clerk read as follows:

Western Branch at Leavenworth, Kans.: For current expenses, namely: For legal and other services rendered the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and in full for other expenses incurred in suit of the United States against Joseph W. Oliver, being for the fiscal year 1897, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

Insert after line 18, page 30, the following:

"That jurisdiction over the places purchased for the location of any of the Branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is hereby ceded to the respective States in which said Branches are located, and relinquished by the United States; and the United States shall claim or exercise no jurisdiction over said places after the passage of this act: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be construed to impair the powers and rights heretofore conferred upon the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in and over said places."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I understand, but want to ascertain from the gentleman from Indiana, to see if I am correct. Is this substantially the same bill as passed for the Dayton Home?

Mr. STEELE. Exactly the same. It cures the same defect that existed there, and is made necessary because the supreme court of Ohio has decided substantially that where the General Government requires jurisdiction and the State grants it, reservation of certain rights may not be made by the State, excepting by the expressed consent of the Government.

In the act of the State of Ohio ceding jurisdiction to the Government for the purpose of establishing a national soldiers' home, the legislature reserved the right, or attempted to, among other things, to serve criminal and civil processes on the lands ceded, and I think, notwithstanding the decision, had a right to do so; but to cure any defect the United States, in 1871, passed an act the same as the amendment provides for.

The amendment is general in its character and came up on account of two decisions by the judge of the Grant circuit court of Indiana in recent cases, one criminal and one in divorce proceedings, substantially, as I have said, in accordance with that of the supreme court of Ohio, and we seek to cure the defect for obvious reasons.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist on his point of order?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I only wanted to know what the effect of it was. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PATENT OFFICE.

For the following additional employees for the fiscal year 1899, authorized by the act approved June 10, 1898, namely:

For three principal examiners, at $2,500 each; two first assistant examiners, at $1,500 each; two second assistant examiners, at $1,000 each; six third assistant examiners, at $1,400 each; five fourth assistant examiners, at $1,200 each; four clerks of class 1; four copyists; six laborers, at $600 each; six assistant messengers, at $720 each; and six messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $47,180. For producing the Official Gazette, including weekly, monthly, quarterly, and annual indexes thereof, exclusive of expired patents, $12,678.08.

For producing copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents, for producing copies of designs, trade-marks, and pending applications, and for the reproduction of exhausted copies of drawings and specifications; said work referred to in this and the preceding paragraph to be done as provided by the "Act providing for the public printing and binding and for the distribution of public documents:" Provided, That the entire work may be done at the Government Printing Office, if in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Printing, or if there shall be no joint committee, in the judgment of the Committee on Printing of either House, it shall be deemed to be for the best interests of the Government, $10,000.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this additional force that is provided here for the Patent Office is the result of following the bill that we passed a few days since increasing the force?

Mr. CANNON. This is the appropriation which goes with that legislation.

Mr. LOVE. This is the appropriation that goes with that measure?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

OUT OF THE POSTAL REVENUE.

Free delivery: For free-delivery service for the fiscal years as follows:
For fiscal year 1898, $163,000.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I had intended during the general debate to submit some remarks upon the deficiency bill, and I may want ten or fifteen minutes, perhaps not more than five or six.

Mr. CANNON. I will say that I intended to yield such time as the gentleman wanted, but he was temporarily absent from the House and therefore I did not use my hour; so I will ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the gentleman now, out of my time in the hour that I did not use, ten or fifteen minutes, as he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from California may be allowed to proceed for fifteen minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think I will use that much, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that deficiency bills are a necessity; but it seems they have been made the vehicle of a multitude of sins and are at least incentives to the expenditure of more money than Congress sees fit to appropriate for specific purposes. The item presented here is but a trifle in these war times—$163,000; but there is involved in this deficiency an absolute unwarranted defiance of an act of Congress. I want to say, further, I should take opportunity to criticize any administration under the sun as I criticize the present for like offense.

I want to say, still further, that this deficiency was created and continued to swell in magnitude up to the middle of January, after several urgent deficiency bills had been presented, and not one word came from the Post-Office Department asking Congress whether they indorsed these expenditures of money or not. From this small amount of money, if unchecked by Congress, may continue to grow this condition in the Departments; and it has grown, I think, in some of the other Departments, as gentlemen upon the Committee on Appropriations can substantiate, for a number of years, but never, I think, with the boldness that has been attempted in this. You see here the Department expended money in defiance of the appropriation made for a specific service. I should not take occasion, Mr. Chairman, perhaps, under the excited condition of the country to refer to this question had there not been more criticism, probably, growing out of this item than any other one measure of expenditure that has ever come before Congress.

During the hearings on the Post-Office appropriation bill it developed that the Post-Office Department had expended more money for free-delivery service than had been appropriated. Never in the hearings before the Post-Office Committee before have we had a stenographer and had taken down all that transpired before the committee. At this hearing we had no stenographer, because we were following the policy that had been in vogue for a number of years. But, as some controversy arose as to what actually took place at that hearing, I found it afterwards necessary to have a stenographer present and take down every word that was spoken.

While I have been on the Post-Office Committee I have endeavored, with the aid and help of others on the committee, to keep the expenditures down to the lowest possible point that would maintain the efficiency of the service. Now, during this hearing it was developed that there was a deficiency in the item for free-delivery service. Knowing full well what had been the policy, what had been spoken of at our committee many times before, that there was too much service in some of the cities in this country, I said to the First Assistant of the Department: "Is it not possible to cut down the free-delivery service in some of the cities of this country, or, if not to cut it down, to at least stop its growth?" I offered that suggestion after having been informed by that Department for years that in some cities of the country there was too much service. We were informed immediately: "Yes; we will cut down the service in such cities as to-day have too much service."

That, I supposed, was the end of the controversy. The deficiency had been created, and it would have been our effort to have that deficiency made up. The Post-Office Department did proceed to cut off some carriers. I suppose here is a portion of unwritten history. I suppose it created so much excitement in the one, two, or three cities that they proposed to cut it off from that they found it was impossible to proceed, and then they pursued a policy which I want this House to understand.

Finding that they had not strength enough to cut off service in cities where they had nine deliveries a day, they immediately proceeded to attempt to cut the carriers off in most all the large cities of this country, and I have been heard to insinuate that perhaps the motive behind that was to create a sentiment in Congress that would sustain the Department in stopping where they were. Perhaps it is not so, but I call the attention of this House to the matter so that it may carefully look over the conditions. Why did the Department send to the city of San Francisco and order them to cut off 30 carriers, a city that never had more than five deliveries a day, and out of 200 carriers only 8 made five deliveries a day, a city that has not had an additional carrier for nine years? I might be tempted to ask why they went to the city of Portland, Me., and ordered carriers cut off there, where no additional carriers had been allowed during a year.

Mr. McMILLIN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Did they cut off carriers where the service was the greatest and where it had been recently increased?

Mr. LOUD. They did not.

Mr. McMILLIN. What number of deliveries was left in the other cities?

Mr. LOUD. Why, of course this scheme never was carried out, and it never was intended that it should be. I am calling the attention of the House to this fact, that where an agreement was entered into before the Post-Office Committee that a few carriers should be cut off in the cities where there were eight or nine deliveries a day, I think they intended to cut them off in those cities, let me say; but it created such a row that in order to sustain the position they were forced into, they naturally went to the city of the chairman of the Post-Office Committee and, as I have said, ordered 30 carriers cut off there. I was asked the question what I was going to do about it. I said to the Department, "If there are too many carriers in the city of San Francisco, it becomes your duty to cut them off. I am not the man to determine; you must assume the responsibility." But I ask now why should they have attempted to cut carriers off in cities that had a very limited delivery to as great an extent as they proposed to cut them off in cities that had eight or nine deliveries.

Senate Document No. 70 may be somewhat interesting reading to the average member of Congress. It is in answer to a query put to the Post-Office Department as to what amount of money it required to maintain the efficiency of the postal service. That was during the height of this excitement, and, as you remember, on this floor attempts were made to appropriate money to meet this deficiency.

Mr. LOVE. What date was that?

Mr. LOUD. January 21, and the gentleman will remember that at the time I was hardly able to speak above a whisper. Some members of the House were criticising me by having themselves interviewed in the press throughout the country, holding me personally responsible. And after I saw this communication, which was in the possession of those parties before it ever came to Congress, I was not surprised. The Postmaster-General, in submitting his estimate of the amount that was necessary to maintain the efficiency of the free-delivery service, took occasion to say:

In this connection I deem it proper to state that the appropriation allowed by Congress for the free-delivery system for the current fiscal year, plus the deficiency of $163,000, exceeds by only $900 the estimate submitted by this Department for the salaries of letter carriers at established offices.

I hold that in this matter the Postmaster-General went beyond his power and authority. It may have been, perhaps, a Department joke to call the attention of Congress to the fact that "if you had done as I asked you to do, there would not have been this deficiency." At that time I branded that statement of the Post-Office Department as a falsehood. During the hearings before the Appropriations Committee (you will find the language in the report of those hearings) the Department admitted what any man must admit, for, unfortunately for the Department, the submissions to Congress were in print and could not be changed by the system of figuring of any clerk in any Department. I branded that statement at that time as false, and said that if I was ever able to be heard I would prove it.

But suppose there had been a difference of $163,000, what difference could it make to the Post-Office Department? Has not Congress the right to appropriate as much or as little money for any branch of the public service as it sees fit? The worst aspect of this matter, Mr. Chairman, is that the statement does not bear even the imprint of truth. I have given utterance to the expression before, and I will repeat it: If I had been Postmaster-General and my name had been obtained to a document of that kind, either the man who submitted the figures to me and made me certify to a falsehood to Congress and the country—either I would have had his scalp before the setting of the sun or the President should have had mine.

In the hearings before the committee—I refer to page 56—this conversation took place:

Mr. LOUD. Now I want to turn to Document 79, which is a document sent to the Senate, in which your Department say:

"In this connection I deem it proper to state that the appropriation allowed by Congress for the free-delivery system for the current fiscal year, plus the deficiency of $163,000, exceeds by only $900 the estimates submitted by this Department for the salaries of letter carriers at established offices."

I would like to know if you still hold that to be a correct statement.

Mr. MACHEN. As I explained to you personally, Mr. LOUD, about the time that document was sent to the Senate, or the time we made our estimate to your committee, the estimate of salaries for letter carriers at established offices and for all purposes for the established service for 1897-98 was $12,631,500. You appropriated for the maintenance of the service at established offices $12,529,000, and made a separate item of $80,000 for the establishment of the service at new offices, which made a cut in the estimated appropriation, as far as the established service was concerned, of $162,500, or, taking the two items together, a net cut of $72,500.

Mr. LOUD. That is correct; the statement of $162,500 is not correct.

Mr. MACHEN. It is correct as far as the service in established offices is concerned.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. LOUD. What is the meaning of what I have just read? The Postmaster-General submitted to Congress an estimate for service in established offices and for the establishment of new service. We found that the Department had not been establishing new service in places entitled to it by law; so we segregated the items. Then the Department, even in the last hearing, tried to crawl and say that that was the difference between the amount we appropriated and the amount estimated for the established service, when, as a matter of fact, the Department had estimated for both characters of service.

Mr. LOUD. Let me call your attention right there to the estimate:

"For additional carriers for the extension of the service at established offices, and for establishment thereof at new offices, $180,000."

Mr. MACHEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. Now, do I understand you did not intend to use any of this money for establishing new offices?

Mr. MACHEN. Not if a deficiency was threatened, because then we would have no excuse for making it.

Mr. LOUD. Then why did you not estimate for this service? You only asked $180,000 for the extension of the service at established offices and establishing new offices?

Mr. MACHEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. We took $90,000 of the money in accordance with the statement you made that there were 125 offices entitled to this, but you could not establish these for the reason of the pressure from other sources, so we gave you $90,000 in a segregated item for the establishment of this service at new offices. Now, the only way you can possibly reach that $162,500 is by taking the $90,000 we did appropriate and charge it up to us as not appropriated.

And that is what they did. And the Postmaster-General is made to say and sent to Congress publicly and officially a document containing statements which bear upon their face the imprint of falsehood.

Mr. MACHEN. Not exactly so, because if we had the whole amount of the estimate, $12,631,500, and at the beginning of the fiscal year we found we were going to have a deficiency, we would not have established new offices. In that way the establishment of the service would have been left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. LOUD. Yes, I know, but it is a subterfuge and you can not fix it in that way.

Mr. MACHEN. And I will say the net cut will be $72,500.

Mr. LOUD. I acknowledge the cut was $72,500, but no man, by any process of figuring, can make the thing in any other manner. You can figure it up as you please. Of course I do not represent Congress, although you know that item has been thrown back upon my shoulders, that I was personally responsible for this. I am perfectly willing to admit that we appropriated $72,500 for this service less than was estimated, but no more than that. Now, I find you had $97,458 available on the 1st of last July, and this, I understand, is outside of new office service.

Mr. MACHEN. For the extension of the service in established offices.

Mr. LOUD. For the extension of the service in established offices, and to that you really should have added the $55,000 which you put to your credit here for deductions by reason of change of grade?

Mr. MACHEN. I have deducted that.

Mr. LOUD. You have further on; really, as a matter of fact, you had available for this year $152,458?

Mr. MACHEN. Yes; less about $25,000, which would be consumed in the holiday service, emergency service, and matters of that kind.

Mr. LOUD. That is all estimated here?

Mr. MACHEN. No; it is not. I have taken out the fixed charges against the appropriation, salary charge, vacation service, promotions required by law, or the fixed charges against salary for July 1, 1897, $12,481,542, leaving a balance available for additional help to maintain the service within present limits and to prevent overtime, $97,458. Now, the emergency service for holidays, election times, and summer resorts would have to come out of that.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; but it was all in your original estimate.

Mr. MACHEN. Yes, sir; but this is a statement of the way the appropriation was disbursed.

Mr. LOUD. The best we can do is to confine ourselves to the figures. Further on you do allow $55,000 by reason of change of grade?

Mr. MACHEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. That should have been, according to your own figures—

Mr. MACHEN. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. MACHEN. That is the way the law reads, I think. That is, they take the pro rata vacation from date of appointment. If they are appointed on January 1, 1898, for instance, they are entitled to seven and one-half days to July 1, 1898.

Mr. LOUD. Now, then, to sum up the statement, the $162,500 less appropriated than estimated for has been reduced down to $72,500?

Mr. MACHEN. On that account.

Mr. LOUD. And you will find the Department, having $152,453 for the extension of service, continued to extend the service to the amount of $250,298.50 in the first six months, and that the Department did not submit any deficiency estimate to Congress until there had been considerable disturbance about it; and you went on, even on the 1st of January you gave $20,000 here—

Mr. MACHEN. Those were allowances made prior to that time, the service to commence and appointments to take effect January 1.

Mr. LOUD. Of course you understand you had no right to use any more money than was appropriated?

Mr. MACHEN. Well, we understood that, but we had to take care of the service.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I would like to ask you if both you and Mr. Heath did not say to me, when I had the first hearing before our committee, that in your opinion some cities of this country had too large a service?

Mr. MACHEN. Yes; I said so.

Mr. LOUD. We will name two of those cities. Boston is one and New York the other, and yet I find you have allowed the city of Boston, in the face of that, 19 carriers, and the city of New York—the number is not here, but $18,000 in a lump sum.

Mr. MACHEN. That is equal to 30 for the full year.

Mr. LOUD. And that in face of the fact it had been constantly admitted that those cities had too large a service already before this extra amount was allowed?

Mr. MACHEN. There is no doubt that New York and Boston, compared with other cities, have more service in the residential portion of the city.

Mr. LOUD. Is it not a fact that in both the city of New York and the city of Boston each carrier delivers to a less number of people than any other city in the United States, notwithstanding the people there are more concentrated than in any other city?

Mr. MACHEN. In New York it is so, and, I think, in Boston, too. In New York the number is 1,408, and in Boston it is 1,034.

Mr. LOUD. The understanding was, when you had the hearing before, that there were some cities in which there was too large a service?

Mr. MACHEN. Yes, sir; but the question came up—

Mr. LOUD. In the interest of the service both yourself and Mr. Heath thought it was advisable to endeavor to cut it down.

Mr. MACHEN. I beg to differ with you as far as I was concerned. I told you it was a physical impossibility to do it.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Heath did.

Mr. MACHEN. I said it was a physical impossibility to do it.

Mr. LOUD. You never made that statement until this year.

Mr. MACHEN. We tried it in Boston when the Department reduced the deliveries in Back Bay district from seven to five.

Mr. LOUD. How could you do it in Philadelphia if you could not do it in Boston? You took a hundred carriers off there.

Mr. MACHEN. We simply took up the slack there. We found the carriers were working six hours, and we reduced their number 100, and made the remaining carriers work eight hours; but we did not cut the number of deliveries or collections.

Mr. LOUD. Then the Department is powerless to restrict and Congress is powerless to restrict the Department; that is the situation?

Mr. MACHEN. I hold that the Department is powerless to-day to go into New York and reduce the service there from six deliveries in the residential portion to four.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care anything about that phase of the case. Is it powerless for the Department to go into New York and take a carrier out?

Mr. MACHEN. No, sir; the Department can do anything arbitrarily.

Mr. LOUD. But you say it is a physical impossibility?

Mr. MACHEN. Well, it is if you want to live with the people.

Mr. LOUD. In the face of the amount of money given, you continued to put on carriers up to the time this excitement arose here; you put on 376 carriers, according to your statement, and this $48,000 is also an addition to that, I understand?

Mr. MACHEN. We put in a lump sum of $48,000, equal to 80 carriers for a full year. I do not remember the number of carriers appointed under this lump sum at each office. Is Chicago on that list? In Chicago there were 62 carriers appointed.

Mr. LOUD. Neither Chicago nor New York are included in your list, so you have allowed $48,000 in addition to the 376 carriers.

Mr. MACHEN. That has all been provided for by fifty-two carriers in Chicago and some in New York.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I would like to ask you how many carriers you proposed to cut off throughout the country at the time the Senate called for this information?

Mr. MACHEN. How many we proposed to cut off?

Mr. LOUD. Or how many you ordered cut off?

Mr. MACHEN. There was no order made to cut off.

Mr. LOUD. Well, how many did you propose to cut off?

Mr. MACHEN. We proposed to cut off enough to make up the deficiency.

Mr. LOUD. You have got your letters or telegrams you sent out, or copies of them?

Mr. MACHEN. Oh, yes. We sent letters to the offices for which these allowances had been made, to the effect that we would reduce the force by the number of additional carriers allowed under the appropriation for this fiscal year.

Mr. LOUD. Did you make the suggestion in my city, notwithstanding the fact we have had but one or two carriers within six or seven years, that they should be cut down thirty?

Mr. MACHEN. Not 30; 15, I think.

Now, let us see what was done in this matter to maintain the efficiency of the carrier service. One hundred and sixty-two thousand five hundred dollars for pay of carriers, they say. Let us see. We appropriated $60,000 for incidental expenses, and we had appropriated the year before $50,000. No greater amount of money had ever been used for that purpose. No more was asked for. Yet you find that the Department in its submission to the Committee on Appropriations states that it expended in the first six months of this year $107,328.20. That is to say, with an appropriation of $60,000 the Department created a deficiency of $47,328.20 in six months, and it was going ahead swimmingly without coming to Congress to intimate that any appropriation whatever for a deficiency was wanted.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has always been ready and willing to recommend and has recommended such appropriations for the support of the postal service as would maintain its efficiency. The postal service had run wild in the growth of the free-delivery system, which in a few years had mounted up from nothing to an expenditure of more than $14,000,000. I have said before and I will say again that we have run free-delivery mad in this country. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, with the assistance of the House, has endeavored to put on the brakes. But we found the Department disregarding entirely the acts of Congress, stating, "We will put on as many carriers as we see fit;" and, as this statement shows, they put them on month after month and were still putting them on when the halt was called here.

Now, you will find that over and over again during that hearing Mr. Machen said that there was too much service in some cities, but that it was a physical impossibility to stop it. That may be. I recognize that as well as any man possibly can, but I can not understand how, where a city has too much service, a Department official can give way and continue to increase it.

The Senate this year, as you all know, put an amendment upon the appropriation bill restricting these deliveries to four a day. If a man ever was tempted by the devil, I was at that time to accept that amendment, and I believe the sober good judgment of this House would have sustained us in it; but I do not believe in that character of legislation. I hope the day may come when the Departments may recognize the good of this country and may inaugurate these reforms without being restricted by an ironclad rule or law of Congress. On that occasion I want to say that your conference committee did, temporarily at least, put the devil behind us and the Senate receded upon that amendment.

Now, look at the report that has been submitted to Congress. There are 328 carriers in the city of New York making nine deliveries a day. There are carriers in the city of New York and Boston delivering to a less number of people than in any other city in this country, and the population there is more compact than in any other city. One carrier in the city of Boston serves but 1,000 men on an average. Of course our Boston friends say it is because the people of Boston are more intelligent and get more mail, and yet it does not make much difference in the time required for delivery whether a man gets one letter or three or four at a time.

It is the result of pressure, as Mr. Machen says, the result of political pressure to get men into the Government service, and you have this army of 15,000 men in the Government service organized into an organization threatening the members of Congress in their cities that "You can not dismiss one of us, and if you do not accede to our demands we will defeat you for Congress." A good many members think they can do it, but do not fool yourselves for a moment. The people have got more sense than to defeat any man for Congress who does his duty here and fails to obey the mandate of any organization of Government employees. The necessity of calling the attention of Congress to this matter may, if not stopped, be felt acutely some time by the legislative branch. This, as you understand, is not a branch of the service that requires or would permit of a deficiency, because we provided $180,000 for an increased service above what they had, and the bill did not provide for the cutting off of a single individual.

Now, if a Department can create a deficiency in the employment of officials of the service to the extent of $162,500, then they have the power to put on any number of employees at any place they may see fit regardless of the amount of money that Congress may provide for that service. And I hope after what has taken place, after the severe criticisms that have been made throughout the country, Congress will in the future, even if the Department may not see the necessity of it, take action to stop any further proceedings of this kind.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] desires some time.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time?

Mr. CANNON. Five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the very able, honest, and businesslike chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of this House perhaps needs no support and encouragement from any of us; and yet I hardly feel like letting this hour pass by without taking up one single item mentioned in his speech, and, if possible, emphasizing it, because it involves a principle which lies at the very foundation of free government. I believe that a search of legislative history will bear me out in saying that there is concealed in this Post-Office deficiency an item more scandalous, more condemnable than any item that has ever passed the scrutiny of a legislative assembly, either in England or America, for two hundred years. Not that there is any steal in it, but it is an assault upon the fundamental principles of constitutional government.

Of course we have to vote for this bill. I would rather have my right hand drop palsied by my side than vote against this bill, carrying, as it does, over a hundred millions of dollars for the prosecution of the war. Outside of the $218,000,000 carried in the bill for that purpose, there is only $6,000,000 for ordinary deficiencies; but there is just one item which you and I are helpless now to reject, by amendment or otherwise, and the only chance for us to fittingly rebuke it is by putting our condemnation in the RECORD.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the item?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. As the chairman of the Post-Office Committee said, last year in the Post-Office bill, after careful consideration in committee and after full discussion on the floor of the House, after consultation with the Post-Office authorities, we decided that we would limit the expenditure for "incidentals" for the mail carriers' service to $60,000. Now, that was final as to the amount. What did the late Postmaster-General do? He expended $47,000 more in seven months for incidentals than we authorized him to expend in twelve months. He usurped the authority of Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. To which Postmaster-General does the gentleman refer?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Well, I am very glad to say that we have had a fortunate change in the Post-Office Department. It was the late Postmaster-General, not the present incumbent. I wrote him a letter soon after this monumental effrontery appeared in the hearings before the Post-Office Committee, and asked him how in the world he could explain it, if there was any explanation, why he, the Postmaster-General, should expend $107,000 from the 1st of July until the 24th of last January, when we had only authorized him to expend $60,000 in the whole fiscal year?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I will yield, provided my time may be extended.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It is a question bearing directly upon this subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. On the faith that my time will be extended I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman to be condemning in unmeasured terms the increased appropriation, and yet declaring that there was no way of righting the wrong in this body. Why can he not offer an amendment to strike out that portion of the appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. That does not right the wrong.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It does to that extent, if you refuse to make the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. If the gentleman will offer an amendment or show a way out of it, I will support him.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I am not familiar with the facts, as the gentleman is.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. The expenditure has been made, and we can either refer these claimants to the late Postmaster-General and ask them to bring suit against him or else we must pay it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I am not familiar with the facts, but I do not want to have it said that the Congress of the United States will countenance what, upon the gentleman's statement, seems to have been a malfeasance in office.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Oh, I do not claim that the Postmaster-General stole the money.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Well, it is a wrong.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. It is a wrong.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It is an expenditure without any warrant of law.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. We can only now make such emphatic protests as to make it dangerous or unpleasant for any future Postmaster-General to expend money not authorized by Congress. The Constitution is very plain on this point—that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." Just think of the purpose for which it was made. I would not mind the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy in a great war emergency expending $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 and trusting to luck or our patriotism to pay it and never ask a question; but this is an expenditure incurred in piping times of peace for incidental expenses, for painting mail boxes, for putting up posts, for buying straps and buckles.

That is the urgent necessity for which this $47,000 was paid out without any authority from Congress. This is an old question lying at the very foundation of free government. It was the struggle between Charles I and his Parliament. Fortunately it has never come up for serious discussion under the Constitution, because up to this blessed year of grace the Constitution has been honestly and faithfully obeyed and enforced in this regard by the executive as well as the legislative department.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand the gentleman's statement of the case it is this, that the money has not actually been expended yet, but liabilities have been incurred.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Liabilities have been incurred.

Mr. DOCKERY. Therefore the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Postmasters have been authorized to pay out money for this and that, when the Postmaster-General knew that there was no authority of Congress to pay out that money. He trusted entirely to your generosity and mine, and possibly to your ignorance, indolence, or indifference, and mine, to get this item slipped into this appropriation bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the complaint is that the late Postmaster-General Gary incurred liabilities in advance of appropriations?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Yes; that is what I am protesting against, and I hope that no future Postmaster-General in this Administration or any other will go ahead and forget that there is a House of Representatives and a Committee on Appropriations, to say nothing of a Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom the Constitution has relegated this question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word, and then I think, maybe, at least I hope, we can proceed with the reading of this bill. This item is as follows, if I can have the attention of the House:

Free delivery: For free-delivery service for the fiscal years as follows:
For fiscal year 1898, $163,000.

Now, that is the item complained of. That is the item about which the gentleman from California makes his criticism and is the only item upon this bill that is criticised. This is a deficiency bill. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reports the annual Post-Office appropriation bill; but there came in an estimate to the Committee on Appropriations for a deficiency, that is, for an additional appropriation for the free-delivery service, of $163,000.

Well, we investigated as best we could, and we found this state of facts: The Post-Office Department, for the first six months of this fiscal year, that is, from the 1st of July to the 1st of January last, spent at the rate of more than one-half of the appropriation for this free-delivery service. That is to say, they put on more carriers than they could pay for the remaining six months out of the money originally appropriated. So that one of two things had to happen. Either they must decrease the number of carriers so as to bring the service within the original appropriation, or they must have this $163,000. Well, there was a great ruction throughout the country. The Post-Office Department gave notice to the various post-offices in the country that at a certain time there would be so many carriers decreased at their offices, so as to prevent this deficiency.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. If I remember correctly, during the hearing of the representative of the Post-Office Department upon this item it was made apparent that the stock had run down a good deal, and that it became necessary to replenish.

Mr. CANNON. That is another matter.

Mr. SAYERS. But that was the item of which the gentleman from California complained when he appeared before our committee.

Mr. CANNON. That item is not in this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. He complained of it.

Mr. CANNON. The complaint against that was about the $163,500, possibly charged with the carriers, too.

Mr. LOUD. That, as a matter of fact, was as to the incidental expenses.

Mr. SAYERS. I wanted that fact brought out.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. SAYERS. Because it appeared in the hearing before the committee on this item, if I mistake not. Am I correct?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, let that be as it may. This is the only item in this bill and this is the item criticised. Now, then, we marched up to a condition where every place where the carriers were to be dismissed kicked. Why, my friend before me, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL], not only kicked once, but kicked all day. The gentleman from New York kicked, and the gentleman from Illinois, Chicago, kicked; and they kicked all over the country against the decrease of their carrier service. So that we came up to a point where a decrease had to be made or this additional appropriation made. Well, the long and short of it is that the decrease was not made, and this appropriation is here.

Now, then, I have nothing to say in defense of this expenditure that brought about this condition of affairs. I believe it is the duty of every Department to cut the garment according to the cloth. I believe that the Postmaster-General and the Post-Office Department erred in putting on as many carriers as they did in the first half of this fiscal year, so many that they would not have the same the last half or force this deficiency. I think it will not be done again, but that is all there is of it, as I understand it; and this deficiency is reported in pursuance of the request of many, many members—in fact, the almost unanimous demand throughout the country.

Mr. SAYERS. City members.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, city members; and little city members as well as big city members.

Mr. McCALL. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If this appropriation for this deficiency should not be made, would it not be necessary to almost suspend the free-delivery service?

Mr. CANNON. Not to suspend it.

Mr. McCALL. If it would not have the effect of suspending, would it not act very severely on cities having between 100,000 and 30,000 inhabitants?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I commend the honesty of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], but I do not approve his judgment. I am not familiar with the facts he has recited, but I am unwilling to let the statement go unchallenged that he characterized as being so bad he had nothing in his vocabulary sufficiently vigorous to express it. This House should not be placed in the attitude of recognizing the fact that a great appropriation bill contained a monstrous outrage upon the people of the country and we were powerless to right the wrong. Now, if I understand the state of the case, the Postmaster-General of the United States, without any warrant of law, exceeded the limit allowed him in the appropriation under the head of miscellaneous items—

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Incidental expenses.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Some $50,000.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman if it be true that this officer of the Government did expend $47,000 without warrant of law, why are not his bondsmen responsible to the people for the money he unlawfully spent; and if his bondsmen are not, why is he not personally responsible?

Mr. CLAYTON. He does not give any bond.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. If he does not give a bond, and he is not good under execution, he ought to be prosecuted to insolvency that people may know he was recreant to his trust. It does not make any difference if he is a high official; he ought to be exposed. The chairman of the Post-Office Committee called attention to the fact, not this particular item, that the Post-Office Department officials were in the habit of exceeding the appropriations and relying upon the generosity of Congress; and I say now that while I recognize that an amendment emanating from this side of the Chamber would not be adopted, if the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] has any desire or zeal to serve the people and will offer an amendment to reduce the appropriation by the amount of this appropriation, I take the liberty of saying he will get every vote on this side of the Chamber. Then we can prosecute this man to insolvency after we have refused to approve his wrongdoing.

The time has come to expose these things. This is the greatest deficiency appropriation bill that has been introduced in Congress in thirty years. We have not the time, and perhaps some of us have not the inclination, to go into the details of every item in the bill. As has been said, most of the items are for the prosecution of the war, and we all want to see that carried on successfully; but I am opposed to sanctioning any appropriation of funds to take the place of funds that have been misappropriated. If the rules of the House provide for a condition of affairs like that, we ought to stop the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, allow me to say that if the gentleman from North Dakota is anxious to strike out this item, all that he will have to do will be to offer an amendment to strike it out and then bring the question fairly before the committee and then he can test the sense of the committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The only reason, Mr. Chairman, that I took the floor was because I was astonished and shocked at the statement of the gentleman from North Dakota that a wrong existed here more gigantic than ever existed in the British Parliament, and that the American Congress was powerless to right that wrong.

Mr. CLAYTON. And he did not offer any remedy.

Mr. SAYERS. The Committee on Appropriations, and especially the subcommittee that prepared the bill, invite the closest criticism of every item in the bill, and especially do they invite the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], if he thinks this item of appropriation is so outrageously wrong, to be practical in his opposition and move to strike it out. Now is the time and here is the place.

Mr. BERRY. Has the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] in his possession the same facts that were in possession of the gentleman from North Dakota when this item was put in the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I will tell the gentleman from Kentucky what the committee had in its possession—the fact that these expenditures had been incurred by the Post-Office Department, Mr. Gary being Postmaster-General.

Mr. BERRY. Did you know whether they were expended by authority of law or without authority of law?

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to the gentleman that this deficiency occurred like a great many other deficiencies in this bill. The appropriation was not large enough, and we had to make up for the expenditure.

Mr. BERRY. The gentleman does not put into the bill everything that anybody tells him to put in, whether authorized by law or not?

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. Is it a fact that the Postmaster-General in his expenditures exceeded the law to the extent of $50,000, and that the Committee on Appropriations undertake to make it good in this deficiency bill?

Mr. SAYERS. The expenditure has been made.

Mr. KELLEY. And the House is going to make it good to the extent of $50,000.

Mr. SAYERS. That is within the discretion of the House. Any gentleman can move to strike it out. In place of talking, let gentlemen act.

Mr. BERRY. I understand the Appropriations Committee puts in anything that comes to them, and then leaves it to the House to strike it out.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman from Kentucky understands that to be the case, he labors under a very great misapprehension, and the gentleman has held a seat in Congress for so long a time to very little purpose.

Mr. BERRY. I am astonished that the gentleman from Texas has held a seat here almost a lifetime and permits something to go into the appropriation bill that he knows is not right.

Mr. SAYERS. For that we have the word of the gentleman from North Dakota. Now we call upon that gentleman to offer his amendment to strike out the item if he thinks it ought to go out. We invite him to do so. Or let the gentleman from Kentucky move to strike it out.

Mr. BERRY. If I thought the committee had all the information that the gentleman from North Dakota has presented on this floor, I would question the whole bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Then move to strike out the provision to which you object.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MAHON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is no amendment pending.

Mr. MAHON. Well, I call for the regular order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, in making appropriations for the various bureaus and Departments of the Government, the Appropriations Committee does so upon estimates. In this case there was an estimate. As we all understand, it sometimes happens that when the end of the fiscal year comes, or when the year is about to close, a bureau or Department finds that the appropriation originally made for a particular service does not cover the necessary expenditures of the bureau or Department in carrying on that service. Hence, they come to the committee and ask in the deficiency bill a sufficient amount of money to cover that expenditure. It does not make any difference whether the money was foolishly expended, wrongfully expended. And I want to say that the committee has no knowledge that in this case the money was fraudulently expended or wrongfully expended.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. When the estimate of the Post-Office Department is made, is it not made upon the basis of a certain force and a certain amount of delivery? And has the Department authority to employ a larger force than the law authorizes, thus creating a deficiency?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman's question is a double question. I will answer it. In the first place, neither the Post-Office Department nor any other Department has the right to employ a single man whose employment is not authorized by law. That is true. But it is the universal practice—it has been and always will be, and that is the purpose of a deficiency bill—to bring up the odds and ends of expenditure by the different Departments of the Government. They are closed up in this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the gentleman from Georgia will not insist before the House that all that the head of a Department has to do is to go along and expend money according to his own discretion, and that then Congress must supply the deficiency. These public officers are bound by law like everybody else.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes; but "the gentleman from Georgia" will say, as he has just said to the gentleman from Tennessee, that if the head of a Department or any other public officer has spent money foolishly or wrongfully, nevertheless the contract or the expenditure exists, an obligation is created against the Government, and we are called upon to make an appropriation to meet it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Where does the gentleman get his authority for that statement?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If any gentleman does not like the appropriation proposed in the bill, then, in the language of the gentleman from Texas, the only thing for him to do is to move to strike it out and let the issue come, and we shall have to meet it.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does not the gentleman think it would be wise national legislation, as it has been held to be wise State legislation, to place a prohibition—in fact, a penal clause—in many of these appropriation bills, making it an offense for a public officer to expend money that has not been appropriated?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think perhaps that in some cases it might be well enough to do that. But the gentleman must remember that as a rule these heads of bureaus or Departments do not expend money unauthorized. They keep within the limits of the appropriation unless some contingency happens which necessarily, for the good of the service, drives them outside of the limit. And when such an officer is forced outside of the limit for the good of the service, certainly neither the gentleman from Tennessee nor any other man on this floor would accuse that head of a bureau or Department of being a swindler.

Mr. McMILLIN. My contention is that the Departments are governed by law and ought to operate within the law. As to this particular item, I would make this comment: This deficiency must have arisen since this Congress assembled; and if the Department officials did not have authority to expend this money, they ought to have come to Congress and obtained authority before undertaking to expend it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. And it should be stated further that the money must be expended in carrying into execution some law of Congress, not merely the wish of the head of a Department.

Mr. McMILLIN. Unquestionably that is so; otherwise the officer might run riot over the different fields of expenditure.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is no doubt about that. The Committee on Appropriations does not deny that proposition—

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Why, then, did they put in that item?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does the gentleman say that his proposition applies here?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The gentleman from North Dakota makes the charge. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has well said, the purpose of a deficiency appropriation bill is to meet just such emergencies as that presented in the present case. We all know that to carry out properly the free-delivery system for the remainder of this fiscal year this amount of money must be appropriated, and therefore the item in question should stay in the bill.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], in the course of his remarks, has seen fit to attack the letter carriers. I do not wish his attack to go unrebuked. I think it unmanly and unjust. Every man in this House, regardless of politics, knows that the letter carrier is always a welcome visitor at his home. He knows that they are an earnest, hard-working class of men—that they do their duty well. We have all seen them plodding through the snow in the winter and through the blazing sun in summer. Many of them wear the bronze badge of the Grand Army of the Republic. Many of them fought on the other side for a cause which they believed to be just, and for that they have my respect. And to attack them is not fair. Every man knows that they are faithful, honest, hard working, and I for one do not propose to let them be abused without defending them.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman tell us who has been abusing the letter carriers? They have not been abused.

Mr. BELKNAP. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I had no reference to the gentleman from Tennessee—none whatever. He could not have been present during the entire debate.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Does the gentleman refer to the "gentleman from Kentucky"?

Mr. BELKNAP. Pardon me, sir; you have evidently not been listening to me, because when I commenced my remarks I referred to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] sitting on my left.

Mr. GAINES. He is a Republican. You ought not to charge this side of the House with doing it.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Illinois evidently has a very imaginative mind, and he has drawn very heavily upon it.

Mr. BELKNAP. The gentleman from California says I have an imaginative mind. I refer him to his remarks when he opened this debate.

Mr. LOUD. I said he had a very imaginative mind, and I said in addition that he had drawn very heavily upon it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there has been a very large amount of discussion over a very questionable, small proposition.

A MEMBER. I think it is questionable.

Mr. BINGHAM. The letter-carrier service, in connection with free delivery in this country, covers an annual appropriation made under existing law of $13,274,000. I agree that the Post-Office Department should have kept itself within the limitation of that appropriation. But the promotions and increases in compensation under the statute from six to eight hundred dollars and from eight to nine hundred dollars and nine to ten hundred dollars have caused such increased expenditures that now, at the close of the present fiscal year, in an appropriation of upward of $13,000,000 there is a deficiency of $163,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I call the attention of my colleague to one fact?

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the gentleman will wait.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. No; I do not. That deficiency to my mind signifies nothing whatever. The service has not been extended beyond the limitations of the law.

Mr. LOUD. The deficiency comes by adding 376 carriers.

Mr. BINGHAM. I believe all that, and I agree with the gentleman that they should not have done it; but it has been in the interest of the people. If it ought to be condemned, the gentleman certainly has a right to condemn it, and I join with him in the condemnation; but what is the good of criticising an action of that kind beyond expressing our public condemnation? We passed our judgment that $13,000,000 ought to cover this service. The Department comes up and says, "We have a deficiency at the end of the year of $163,000." It has not been unwarrantably expended. It may have been unwisely expended, but the public have got the benefit, and why there should be so much discussion upon a proposition of this kind is something I can not understand. I put to the gentleman the proposition that in handling a great business covering thirteen or fourteen million dollars, if he comes within $163,000 of previous estimates, I with other gentlemen would say that he is a pretty good business man. The Department simply went beyond its limitations; but the money has been expended in the interest of the public service, and nobody has taken a cent that was not warranted. The public have received the benefit, and I can not conceive why there should be any criticism upon a proposition of this character.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, however much we may any of us be inclined to criticize the Postmaster-General and his subordinates for the result which is apparent in this appropriation, I believe when we come to consider the subject none of us will feel like taking the responsibility of striking it out of the bill. The Post-Office appropriation bill already passed by this House, and which, I believe, has become a law by the action of the President, ratifies for the coming fiscal year the present force of letter carriers throughout the country. The only question that can arise is as to the time which shall elapse between to-day, the 16th of June, and the beginning of the next fiscal year, on the 1st day of July.

Now, one of two things can happen. Either for that short period of time all the letter carriers or a sufficient number of the letter carriers selected from various cities and towns throughout the country may be placed upon furlough and their pay taken away from them for this fortnight, and the business of the country be more or less disorganized for this short time, or else they may go on under the direction of the Department and perform their service and perhaps have an action to recover their pay in the Court of Claims.

In the latter case, we shall have to pay this $163,000 in an appropriation to meet the judgment of the Court of Claims, while in the former case we shall have to disorganize the business of the country for two weeks and throw these men out of employment for that time, simply for the purpose of rebuking what some of us believe to have been an excess of authority on the part of the Postmaster-General.

Now, let us criticize that action all we please, but let us consider this particular appropriation as practical business men and let it stay in the bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] who has just spoken is the only one who has approached a correct understanding of the situation. To hear gentlemen on the other side and gentlemen on this side criticising the Postmaster-General as if he had been guilty of a violation of the law in exercising his own judgment as to the proportion of the fund put at his disposal which he should expend at a certain time in the year, it seems to me, is utterly absurd.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a moment.

The gentleman refers to this side of the House. The criticism passed by this side of the House was based upon the statement made by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], and the gentleman from North Dakota is responsible, and not this side of the House, for the charges that have been made.

Mr. BELKNAP. Well, I will say on one side of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. If the gentleman will allow me—

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not propose to have my time taken up by other speeches. Now, a certain amount of money was placed in the hands of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BINGHAM. Upward of $13,000,000.

Mr. BROMWELL. For the purpose of carrying on this free-delivery service. If he had seen proper to do it, he could have been absolutely within the law in expending nine-tenths of that money in the first month in the year, reserving the balance of it for the remaining eleven months.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. But the item to which I refer is an expenditure of $107,000 for incidentals when he was only allowed to expend $60,000 for the whole year.

Mr. SIMPSON. This disorder is very unseemly.

Mr. BROMWELL. I hope I will not be interrupted. I have only five minutes. There is no use in getting angry about this at all. I assure you that I am not. Now, the situation was just this: The Postmaster-General went ahead with the authority that he had the right to exercise, to employ additional force if he chose for the first few months—the first six months, we will say—of this present fiscal year. He notified the country that if that force was to be continued for the entire year there would be a deficiency.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. What portion of the country was notified?

Mr. BROMWELL. He did not continue that force without first giving a warning to the country that there would be a deficiency, and in order to prevent that deficiency he notified the postmasters and the business communities all over the country that on a certain day he proposed to cut down the force to a sufficient amount to bring it within the appropriation for the rest of the year.

You all know that. It is a matter of history. Now, what happened? Every member of this House on both sides, acting upon the appeals made to him from his constituents, if he represented a city district, came here and upon the floor of the House entered his protest against the proposed reduction of this force. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has alluded to the fact that I was a kicker. I was; and I think I represented the interests of my constituents in kicking against a reduction of the carrier force in the city of Cincinnati. I propose to kick as long as it will prevent an interference with the proper performance of the carrier service in my city or in any other city in this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what followed? There was almost unanimous consent of this House to the understanding that the Postmaster-General might be permitted to continue the force at its present number, with the distinct understanding that when the deficiency bill came into the House, provision should be made for this item.

Mr. LOVE. How does the gentleman arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. BROMWELL. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. LOVE. I should like to know how the gentleman reaches that conclusion.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, if we are going to hold responsible the Postmaster-General for this $163,000 and to prefer charges against him and condemn him, as gentlemen say, why do they not file charges against the President for $2,500 carried in the same bill which he expended over and above what the law allows? Why do you not go to the Secretary of State and impeach him on the $33,500 in the deficiency bill? Why do you not impeach the Secretary of the Treasury for the $1,757,000 provided in this deficiency bill? And so with every one of these items. In any deficiency bill we make up the amount that each item exceeds the expenditure in excess of what has been appropriated for that item. What has been expended in this case has been expended for the public good.

Mr. CANNON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I said nothing about the letter carriers, but most of the discussion since has turned on them. I singled out a certain item of the Post-Office appropriation bill, viz, "Incidentals." For that we appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1898, $60,000. And yet, on the 24th of January last, as shown in the hearings, the late Postmaster-General wrote a letter (Document No. 256, second session Fifty-fifth Congress) to us, transmitted through the Treasury, in which he said that he had then expended for that one item $107,000. He should have given us notice in December if he needed more money, but he said nothing to us until he had expended, in January, $47,000 more than we authorized to be expended until the 30th day of this month, still in the future. That is what I complain of.

There is a distinct violation of law—the expenditure of $107,000 from the 1st day of July, 1897, to the 24th of January, 1898, when we only authorized the expenditure of $60,000 in the twelve months from July 1, 1897, to June 30, 1898.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me three minutes?

Mr. CANNON. Just a moment. I want to conclude this item to-night. Now, I ask that debate may be closed on this paragraph and amendments in ten minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman give me three minutes?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will say that I do not like to object to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, but I want more time than that, because there have been some propositions made concerning the legal rights of the Postmaster-General that are so extraordinary that it strikes me there ought to be an opportunity for some counter statements, and the gentleman ought to give more time.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask that it be twenty minutes; and then I will move that the House adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FLEMING. I object.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will ask to make it twenty-five minutes.

Mr. FLEMING. Let us adjourn; it is after 5 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. I want to limit debate before I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that debate on this paragraph and amendment be limited to twenty-five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Twenty minutes.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman fixed it at twenty-five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAYERS. To be equally divided.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10691, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want again to ask unanimous consent that next Tuesday be set apart for the consideration of the following bills, reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs—

Mr. MAGUIRE. What time?

Mr. HULL. The bill H. R. 10424.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is that the same request that was made this morning?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. While I did not object this morning, I did state that I thought when this request was made for unanimous consent for the consideration of bills, that we ought to be put in possession of the bill before consent is given, so that we should determine whether we should legislate or not by consent. I would suggest to the gentleman that I do not want to stand in the way of any proper bill, but I do not like, where large increases are to be made, for measures to come up in that way.

Mr. SIMPSON. I would state to the gentleman from Tennessee that I am informed that certain of the bills have not been agreed to by the whole committee, and they are not unanimous reports of the committee by any means.

Mr. McMILLIN. That shows the importance of the House knowing what the bills are before consent is given and they are taken up. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR] who objected this morning is not in his seat.

Mr. HULL. But, Mr. Speaker, he withdrew his objection and suggested that the numbers of the bills should be printed in the RECORD, so that members of the House might examine the bills before they come up.

Mr. GAINES. When were the bills presented?

Mr. HULL. The bills I propose to call up are those that have been reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. GAINES. When were they agreed to?

Mr. HULL. Some of them were reported more than ten days ago.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Is the bill 2419 one of them?

Mr. HULL. This bill for the Inspector-General's Department is H. R. 10424.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I have not the number of that. Is the bill 2419 in the list?

Mr. HULL. It has been reported by the committee.

Mr. GAINES. Still the gentleman has not given me an answer to my question.

Mr. HULL. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. GAINES. When did the committee agree to these bills?

Mr. HULL. The committee agreed on this bill for the Inspector-General's Department several days ago.

Mr. BARTLETT. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman will let us fix a day for the consideration of these bills; and I want to read the numbers of them, so that members may know what they are.

Mr. GAINES. The reason why I asked the question was because my colleague [Mr. Cox] has been absent for ten days, so that if any bills have been reported since that time, they have not been reported unanimously.

Mr. HULL. Some of these bills were agreed to since he left and others before he left.

Mr. BARTLETT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. DINGLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10692) supplemental to acts relating to internal revenue, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1583); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4456) to designate Gladstone, Mich., a support of entry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1584); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. RIXEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 917) for the relief of D. W. Price, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1585); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. McEWAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2677) for the relief of the University of Kansas, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1586); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9766) for the relief of John P. Murphy, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1587); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10699) for the relief of Samuel Liverpool; and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. OSBORNE: A resolution (House Res. No. 323) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to notify the House why checks and drafts payable in the city of Denver, Colo., are not receivable in payment for United States bonds—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a resolution (House Res. No. 324) of inquiry concerning the purchasers and actual recipients of United States bonds—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 10711) to grant an honorable discharge to Canada Peck, late private Company I, Third Tennessee Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HEPBURN: A bill (H. R. 10712) to remove the charges of desertion against David A. Wiles—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHATTUC: A bill (H. R. 10713) restoring name of John H. Meeker, late first-class pilot on United States steamers Tempest and Oriole, to the United States pension rolls—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10714) for the relief of Martha Potter, widow of Benjamin F. Potter, late corporal, Company K, Thirty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10715) authorizing muster in of Joseph R. Cobb as first lieutenant and quartermaster of the Forty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: A bill (H. R. 10716) to pension John S. Draper—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH: A bill (H. R. 10717) granting a pension to Sumner H. Tarbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10718) granting a pension to Matthew Bier—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10719) granting a pension to Mary E. Wilkinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WARD: A bill (H. R. 10720) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James H. Epps—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAYTON: A bill (H. R. 10721) for the relief of Stephen R. Stafford, captain, Fifteenth Infantry, United States Army—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. FOOTE: Petitions of the Society of Willing Workers of the Advent Christian Church, Loyal Temperance Legion, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the "Y" Society, all of Sandyhill, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEWIS of Washington: Petition of the superintendent and teachers of the public schools of Spokane, Wash., for the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MCALEER: Resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, favoring the passage of Senate bill No. 3027 and House bill No. 6703, for pure flour—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: Paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to John S. Draper, a soldier in the war with Mexico—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE: Petition of the the First Reformed Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, Pa., for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 17, 1898.

Prayer by Rev. W. R. STRICKLEN, D. D., of the city of Washington.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the bill (S. 3209) making Sabine Pass and Port Arthur, in the State of Texas, supports of entry and delivery, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 10713) to provide for the construction of a bridge across Niagara River; and

A bill (H. R. 10692) supplemental to acts relating to internal revenue.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 4763) to provide an American register for the steamers Specialist and Unionist;

A bill (H. R. 1307) to correct the military record of G. K. Knowlton, United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 1801) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Clifford;

TARGET RANGE AT JEFFERSON BARRACKS, MO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, asking that the appropriation of $18,000 made for the purchase of land for a target range for the use of troops stationed at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., be continued for another year; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Commissary-General of Subsistence, together with draft of a bill to increase the efficiency of the Subsistence Department of the Army, and recommending favorable consideration by Congress; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Pattern Makers' National League of North America, praying for the immediate construction of the Nicaragua Canal; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

Mr. KYLE. I present a short memorial relating to Senate bill No. 4698, to establish a bureau of domestic science. I move that the memorial be printed as a document for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, to report it without amendment. I give notice that to-morrow, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WHITE. I am unable to hear the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DAVIS. I give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. FAIRBANKS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2338) for the relief of the Marion Trust Company, administrator of the estate of Samuel Milliken, deceased, of Indianapolis, Ind., for services rendered as mail contractor on route No. 9704, between Paducah, Ky., and Iuka, Miss., in the year 1861, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10806) to amend section 10 of an act approved April 22, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the subject was referred, reported an amendment relative to a change in the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane in certain cases, and for other purposes, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

OFFICIAL RECORDS OF UNION AND CONFEDERATE ARMIES.

Mr. LODGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives in relation to the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, to report it with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to furnish one complete set of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate of the Fifty-fifth Congress not already entitled by law to receive the same; and he is further authorized to use for this purpose such incomplete sets as remain unsold or uncalled for by the beneficiaries designated to receive them under the authority contained in the several acts of Congress providing for the distribution and sale of this publication: Provided, That the Secretary of War may call upon the Public Printer to print and bind such parts of said work as will enable him to complete the sets herein provided for.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to add to the resolution the following:

The provision in the "Act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government," approved August 5, 1893, providing for the printing and binding of 500 copies of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion for the use of Senators, Members, and Delegates of the Fifty-second Congress, shall not be construed to prevent the binding of any public document which would otherwise be provided for by the "Act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 13, 1895, which provides "that each Senator and Representative shall be entitled to the binding in half morocco, or material no more expensive, of but one copy of each public document to which he may be entitled."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was concurred in.

PUBLIC LAND DECISIONS.

Mr. LODGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report a joint resolution providing for the printing of additional copies of certain volumes of Decisions of the Department of the Interior Relating to Public Lands for sale and distribution, which I ask to have read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 175) providing for the printing of additional copies of certain volumes of Decisions of the Department of the Interior Relating to Public Lands, for sale and distribution, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc. That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print from the stereotype plates 300 copies each of volumes 2, 3, 4, and 5, and 150 copies each of volumes 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 11 of Decisions of the Department of the Interior Relating to Public Lands, for the use of and for sale by the Department of the Interior, and 500 copies each of volumes 20 to 23, inclusive, and of the Digest of volumes 1 to 23, to be delivered to the Superintendent of Documents for distribution to depositories of public documents in the several States and Territories.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING LAW.

Mr. LODGE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report a bill to amend "An act providing for the public printing and binding and distribution of public documents," approved January 13, 1895. I ask that the bill may be read.

The bill (S. 4783) to amend "An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 13, 1895, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That section 73, page 614 of volume 23, United States Statutes at Large, paragraph 5 on that page, be amended as follows:

In line 1 of paragraph 5, strike out "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "forty-five;" strike out "twenty," in line 3 of said paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof "thirty," so as to make paragraph 5, on page 614, section 73 of the United States Statutes at Large, read as follows:

"Of the Report of the Commissioner of Education, 45,000 copies; 5,000 for the Senate, 10,000 for the House, and 30,000 for distribution by the Commissioner of Education."

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have several adverse reports on House bills from the Committee on Pensions, concerning some of which I desire to make some brief remarks in explanation of the action of the committee. First, I report adversely three House bills, the claimant in each case having died since the bill passed the House of Representatives. The bills are as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7506) granting a pension to Susan E. Fielder;

A bill (H. R. 3612) to increase the pension of Thomas D. Porter; and

A bill (H. R. 6078) for the relief of Abel B. Fowler.

I move that these bills be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am also directed by the Committee on Pensions to report adversely the following three bills, it having been found, upon investigation, that the claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions; and I want to say to my brother Senators that, to protect Congress and the country from imposition in this particular, the Committee on Pensions have adopted a rule, which they propose to live up to, that they will not give consideration to pension bills pending in the Bureau of Pensions, where they properly and legitimately belong. A great many such bills have been introduced in the Senate, and they are laid aside by the committee and will not be given consideration. I therefore move that the following bills be indefinitely postponed:

A bill (H. R. 5035) increasing the pension of B. F. Wonder;

A bill (H. R. 2506) granting a pension to Martha E. Graves; and

A bill (H. R. 4180) granting an increase of pension to Newton W. Cooper.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am also directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1257) granting a pension to Louisa Pasquet, to report it adversely, this pension having been allowed in the Pension Bureau since the bill passed the House of Representatives. Although pressure has been made upon the committee to report the bill favorably, which grants a larger pension than was granted in the Bureau, the committee are restrained from doing so by the rule adopted by the committee, that claims passed upon by the Bureau of Pensions, whether allowed or rejected, will not be entertained until a period of at least one year shall have elapsed. I desire that Senators will take note of that fact and not introduce bills which have been allowed or rejected by the Pension Bureau during a period of less than one year from the time the bills were introduced in Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to indefinitely postpone the bill just reported by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am also directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7596) granting an increase of pension to Henry Schnetberg, of Indiana, Pa., to submit an adverse report thereon, it having been ascertained, upon investigation, that the original pension in this case was granted by special act of Congress; and although heretofore Congress has in several instances not only granted pensions by special act, but increased pensions by special act, the committee have come to the conclusion that that is a bad practice. The evil was emphasized in a case to which I desire to call attention. The Committee on Pensions had before them a bill to increase the pension of one John Taylor. A great deal of pressure was exercised upon the committee to pass that bill, but upon investigation it was ascertained that this man had received three increases in the Pension Bureau. Failing to receive further increase, he came to Congress and had his pension increased by special act from $10 to $12, again by special act from $12 to $16, and again by special act from $16 to $24; and the bill before the committee proposes to increase the pension to $50 a month.

Mr. President, here was a case where on three different occasions an increase had been granted by special act of Congress, and yet a further increase was being urged. An investigation disclosed the fact that this man is now, and has been for a long time, employed by the Government at a salary of $60 a month. That is an abuse which we are trying to correct; and for that reason the committee have adopted a rule that they will not hereafter recommend increases by special act in cases where the original pension was so granted.

I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am also directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4193) granting a pension to Eliza Houghton, daughter of N. E. Houghton, a soldier of the Indian war, 1862, to submit an adverse report thereon.

This bill proposes to grant a pension to a daughter, the rule of the committee being that bills proposing to pension children of soldiers will not be entertained, except in a case where the child is idiotic, deformed, or otherwise mentally or physically incapacitated from birth or early childhood, and then only in case of destitution. This is not such a bill, and the committee, therefore, report it adversely. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am also directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4973) for the relief of Mary J. Brown, to submit an adverse report thereon.

The bill proposes to pension an "alleged" widow, the pension to accrue when the fact of her marriage to the soldier and present widowhood is established. The committee does not think that Congress ought to go into the matter of pensioning "alleged" widows, they to prove that widowhood exists at the time the pension is granted. I therefore move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question about one of the statements made by him, and that is in regard to compelling the applicant to wait a year after the rejection of the case by the Pension Office. What does the committee propose to do with a case where a claim is rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground of some want of technical proof, and at the same time there is no question of the right to a pension? In some cases claims are rejected by the Pension Office at the request of the petitioners, in order that they may have the cases come before the Pension Committee promptly; and the Pension Office rejects them sometimes in doubtful cases with the expectation that Congress will grant the relief. Is it proposed in those cases that the applicant shall not be permitted to come to the Committee on Pensions for relief?

Mr. GALLINGER. The observation of the Senator from Massachusetts is worthy of consideration, and it may lead, I will say to him, to an amendment of the rule adopted by the committee. What the Senator suggests had not occurred to me as chairman of the committee.

I will say to the Senator that the rule of the committee was adopted largely because of the very fact that he has mentioned, that we found it was a common thing for soldiers, or their representatives in Congress, to go to the Pension Bureau and ask for the rejection of claims on the ground that they could get them through Congress easier than through the Pension Bureau. A number of such instances came to my attention. It seemed to the committee that some reasonable time ought to elapse between the rejection of a claim by the Pension Bureau and its presentation to Congress, for the reason that possibly some new testimony might develop and the case might be got through the Bureau which would be to the advantage of the soldier as it might carry arrears. The adoption of this rule was partly in the interest of the soldier and partly to protect Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the rule?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will read the rule in full. It is as follows:

1. Consideration will not be given to any bill which has not first been submitted to the Pension Bureau for adjudication unless conclusive proof is presented that the claimant has no pensionable status before the Bureau, nor will consideration be given during the pending of claims in the Bureau. Claims passed upon by the Bureau, whether allowed or rejected, will not be entertained by this committee until a period of at least one year has elapsed.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I see great force in his reasoning, and I am in favor, as a general rule, of what he has suggested. Certainly where the case is in the nature of an appeal to Congress, or to the Committee on Pensions from the Pension Office, it is eminently just and proper; but there are cases—and every Senator must have knowledge of them—where there is no doubt the Pension Bureau itself would grant the pension if it could but for some technical rule of mere evidence which prevents, although the fact may be established by abundant testimony other than that which the strictness of their rule or the law requires. I suggest whether the committee should not preserve to itself something like this in that rule: "Unless in cases of special exception satisfactory to the committee," or something of that kind. That is what I wish to suggest.

Mr. GALLINGER. I promise the Senator from Massachusetts that his suggestion shall have careful consideration, and probably the rule will be amended to cover such exceptional cases as he has called attention to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions in regard to a case of this kind: A soldier applied under the old law and is granted a pension. He applied for an increase, and it was refused; it has not been granted under the old law up to the amount of $12, the Pension Office claiming that the disabilities were not sufficient to justify an increase to that amount. The claimant has not applied under the law of June 27, 1890, under which, upon the showing of proper evidence of disability not originating in the service, but not due to vicious habits, he can receive a pension up to $12. Would the Committee on Pensions, when he had not applied under the law of June 27, 1890, consider his application for an increase?

Mr. GALLINGER. In such a case the committee would insist that the claimant should exhaust his remedy in the Pension Bureau under the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I supposed.

Mr. GALLINGER. By which he might get a further increase; and I will say to the Senator further that even if he did that and received his increase to $12, if he felt aggrieved so far as his application under the general law was concerned and should choose to come to Congress, the committee would examine the case with a view to the equities in his original application under the general law.

Mr. COCKRELL. After that?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Our rule provides for that.

I have one other adverse report to make from the Committee on Pensions on the bill (H. R. 4251) granting a pension to Margaret Thomas, which is a case where it has been disclosed that there are two widows and that the first widow is not legally divorced. The committee does not feel that such a bill ought to pass, and I move that it be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM CHRISTENBERRY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report favorably the bill (H. R. 7696) granting an increase of pension to William Christenberry, to which I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]. This is a proposition to pension an old man who is, I think, 89 years of age. I understand the Senator from Tennessee desires the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BATE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name William Christenberry, late a member of Captain Miller's Company, Tennessee Volunteers, Indian war, at $20 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. HATCH.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have one other favorable report from the Committee on Pensions, and, as probably not much further pension legislation will be enacted at this session, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is the bill (S. 4744) granting a pension to Mary E. Hatch.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary E. Hatch, dependent stepmother of Byron B. Hatch, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment Vermont Infantry Volunteers, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. TURNER. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 346) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate not exceeding $500,000 to purchase, or acquire by condemnation proceedings, a site for a building to be erected thereon, and to cause to be erected at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, custom-house, land office, post-office, and other Government offices in that city, with fireproof vaults extending to each story; the site, and the building thereon when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the cost of $500,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. FLAG OF ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTH NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9538) to restore to the State of New York the flag carried by the One hundred and fourth New York Volunteer Infantry, to report it without amendment, and I ask that it may be acted upon now. It is a brief bill, of minor consequence, and, if passed, it will then be out of the way.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 4784) to extend Sixteenth street, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 4785) to amend section 5 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable goods without appraisement; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 4786) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the judicial district of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 4787) to amend section 4133 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill (S. 4788) granting a pension to Emily H. Wood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4789) for the relief of John T. Hefferman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 4790) to increase the force of the Ordnance Department of the Regular Army and to provide chief ordnance officers for the Volunteer Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 176) tendering the thanks of Congress to Asst. Naval Constructor Richmond Pearson Hobson and to the volunteer crew of the Merrimac, and authorizing the transfer of Asst. Naval Constructor Hobson from the Construction Corps to the line of the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment for the relief of August Bolten and Gustave Richelieu, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANTLE submitted an amendment relative to the holding of the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Montana at Butte, Mont., etc., intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

THE NICARAGUAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate the examinations of Rear-Admiral John G. Walker, Prof. L. M. Haupt, and Gen. Peter C. Hains, before the Select Committee on the Nicaragua Canal, on the 15th, 16th, and 17th days of June, 1893, relating to said canal.

LISTS OF JUDGMENTS AND CLAIMS ALLOWED.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments rendered against the United States by the circuit and district courts of the United States under the provisions of the act to provide for bringing suits against the Government of the United States, approved March 3, 1887.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases requiring an appropriation by Congress.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those heretofore reported to Congress at the present session, up to and including Monday, June 20 instant.

Also a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims not heretofore reported to Congress.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call up the conference report on the bankruptcy bill. I merely desire to have the report read. I shall not ask for action on it or discussion of it to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read. The Secretary proceeded to read the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 1035) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. STEWART. I inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts if he has called up that conference report for final action?

Mr. HOAR. I stated before the Senator came in that it was not my purpose to ask for action on it to-day.

Mr. STEWART. Let it be printed.

Mr. HOAR. It has been printed in the RECORD and as a document.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to the conference report being read, provided we can have notice when it is to be called up.

Mr. HOAR. It will not be called up this week.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to ask whether it is the object and purpose to press the report for final action?

Mr. HOAR. Not this week.

Mr. CULLOM. I mean during the session.

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope it will be finally disposed of at this session.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; the committee will ask to have it considered early next week.

Mr. MILLS. The conference report is printed in the RECORD now, and I do not see the necessity of having it read.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senate will give unanimous consent to waive the formal reading, I have no objection to that course; but I do not know that the Senate will do that. The report has been printed in the RECORD and printed as a document. If the Senate, under those circumstances, will waive the formal reading of the report, I shall be very much gratified; but I do not know that that can be done. Nothing will be gained, however, by reading the report.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the report be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given to the request of the Senator from Iowa, that the reading of the conference report be dispensed with? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

FOG SIGNAL NEAR SABINE BANK, TEXAS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1114) for the establishment of a light and fog signal on or near Sabine Bank, Texas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $50,000 to establish a light-house and fog-signal station on or near Sabine Bank.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIGHTWOOD RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 10280) to require the Brightwood Railway Company to abandon its overhead trolley on Kenyon street, between Seventh and Fourteenth streets.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was to add to the bill the following additional section:

Sec. 2. That said railway company, for the purpose only of equipping said branch with underground electric power, shall have the right to issue its bonds bearing interest not to exceed 6 per cent per annum, payable at such time as the officers of the company may deem expedient.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following additional section:

SEC. 3. That the Brightwood Railway Company is hereby directed to sell four coupon tickets for 25 cents for use over the lines of said company and the Capital Traction Company and to redeem the coupons when presented by said Capital Traction Company; and the provisions of section 5 of the act approved February 26, 1893, entitled "An act to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia," which relate to the issue, use, and redemption of said tickets and coupons in the case of the Brightwood Railway and the Metropolitan Railroad companies, and the penalty for violation of the provisions of said section of said act, and the recovery of said penalty, and the authority and jurisdiction of certain courts to enforce the requirements and provisions of said section, shall apply to the issue, use, and redemption of coupon tickets on the lines of said Brightwood Railway and Capital Traction companies; and the aforesaid provisions of said section are hereby made a part of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Michigan who has charge of the bill tell the Senate where is the line of street or streets covered by the bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. This is a little branch of the Brightwood road—the road which runs out Seventh street. The Brightwood Company was permitted some years ago to run this branch from Seventh street, on Kenyon street, to connect with the Fourteenth street line at the end of the tracks of the Capital Traction Company, and they put up an overhead trolley.

Mr. HALE. They have an overhead trolley?

Mr. McMILLAN. They have an overhead trolley. Of course Congress allowed them to use the overhead trolley outside of the city limits.

Mr. HALE. Is this inside or outside the District line?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is beyond the boundary, upon the heights. The purpose of the bill is to compel the company to take down their trolley and to put in underground electric motive power for about four blocks.

Mr. HALE. The bill does not apply to any street in the city limits, as it is called?

Mr. McMILLAN. No; it is beyond. It is to compel them to take down the trolley.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6897) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 6, 9, 13, 18, 20, 21, 22, 29, 30, 31, 33, 38, 41, 46, 47, 48, 50, 51, 54, 59, 62, 75, 78, 81, 82, 83, 91, 92, 93, 98, 99, 101, 102, 104, 105, 106, 108, 111, 115, 116, 119, 123, 124, 129, 130, 135, 136, 137, 138, 141, 142, 173, 174, 175, and 176.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 8, 10, 15, 16, 19, 32, 33, 39, 43, 44, 45, 49, 52, 53, 55, 57, 64, 67, 68, 77, 80, 87, 88, 89, 90, 94, 95, 100, 103, 107, 113, 121, 125, 126, 127, 131, 134, 169, 170, 171, 172, and 177; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$34,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For repairs and equipment of the morgue, $1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$160,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$14,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$46,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$41,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$150,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the purchase or condemnation of necessary land, and preparing plans for the construction of a sewage-pumping station under the improved project for sewage disposal in the District of Columbia, $25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$50,000;" and strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 1, page 16 of the bill, down to and including line 5, same page; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after said amendment, as a separate paragraph, the following:

"For grading and regulating Kalorama avenue between Eighteenth street and Columbia road, $500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$87,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$145,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That not exceeding the sum of $15,000 of the amount so provided may be expended under the immediate direction of the Commissioners without contract; and said $15,000 shall be so expended and the accounts thereof so kept as to show the comparative cost of hand sweeping by day-labor and under contract;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$166,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "investigation," in line 3, down to and including the word "dollars," in line 8 of said amendment, and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following: "of the feasibility and propriety of filtering the water supply of Washington and to submit to Congress a full and detailed report thereon, and to meet all necessary expenses of said investigation, $3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the sum named in lines 19, 20, and 21 and insert in lieu thereof "$297,210.50;" and strike out the sum named in lines 24, 25, and 26 and insert in lieu thereof "$297,210.50;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$94,120;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$508,780;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,035;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,250;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$45,977;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in lines 4 and 5 of said amendment insert "$500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$47,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 140, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 79, 80, 128, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, and 167 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,
S. M. CULLOM,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM W. GROUT,
MAHLON PITNEY,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, perhaps I should say a word.

This is only a partial report. There are still some questions in difference between the two Houses, the first one being amendment No. 12, relating to the municipal library in the District. Then there are a series of amendments relating to electric lighting. The Senate put on amendments Nos. 73 and 74, relating to this subject, providing for the taking down of overhead wires and inserting in lieu thereof conduits, and a number of provisions and regulations relating to the laying down of conduits in the District. The conferees on the part of the House desired to enlarge the scope of that amendment, but to what extent we were not able to ascertain. They were not prepared with any counter proposition in detail, but they seemed to have an idea that it was a wise thing perhaps to regulate the whole question on this bill. However, they made no proposition in detail, so that those amendments are in disagreement.

We also inserted a provision under amendment No. 128, relating to the removal of telephone poles and the establishment of conduits for the use of telephones. That matter is still in difference. It was not agreed to between the two Houses, the House conferees declining to agree to our amendment.

All questions relating to charities in this District are also still in difference. The House, in the bill as originally passed, provided for a lump sum to be expended by the District Commissioners, adding some legislation relating to the exclusion of sectarian institutions from the benefits of these appropriations. The Senate, in lieu of the general provision and the exclusion and limitation, appropriated in detail for the several charitable institutions of the District as provided for last year. The House conferees decline to accept our detailed appropriation unless we will eliminate what they call sectarian institutions from its benefits. We were not prepared to do that, and that is still in disagreement.

All the other matters in difference have been agreed to, the House receding from its disagreement to our amendment relating to the increased water supply and agreeing to it with a slight modification of the amount, but not material. They also agree substantially to our proposed enlargement of the system of sewerage, we being obliged to yield one rather important provision, as I thought, namely, authorizing the Commissioners of the District to make a contract for the erection of a pumping station. They thought that was premature, and we finally yielded it, making a provision, however, for detailed plans for the pumping station and for the acquisition of land by purchase or its condemnation under the statute.

These are the general provisions of the bill. I shall be glad to answer any question any Senator may desire to ask.

Mr. STEWART. What became of the amendments in regard to bridges across Rock Creek?

Mr. ALLISON. Those are still in disagreement. The amendments relating to the bridge on Massachusetts avenue extended, and also Connecticut avenue extended, are still in disagreement. The House conferees were not prepared to acquiesce at present in those amendments.

Mr. STEWART. I hope they will do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

SISETON AND WAHPETON BANDS OF SIOUX.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears no objection; and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Senator from South Dakota to yield to me that I may call up a little bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

WILLIAM T. GODWIN.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1618) to authorize the President to place William T. Godwin on the retired list with the rank of first lieutenant.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President of the United States to appoint William T. Godwin, late a first lieutenant in Tenth Infantry Regiment, United States Army, a first lieutenant in the Army, and place him on the retired list with that rank.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. TYRE.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7314) for the relief of John B. Tyre.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay John B. Tyre $113, it being the amount improperly paid on account of expense of the enlistment of Edwin A. Tyre, Company D, Forty-seventh Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORDELL B. GREEN.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 3243) for the relief of Cordell B. Green, of Company D, Sixteenth Michigan Infantry. It will take but a moment. It is to correct the record of a soldier.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOMBIGBEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4741) to authorize the construction of a bridge over Tombigbee River, in the State of Mississippi.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 15, after the word "bridge," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That until the Secretary of War shall approve the location and plan of the said bridge the same shall not be commenced or built, and any change in the location or plan before or after completion of the bridge shall be subject to his approval: Provided further, That the said bridge shall be so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of boats through or under said structure, and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, at the expense of the owners thereof, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals as the Light-House Board may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 8, after the word "reserve," to strike out "and the right to require any changes in said structure at the expense of said county, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interests require it, is also reserved;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 5. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1073) to provide for the construction of a bridge across Niagara River was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 10692) supplemental to acts relating to internal revenue was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 15th instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 95) instructing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Ohio the flags of certain regiments of Ohio Volunteer Infantry; also to restore to the State of New York the flag carried by the One hundred and thirteenth New York Volunteer Infantry.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 16th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 4676) for the protection of homestead settlers who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war;

An act (S. 4740) to provide American registers for the steamers Victoria, Olympia, Arizona, Columbia, Argyle, and Tacoma; and

An act (S. 4749) to provide an American register for the steamer Arkadia.

SISSETON AND WAHPETON BANDS OF SIOUX.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived yesterday I was endeavoring to present some considerations why I thought this bill should not pass. In stating the historical facts in relation to the case I omitted one or two which I think should be mentioned, perhaps. It seemed curiously coincident that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] should this morning ask for a list of judgments on account of Indian depredations required to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States and which can not be taken from annuity funds, showing that the policy of the treaty of 1853, which was a local policy as respects these four bands of Indians, has long since become a part of the general and settled course of our Government in treating with the Indians.

I also omitted to mention that although the statute of 1863, to which I have alluded, provided for the payment of damages to citizens on account of these depredations or on account of the massacre, the first appropriation act provided that only two-thirds of the annuities should be applied to their payment, leaving one-third of the annuities for the two years to be applied to such purposes as the treaties provided for.

There is another singular fact connected with the history of this case, which is that at the same session of Congress and within a very few days after making provision for the settlement and adjustment of these claims the Congress of the United States made specific provision for dealing with the land in the State of Minnesota belonging to these tribes or bands. It provided that those lands should be appraised and sold and the proceeds devoted to the civilization and support of these people who so recently committed the massacre. It provided also for the peaceful and quiet removal of the Indians to some point beyond any organized State, there being at that time an abundance of public land not within any State organization. So even at that time, or immediately succeeding the massacre, the Congress of the United States undertook to make such provision as they thought wise and proper for these Indians. The act to which I have alluded, and which is before me, is found in the twelfth volume of the Statutes at Large, page 819.

I was also calling attention yesterday to the treaty of 1867, and I tried to show that that treaty had an important bearing upon the fate of these Indians and on the disposition of the Congress of the United States respecting them. The Indians, after the massacre, having a claim to certain lands in what is now called North Dakota, perhaps extending partially into South Dakota, immediately fled into that region, leaving their former habitat and locality in Minnesota. They went to what was then a remote region in the Northwest. In pursuance of the policy of 1863, as found in the statute of March 3, the Government of the United States undertook to reclaim these wandering bands and, if possible, bring them into a condition where they would be self-supporting; and this was the origin of the treaty of 1867, that treaty being intended for the benefit of the Indians and not for their detriment.

It is a misnomer to say that we undertook the making of the treaty for the purpose of securing land belonging to the Indians. The purpose of the Government of the United States was precisely the reverse of it. It was to gather the Indians upon reservations in order that they might become self-supporting through agriculture and to provide them with implements, and so on. The treaty was made in 1867, during an exciting political period in our own country. It was the reconstruction period, so called. It was a treaty made under the Administration of President Johnson, who had many political enemies in this body at that time, or at least there were many Senators who were not in accord with him politically and were disposed to criticize whatever he did. The treaty was made by Mr. Bogy, of St. Louis, then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and was made in this city. A gentleman by the name of Watson, a highly intelligent man, participated in the making of the treaty.

It has been said of this treaty that when it came to the Senate it was greatly modified and changed before ratification. It was modified in some particulars, but in no essential particular. The original treaty provided that the Indians should be placed upon two reservations, both of those reservations being on lands to which they claimed the possessory title, but which was disputed by the Government of the United States. One portion of the Sissetons and Wahpetons were placed, under the treaty, on a reservation defined in the treaty, called the Lake Traverse Reservation. Another portion of them were provided for at a place called Devils Lake Reservation. The two reservations were a considerable distance apart. It was provided that the people at the Lake Traverse Reservation should have an agent to supervise their operations, and that as soon as 500 of them could be gathered together at Devils Lake then they also were to have an agent, showing that it was the object and purpose of the treaty to gather up the wandering bands and get them in a position where the Government of the United States could educate them and provide them with the means necessary to teach them agriculture.

The treaty as reported by the commissioners provided that the people at Lake Traverse should have $350,000 the first year to engage in farming, and that there should be a diminution of that sum for two or three years until it was reduced to $50,000, I think. It has been said in criticism of the Senate that because the Senate struck out these large sums of money, therefore it was hostile to the aim and purpose of those who made the treaty, whereas it was shown, as has frequently been shown since, that there is nothing so improvident as to put into the hands of five or six hundred Indians—because that is all there were—$350,000 in a single year for farming implements. The Senate, I think wisely, provided that they should go upon the reservations and, in the discretion of the Government, certain sums should be allotted to them each year for the purpose of their civilization, and under that provision, thus modified by the Senate, these two bands, or portions of them, first settled at Lake Traverse and next at Devils Lake.

Senators who are interested in this matter, if any of them are, will find in this report, page 17, that under this treaty the first appropriation for the support of the Indians was $32,000, which was a much wiser and better and more economical method of dealing with them than to give $350,000. The next year it was $60,000; for some reason, the next year only $10,000, then $50,000, then $75,000, and so on.

Mr. SPOONER. Did it mention the prior treaty?

Mr. ALLISON. It did not mention the prior treaties, but it mentioned the fact that there had been a massacre, etc., and that the people who were thus being provided for were friendly Indians who did not share in the massacre at New Ulm. It alluded to it in that sense. But the spirit of the treaty is wholly a friendly one. It was in the nature of an agreement and understanding respecting the failure to have provided these annuities from year to year as provided in the original treaty of 1851. Perhaps I should read some of the whereases of the treaty, in view of the question submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin. I read from page 41. I have a different numbered document. Mine is No. 9. I think it is Document No. 68. This is one of the inducements to the making of the treaty and a part of the recital as to the motive for which it was made:

Whereas Congress, in confiscating the Sioux annuities and reservations made no provision for the support of these, the friendly portion of the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands, and it is believed [that] they have been suffered to remain homeless wanderers, frequently subject to intense suffering from want of subsistence and clothing to protect them from the rigors of a high northern latitude, although at all times prompt in rendering service when called upon to repel hostile raids and to punish depredations committed by hostile Indians upon the persons and property of the whites.

Mr. SPOONER. If it will not disturb the Senator from Iowa, I should be glad if he would refer me to the act of Congress confiscating the annuities.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the act of February 16, 1863. I have it here. The object of the statute was to provide payment to the citizens of Minnesota who had suffered losses because of the massacre, and in order to provide the means to do it they used two-thirds of the annuities for two years, the last year and the coming year, and then appointed a commission, and afterwards paid the money out of the Treasury of the United States, amounting in all to about $1,320,000. I said $1,900,000 yesterday. On looking more carefully at the appropriations, I find I was mistaken as to the amount. Two hundred thousand dollars of it was taken out of the annuities and the remainder out of the Treasury, with the expectation of reimbursement, of course, from the annuity fund as provided and agreed to by the treaty of 1853. There was, therefore, no violation of any treaty or agreement with any of the Indians in using this fund for that purpose.

There were struck out five articles of this treaty as originally made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and new articles were inserted. Article 6 of the original treaty provided:

To enable said Indians to return to an agricultural life under the system in operation on the Sioux Reservation in 1862, it is agreed that there shall be expended for the benefit of the Indians entitled to locate farms on the Lake Traverse Reservation for the year 1867, $350,000.

Probably no one desired to expend $350,000 in that region and in that year for agricultural implements for those people. On page 46 are to be found the amendments in lieu of the articles from 6 to 14, both inclusive, they having been struck out. Articles 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 were inserted by the Senate. Article 6 provided:

And, further, in consideration of the destitution of said bands of Sisseton and Wahpeton Sioux, parties hereto, resulting from the confiscation of their annuities and improvements, it is agreed that Congress will, in its own discretion, from time to time, make such appropriations as may be deemed requisite to enable said Indians to return to an agricultural life under the system in operation on the Sioux Reservation in 1862, including, if thought advisable, the establishment and support of local and manual labor schools; the employment of agricultural, mechanical, and other teachers; the opening and improvement of individual farms; and generally such objects as Congress in its wisdom shall deem necessary to promote the agricultural improvement and civilization of said bands.

That was agreed to afterwards, and very soon afterwards, by the chiefs and headmen. I quote these articles in the treaty for the purpose of showing that the object and aim of the treaty was a benevolent one on the part of the United States, and under it, as is shown in this document, Congress made from year to year considerable appropriations for the Indians.

There is one other fact to which I wish to call attention, and that is that there was no recognition here by Congress of any claim or title on the part of these Indians to a large reservation which they claimed they had roamed and hunted over and were entitled to hold in possessory right. But these two reservations were thus created, and the Indians who were willing to become the wards of the Government and undertake to avail themselves of the processes of civilization which were proposed by the United States were to be gathered together at these two places; and when 500 of them got together at Devils Lake, they were to have an agent, showing that it was deemed necessary, even when the treaty was made, by the headmen of the tribe to gather the Indians up in order that they might avail themselves of these opportunities offered by the United States. That was in 1868.

They made some progress before 1872, and, instigated, I have no doubt, by their situation, they undertook to make a claim not only for these two reservations, which were set aside specifically, embracing together over a million acres of land, there being less than 2,000 of them in all—the Senator from South Dakota will correct me if I am wrong, but I think there were not over 1,200 at these two agencies—

Mr. PETTIGREW. About 2,000.

Mr. ALLISON. About 2,000. In 1872 these Indians desired that the question should be settled as to whether they had any right beyond the specific reservation of the act of 1867; and Congress, as it always or nearly always does, made liberal provision for the adjustment and settlement of the question. It is a matter of every year's recurrence here. Where there is a dispute respecting an Indian title or an Indian reservation, provision is made for its adjustment. Congress provided for this adjustment, and the President or Secretary of the Interior, I have forgotten which, appointed three commissioners to ascertain, first, whether the Indians had any title outside of their specific reservation, and second, if they had any, what it was and its value.

The commission went out and made the investigation. All the members agreed, I believe, that there was a possessory right in the Indians, a right to hunt and roam over the prairies, which ought to be paid for if the United States desired to acquire title. Although they differed as to the amount, a majority of them placed the value of the title at $800,000. Others of them thought the amount was entirely too large, which is quite likely under the conditions then existing in that region. I know very well that during that year land could have been purchased in the northwestern portion of my State for from one to two dollars per acre.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There were 8,000,000 acres in this cession.

Mr. ALLISON. It was no cession. They had no title to it except a roaming and hunting title, which is of little or no value. They received what was considered an extravagant price for this imaginary title or possessory title of theirs. They received $80,000 per annum for ten years, a larger sum than they were to receive under the treaty of 1851. They also received other appropriations of the Government from time to time for the promotion of education and the encouragement of farming.

In the treaty of 1872—I think it was the treaty of 1872—it was also provided that allotments of land should be made to the Indians of so many acres to each Indian and that the lands not allotted might be sold. This allotment went on from time to time. The people progressed fairly well in agriculture, etc. I do not remember whether there was any treaty between 1872 and 1889.

Mr. SPOONER. There was one in 1873.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. I call that one treaty. The next year there was a provision for the allotment of the lands not needed by the Indians under this system of allotting established. That was February 14, 1878. I do not know that there is anything special in this treaty which needs attention. It was made by the same people who made the other treaty. Under that treaty the allotments went on at the Lake Traverse Reservation.

In 1889 another treaty was made with these Indians for the sale of lands not allotted, and that treaty provided for the sale of all these lands. The number of acres was not accurately ascertained at the time, but the price to be paid was $2.50 an acre for the unallotted lands upon the prairies. The total price as thus ascertained, to be exact, was $1,522,000, although there was covered into the Treasury to the credit of these Indians under the treaty $1,699,800, the lands estimated being more than the lands actually found after survey. The treaty of 1889 is an important treaty in this transaction. It seems to have been entirely overlooked by the committee in making up this adjustment. Before any steps could be taken for the purchase of these lands at $2.50 an acre the treaty required the Government of the United States to—

Pay to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians parties hereto, per capita, the sum of $342,778.37, being the amount found to be due to certain members of said bands of Indians who served in the armies of the United States against their own people when at war with the United States, and their families and descendants, under the provisions of the fourth article of the treaty of July 23, 1851, and of which they have been wrongfully and unjustly deprived by the operation of the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 10, 1863, and entitled "An act for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of depredation, and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians," said sum being at the rate of $18,400 per annum from July 1, 1862, to July 1, 1888, less their pro rata share of the sum of $618,088.52, heretofore appropriated for the benefit of said Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, as set forth in Report No. 1053 of the House of Representatives, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

That report is a statement of account respecting these Indians made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and approved by Mr. Vilas, who was then Secretary of the Interior.

They also exacted a further payment of $18,300 annually from 1888 to 1902, and every year since 1888 that sum has been appropriated. There was a total sum of money appropriated under this treaty in 1891 of $2,203,000, of which $503,200 was made immediately available and was paid to these Indians and the remainder, $1,699,800, was put in the Treasury to their credit. Although the treaty provided that when it should be placed to their credit it should draw 3 per cent interest, under considerations, the details of which I do not now call to mind, when that $1,699,800 was put into the Treasury, it was placed there at 5 per cent interest.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In that connection, if the Senator will allow me, I wish to say that the commissioners, when they made this agreement, told those people that they had positive instructions which prevented them from allowing more than 3 per cent interest. The Indians insisted upon 5 per cent, and the commissioners promised them that they would come here and do everything they could to have 5 per cent allowed, and it was in pursuance of that understanding that Congress allowed it.

Mr. ALLISON. As to those details the Senator may be right. I do not remember distinctly, but at any rate it was regarded by the Indians, by the people who represented them, and by the Government as a full, final, and absolute settlement of everything due to those Indians, and it was put in the law. It is section 27, and is as follows:

SEC. 27. That for the purpose of carrying out the terms and provisions of said agreement there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,203,000, of which amount the sum of $503,200 shall be immediately available, and the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be paid as follows, to wit: To the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians, parties to this agreement, the sum of $376,578.37, said amount to be distributed per capita. To the scouts and soldiers of the Sisseton, Wahpeton, Medawakanton, and Wapakoota bands of Sioux Indians, who were enrolled and entered into the military service of the United States and served in suppressing what is known as the "Sioux outbreak of 1862;" or those who were enrolled and served in the armies of the United States in the war of the rebellion, and to the members of their families and descendants, now living, of such scouts and soldiers as are dead, who are not included in the foregoing class, as parties to said agreement, the sum of $126,620, said amount to be distributed per capita; and the said sum of $503,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary, when paid to the said Sisseton, Wahpeton, Medawakanton, and Wapakoota bands of Sioux Indians, their families and descendants, designated in this act, shall be deemed a full settlement of all claims they may have for unpaid annuities, under any and all treaties or acts of Congress up to the 30th day of June, 1890.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That provision was injected into the law by Congress. It was not in the treaty, and was no part of the understanding or agreement with those Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated that it was in the law, and I did not state that it was in the treaty; but I state that after we had made this treaty, which provided for only 3 per cent interest forever upon these trust funds in the Treasury of the United States, in order to make full and final adjustment and settlement, we paid them, and are now paying them, 5 per cent interest per annum upon $1,522,000; which is more interest by several thousand dollars than they are entitled to or would be entitled to if they received the annuities provided for in 1851.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I must correct the Senator again. The amount upon which the Government is paying interest is only $1,320,000.

Mr. ALLISON. We appropriated a portion of it, to which I did not allude—$1,320,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. There was afterwards a portion of this sum appropriated and paid per capita to these Indians, which I had forgotten. But even now we are paying this large sum to those Indians annually as long as they choose to leave that money in the Treasury.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I see that by section 9 of the act of 1863 there was given to each of the members of these bands who did not participate in the massacre, and who aided in rescuing the women and children who were captured by the Indians, 80 acres of land in severalty. Was that carried out?

Mr. ALLISON. It was undoubtedly carried out to a certain degree; and I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that point. It is said we drove those Indians away; that the act of March 3, 1863, provided that the United States should itself appraise those lands and the improvements upon them, and that any one of those Indians who had the right to go there could occupy land to the extent of 80 acres and resume his residence upon that old reservation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In this connection I wish to say that so intense was the feeling in the Northwest against these Indians that not only were they driven out and none of them dared remain, but even the Winnebagoes, who were clear inside the settlement, were forced to leave the State, forced to go into Nebraska, and suffered great loss of life and great misery and discomfort.

Mr. ALLISON. Still, it shows that, so far as Congress was concerned, in its administration and in its legislation it sought to deal liberally with these Indians.

There is another thing respecting this matter which I think ought to be considered in this connection. As these Indians are our wards, we treat them justly and liberally, but we keep them under such legal restraints as we think wise. We have done that at this very session with the Five Civilized Tribes, who have been civilized for a century and who left their homes in the old States of the Union, in the then Territories of Mississippi and Alabama, and were placed across the Mississippi River upon an Indian reservation to which they had a complete fee-simple title. They were guaranteed by the Government of the United States that they should remain there as long as grass grows and water runs, without interference in the slightest degree by the United States Government by legislation; and yet here at this session, with absolute unanimity in this body, upon the project of the Senator from South Dakota, who had charge of the bill, we have undertaken to deal with these Indians in such a way as we believe will promote their civilization and in a better, more equitable, and just way than is provided in the treaties we made with them more than sixty years ago.

What I am endeavoring to show here is that we never have insisted upon the letter of the law respecting these Indian tribes, but we have recognized the spirit of the law and our duty as a civilized and Christian people to do whatever we can by legislation and by appropriation to make them Christians and to civilize them. So it is that I have stated these facts for the purpose of showing that from the time the attention of Congress was called to these subjects until the present moment we have dealt with the Sisseton and Wahpeton Sioux, not as in rebellion against the Government of the United States, but, beginning with the 3d of March, 1863, we have treated them as our wards, as we were in duty bound to do as having charge and control of them and their affairs.

Mr. President, what is their situation to-day? Under these various treaties we gave them 160 acres of land per capita. They have secured lands, fertile lands, in one of the richest States of this Union to the extent of 160 acres, whether they be children or whether they be aged people. I am told that there are families there who have each as much as 1,500 acres of as good land as there is under the sun, in our country at least, and that they are realizing large sums from the rentals from that land. They are the gentlemen farmers in the State of Minnesota, some of whom rent their land for cutting grass at 50 cents an acre, and when they rent it for five or ten years or three years and it is broken up, they rent it for a dollar and a dollar and a half an acre. That is land which they can not till. There is no other Indian tribe or no other individual Indian under our laws, unless it be under the statute recently enacted concerning the Five Civilized Tribes, that has had such a magnificent donation or allotment of lands to cultivate. In addition to these lands, they have this annuity fund. We only appropriate for them now $18,400.

I claim that if this bill is passed at all it should pass with a diminution not only of the $616,000 which was agreed to on the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] without objection, but that it should pass with a diminution of $525,000, or whatever the amount may be, that we poured into their laps only seven or eight years ago, and which I understood, as one member of the Senate and as having had something to do with this provision, was a settlement and an adjustment of all their claims respecting this matter.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Undoubtedly that will be deducted.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator show me any provision in this bill that will deduct it?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the bill provides for that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 3414) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. I should like about half an hour more.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should be glad to have the Senator go on. I ask unanimous consent that he may be permitted to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing to continue my remarks on another day.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I give notice that at the earliest possible moment I shall press the consideration of this measure; of course so as not to conflict with the unfinished business.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from South Dakota will allow me just one word, I have nearly finished what I desire to say concerning the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians, but the amendment proposed by the committee deals with two other bands of Indians, which I shall endeavor to show have no claim, certainly no better claim than the Sissetons and Wahpetons, which is no claim at all, in my belief.

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3414) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. PETTUS, in paragraph 7, on page 11, line 51, after the word "persons," to strike out:

And to act as trustee in any mortgage given to secure such bonds, and to countersign the same as trustee.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, when I was interrupted yesterday by the adjournment of the Senate I was proceeding to remark on the singular fact that while this side of the Chamber was divided to some extent on the propriety of the measure now under consideration, there was entire unanimity of sentiment on the other side of the Chamber concerning it, if we may judge by the preliminary votes which have thus far been taken on the effort to correct and improve the bill. I was also commenting on the further fact that this remarkable unanimity had been achieved in the face of very grave doubts concerning the constitutional power of Congress to enact legislation of this character, and in the face of still other and further very grave doubts concerning the propriety of this kind of legislation even if the constitutional power be conceded.

I attribute this unanimity in the face of doubts which it seems to me at least ought to create some division of sentiment on both sides of the Chamber to the tendency, which I have observed ever since I have had the honor to be a member of this body, in the Republican majority in this Chamber to consider itself as in some sense the conservator and guardian and special champion of the moneyed and corporate interests of the country. It has seemed to me that as the exorbitant demands of that interest increase—and we find that they are increasing every day—the subservency of the Republican party to the demands of that interest increases at the same time and keeps pace with the increase in the demand. It would seem as though the leaders of the Republican party argue to themselves something in this wise: What boots it that the interests of the common people of the country are being sacrificed, that the limitations of the national Constitution are being broken down, that the liberties of the Republic are being endangered? The moneyed capital requires still other avenues of employment; it requires to be further safeguarded against possible attacks by State legislation; it requires still further and additional machinery to make it all powerful and omnipotent in the affairs of this country. And since we have assumed to be the special champion of that interest, we will stand solidly and unitedly and even exultingly in favor of any demand that this interest may put forward in the national halls of Congress, regardless of the direction in which it leads and regardless of the fact that it is breaking down and sapping the constitutional system devised by the fathers for the safeguarding of the liberties of the people of this country.

Mr. President, I do not attribute to any leader of the Republican party, either in this Chamber or elsewhere, improper motives or purposes for this subservency to the particular interest to which I have alluded. I regard the phenomenon as an evidence of the decay of a once great party and as an evidence of the fact that that decay has been brought about in answer to the demand of the corrupting and degenerating influence with which that party is inseparably allied, without which its supremacy to-day would never have been acquired, and without which its supremacy in the future is an absolute impossibility. If this be not true, why do not some of the great constitutional lawyers upon the other side of the Chamber look into the constitutional objections urged against this bill with greater particularity than they have, and give it the careful attention which a measure of this kind demands?

Aside from the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], I do not find in the course of this debate that any of those great constitutional lawyers upon the other side have done so. It is true the Senator from Ohio has done so; and I recognize him as one of the great lawyers upon the other side of the Chamber; but upon a measure of this kind, so vital in its importance to the country and trenching so closely upon constitutional lines as laid down for the guidance of Congress, I should prefer to see a more eager spirit on the part of the lawyers on both sides of this Chamber to look into this measure and see whether it is or is not in consonance with the principles of the Constitution of the United States; and if that great party be not dominated by the influence to which I have referred, why do not some of the great financiers upon the other side—and they have great financiers upon the other side of this Chamber—look into this measure, and see whether it is or is not consonant with the safety and the interests of the people of this country that Congressional legislation should raise up a great financial Colossus to bestride not only this whole continent but the entire hemisphere.

Mr. President, one of the influences which are corrupting the political parties of the country, which are preventing the interests of the people from receiving proper consideration, which stand in the way of proper legislation in the two Halls of Congress are these great moneyed corporations which have been built up by State and national legislation. I think that Congress ought to look keenly and carefully into the propriety of the creation of any more of these great corporations.

It has been said with a good deal of truth that the great railroad corporations, if the Government does not eventually own them, will own the Government. Congress created an Interstate Commerce Commission with the idea that it would control these great corporations, but that act has been emasculated by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and that commission stands here as a self-confessed failure, and it has so stood for more than two years past; yet it has been impossible to get through either branch of Congress, by reason of the malign influence of these great corporations, any legislation which will arm the Interstate Commerce Commission with the power to enforce upon these corporations the just performance of their obligations to the public.

For myself, Mr. President, I do not think that there has been a more important measure brought before Congress in the last ten years, both in the constitutional principles which it raises and the danger of injury to the public, than this measure which we now have under consideration, and which appears to be going by default to some extent, because of the disposition upon the part of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to vote for any measure of this kind without consideration, and because of the fact that Senators upon this side of the Chamber appear to some extent not to have appreciated the gravity of this measure.

I do not understand that anybody controverts the proposition that Congress has no power to create a private corporation by act of Congress except in the District of Columbia and in the other Territories, and except that it be created for the performance, in part at least, of some governmental function or purpose. Notwithstanding I have listened to the distinguished Senator from Ohio in the several speeches he has made on this measure, I have failed to see any governmental function or purpose anywhere within the four corners of this bill, and I do not believe there is any; certainly there are none expressed in the measure. But the Senator from Ohio says that we can gather from the purport of the bill, from the operation and effect of the bill, the governmental purpose which it is intended to serve: but the public and governmental purpose which I understand him to point out is that it is the creation of an instrument in aid of interstate and foreign commerce. Granting that it be an instrument in aid of interstate and foreign commerce, does that make it a governmental or a public agency in the sense laid down by the great judges of the Supreme Court who have pronounced upon the limitations of Congress in this respect?

It is very easy to see whether it does or not. Is the function of carrying on interstate or foreign commerce a public or governmental function? Most assuredly not. It is a private function. Consequently the creation of a corporation to carry on interstate and foreign commerce, if that be the only public function attributed to it, can not be said to be the creation of a corporation to carry on in part a governmental or public function. It seems to me almost too plain for argument. If the proposition rested upon that power and simply that there was any public function disclosed from the fact that this instrumentality was to carry on interstate and foreign commerce, I should not feel the necessity of saying anything further on the subject.

But if I understood the argument of the Senator from Ohio, he went back a step further and planted this measure squarely upon the proposition that it was a regulation of interstate and foreign commerce without reference to the question as to whether it was the creation of an instrumentality to carry on a public or governmental function. Inasmuch as Congress has power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce I understand him to insist that this is a valid exercise of constitutional power. But I never have seen in any of the law books, nor have I read in any of the commentaries upon the Constitution an expression from any source, I think, that the creation of an instrumentality to carry on commerce was a regulation of commerce in the sense of the Constitution. In fact to launch this instrument out onto the field of interstate and foreign commerce without any other regulations than such as are found in this bill is to derange commerce instead of regulating it. It does not regulate it; it does not have that effect. It is the creation of an instrumentality to carry on commerce, but is not a regulation of commerce in the sense of the Constitution of the United States.

I have not heard in this debate, I venture to say it can not be found, that the Supreme Court of the United States or any commentator upon the Constitution of the United States whose opinions are entitled to credit, ever said or held that under the power to regulate commerce the Congress of the United States might create an instrumentality of commerce in the person of a private corporation to be chartered by act of Congress. If it may do so, then it may regulate every instrumentality of commerce, and, inasmuch as the power, if Congress chooses to so exercise it, is exclusive, it may prevent any State legislature from chartering any corporation designed to engage in interstate commerce, and it may place limits and fetters upon the action of individuals who may desire to engage in interstate commerce. The extension of the principle would extend the power of the Government of the United States to a point that would be dangerous and subversive of all the ideas that we have ever had concerning the relations of the State and the Federal Government and the distribution of powers between them.

I understand that the chief reliance of the Senator from Ohio in favor of the proposition that there is power in Congress to charter a private bank is found in the case of the Cherokee Nation vs. The Kansas Railway Company, in 135 United States. While there may be isolated expressions in that opinion which give color to the contention of the Senator, we all know that judicial opinions are not to be read in that way and that they are to be limited strictly, so far as the text of the opinion is concerned as a binding authority upon any legal proposition, to the point directly before the court.

The point directly before the court in that case was whether Congress might devolve the power of eminent domain on the State railroad corporation passing through one of the Territories of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States very properly held that inasmuch as the Government of the United States had the power of domain and might delegate it to any public agency, and inasmuch as all of the courts of the United States, both State and national, had held that a railroad company, being a highway, was a public agency, and inasmuch as that particular agency was engaged in interstate commerce, that the Government of the United States might by act of Congress devolve the power of eminent domain upon the railroad company in that particular case. That, I say, is the extent to which any force and effect may be given to that opinion, and any dicta that the court may have indulged in outside of that all the lawyers in this body, as everywhere else, will understand have no particular bearing and cut no particular figure in influencing the minds of lawyers and judges.

Where the court by way of argument here speak of the fact that it has been held that Congress might in aid of commerce grant the right to construct roads, and to itself construct roads engaged in interstate commerce between the several States, and to bridge rivers extending between States over which interstate commerce was to be carried on, and that is the particular part of this decision which appears to give color to the argument of the Senator from Ohio. Lawyers readily understand what the court referred to in that connection. Under the power to regulate commerce, the jurisdiction of Congress over all navigable rivers is exclusive if it chooses to so exercise it, and it is necessary to come to Congress to get the consent of Congress when it is desired to bridge one of those rivers. That is what the Supreme Court referred to in that connection.

In the statement that Congress had constructed roads itself it undoubtedly referred to the great works of internal improvement undertaken by this country in a very early day in the building of highways between different and isolated sections of the country. If it undertook to say that Congress has frequently authorized individuals to construct national highways, that Congress has frequently undertaken to charter individuals or corporations to do so, then it is contrary to the history of this country, because every great national highway, every great railway that has been chartered by Congress has been chartered for the purpose, explicitly and distinctly in the act, of carrying out and furthering some public or governmental purpose.

But suppose this language might be strained now into a statement that Congress might create a corporation for the purpose of building a railroad between different States to engage in interstate commerce, still it would not be authority for the proposition that Congress might create a bank to engage in interstate commerce, because a railroad is a public domain within the meaning of all the decisions of all the courts of this country, and it is upon that ground that the power of eminent domain is delegated to it by Congress and by the legislatures of the several States. Since it is engaged in operating a railroad between two States, it is engaged in interstate commerce, and, being a public agency, it might be said that thereby Congress had a right to grant a charter to a railroad company to build such a railroad. But it has never been held or said by any court that a private bank is a public agency. Simply because it engages in interstate commerce does not make it a public agency, because every individual and every domestic corporation in the States is engaged in interstate commerce.

So it can not be said that this case, or any other case, or any commentary that has been brought to the attention of the Senate upon this subject, is any authority in favor of what I consider the monstrous and preposterous proposition that it is within the power of Congress to charter a private bank simply because it is proposed and contemplated that that bank shall engage in interstate commerce.

There are a number of other objections to this bill which appeal to me very strongly outside of the one of power. One of them is the question of taxation raised by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] in his argument the other day upon the bill. It is a fact that if this corporation be created it will spread all over this country in all the States of the Union. Its ramifications will extend into every part of all of the States of the Union. It will have most extensive business and most extensive dealings. It will be brought into conflict with the tax laws of all the States of the Union, and thus States will be compelled to adopt a different system of taxation for this bank from that which they adopt for their own banks and for other moneyed capital. On the principle laid down in McCulloch against Maryland and Osborn against the Branch Bank, undoubtedly sustained by the courts at this day, the power of taxation involves the power of destruction, and the States will not be permitted to tax this bank in any respect that the courts may say will involve an impediment or embarrassment to the conduct of its business when it shall have engaged in business in the several States.

They can not tax its franchise; that is admitted. They may want to tax the franchise of the banks of their own States. They can not lay an excise tax upon the instrumentalities of the business of this bank as a tax upon the notes and bills of exchange and a stamp duty such as has lately been laid by the Congress of the United States upon instruments of this kind, and as the States may desire to employ for raising their own revenue upon the property and business conducted within their own limits. If the States desire to impose a tax upon the incomes of individuals and corporations in their respective States, I apprehend they would be powerless to lay a tax upon the income of this great financial colossus which we are now to create.

There are three respects in which even under the clause as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] there is still an absence of power upon the part of the States to tax this bank and its instrumentalities, because that amendment simply provided that the property and the stocks of this corporation might be taxed by the several States to the same extent as other property within the States. It did not provide and does not contemplate an indirect tax such as a tax upon franchise, an excise tax upon the instrumentalities employed by this bank, or an income tax upon the income of the bank.

We are thus creating a great corporation, a powerful corporation, and compelling it to go into all the States of the Union with the knowledge that those States will be hampered in the matter of taxation in dealing with this great corporation. I do not think we ought to do that. I think if this bill were objectionable from a constitutional sense, and there were no other objections, there ought to be a provision in it providing at least that it should be subject to direct and indirect taxation to the same extent in every respect as any other private moneyed corporation doing business in the States.

Another very strong objection in my mind to the creation of a corporation of this kind having such enormous powers and to be so intimately identified with the interests of the several States is the fact that we are creating an instrumentality having access and having the right to require persons desiring to litigate it to apply wholly and entirely to the Federal courts for the determination of rights between them, because it has been the law ever since the day of Chief Justice Marshall that a corporation created by act of Congress is entitled to resort to courts of the United States in its litigation and to have other litigants desiring to litigate with it resort to the courts of the United States. In fact, I do not know but that it is one of the great objects and purposes of this measure, that one of the great benefits which this corporation has in mind by coming to Congress to get a charter from it is that it may have the benefit of the protection of the courts of the United States.

I myself have no fear of the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, except that it has already been very far extended, and the tendency is in the other direction instead of in the direction of further extension. I should hesitate a long time before giving my consent to the creation of a corporation, if there were no other objection to it, which is to have such an enormous business with the public in this country as this corporation is destined to have if this bill becomes a law, and will give it the right to have all of its business transacted in the courts of the United States.

If the bill should become a law there ought to be a further amendment, it seems to me, providing that for all the purposes of the jurisdiction of the State and Federal courts this corporation shall stand upon the footing of a domestic corporation and may sue and be sued in the State courts as freely and fully as any other domestic corporation is sued or may be sued or sue. There is nothing of the kind here.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this bill has been pushed too rapidly and without sufficient consideration. I think it would very well repay further consideration. If pushed now, I feel as if I could not give it my assent and I shall be compelled to vote against it. Probably after the fullest consideration which might be given I should still feel compelled to do so, if I still retain the views that I have concerning the power of Congress to charter a private bank. But certainly the bill ought to have more consideration than it has had. I appeal to Senators to look into this measure and to examine it more carefully than has been done before letting it become a law by the vote of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. BACON. If no one desires to speak, I wish to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANTLE in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the vote be taken by yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I should like to explain the amendment, but I should like very much to have those who are to vote upon it here before I do so.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the roll be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon,	Faulkner,	Mallory,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Foraker,	Mantle,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Frye,	Mills,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Carter,	Hanna,	Money,	Stewart,
Chilton,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Teller,
Clark,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Tillman,
Cockrell,	Heitfeld,	Pasco,	Turner,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Turpie,
Daniel,	Kyle,	Pettus,	Warren,
Davis,	Lodge,	Platt, Conn.	Wellington,
Elkins,	McEnery,	Platt, N. Y.	White,
Fairbanks,	McMillan,	Pritchard,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say a few words upon the pending amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Can we not have the amendment read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment submitted by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

The SECRETARY. After the word "person," in line 51, section 7, page 11, strike out the following:

And to act as trustee in any mortgage given to secure such bonds, and to countersign the same as trustee.

Mr. BACON. I trust the Senators who favor this bill will recognize the propriety of adopting this amendment. The bill without that amendment will be a sufficiently comprehensive one. It is the most extensive bank charter, leaving out this feature, that has ever been granted by any authority in this country, either Federal or State. This provision is here in the shape of less than two lines, but it is most important. It, in other words—

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I am very glad to know it. I was simply about to say that these two lines would give the company all the powers of a trust company, which is an entirely different kind of a corporation from a strictly banking corporation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Now, I wish to offer an amendment. In section 11, on page 15, I move to strike out in the third and fourth lines the words:

Or in the city of New York, in the State of New York, as the board of directors shall determine.

Mr. FORAKER. That I do not accept.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will state my object in offering the amendment. I do not think that the Federal Government has the right to charter this company and locate its home outside of the District of Columbia or one of the Territories of the United States.

Practically I do not see how striking out this provision would affect the value of the bill if it should be passed. It is true that the home of the company in that case would be in this District, because the words immediately preceding it would put it within the power of the corporators to select the District of Columbia as the home, and the words sought to be stricken out are the words which give it the alternative power of selecting New York as the home.

While it is true that a corporation has the power to exist only in the home of the jurisdiction where created, it is also true that its powers can be exercised in any other jurisdiction by comity of States. It is also true that without exception, so far as I have ever known, from the foundation of the Government, that comity, which is an implied consent, has always been extended to any corporation that desired to transact its business in a foreign jurisdiction. I will say that so far as banks are concerned at least I know of no exception to the rule that they are permitted to transact their business in foreign jurisdictions by comity.

If this amendment were adopted, the only effect would be that the home of the bank would be in the city of Washington, and that its office, and, if you please, its largest office, could be in New York or elsewhere. But I believe it to be violative of a great principle, and in view of the decision of the Supreme Court and the very well recognized doctrine upon the subject I think it a dangerous precedent for the Government to assume to say to a State that it will locate within the borders of that State, without the consent, express or implied, of the State, a Federal corporation.

Mr. President, I desire to say one more word before I conclude, in order that my position upon this bill may not be misunderstood. Senators have taken occasion during this discussion to say that they favor banks and to deprecate opposition to banks. My opposition to this bill is not founded upon any opposition to banks properly organized and in the performance of proper duties. I believe they are not only proper instrumentalities, but necessary instrumentalities, to the conducting of the business and the commerce of the world, and I am glad to see them increase and multiply and prosper. I think the prosperity of the country is largely dependent upon a proper banking system and that its prosperity will be increased by proper banking facilities which will put proper means in the reach of every person, either artificial or natural, by which business can be carried on. I am opposed to this bank not because I am opposed to banks in general, but because I consider that this bank has most objectionable features. I am opposed to this bank because it has powers that no bank, State or Federal, ought to have conferred upon it. There is no bank that ought to have the power which is given to this bank to go out into all the world outside of the United States and purchase without limitation and hold forever, during the life of the bank at least, the corporate stocks of every other bank.

Mr. President, it is dangerous to this country; it is dangerous to the business and to the public interests of this country. Think for a moment what possibilities it opens! How can any man doubt it? Here is a bank with $25,000,000 capital, and while it has a nominal capital of $25,000,000 it has the right to hold property to the extent of a thousand million dollars; and while this may be its home, it can own a capital in its magnitude beyond the comprehension or realization of man, represented by the shares of banks all over Europe. Shall we have located in our midst such a gigantic bank in this day when consolidation is so much in vogue, by which $500,000,000 or $1,000,000,000 may be in the hands of a few men to control the business, to say nothing of the politics, of this country?

I am opposed to it because it is designed and is intended to have the power to dominate, and, if necessary, to destroy, any other bank in the country, either national or State; for, as the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] said in advocating this bill—

A bank clothed with power and authority by the United States carries with it ten times the influence, the respect, the confidence, possessed by a bank authorized by any State of the United States.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this particular bank because there is no reason for it, there is no necessity for it. There has been but one ground for it stated by the Senator from Ohio or any other Senator who favors the bill, and that is the oft-repeated assertion that powers can be conferred upon this bank by the Federal Government to go into a foreign jurisdiction which can not be conferred upon a State bank by State authority. That, I say, is an assertion which can be sustained neither by argument nor by authority, and I challenge the Senator, with all the books of all the libraries of all the world, to show in any elementary work or in a decision of any respectable court a dictum to the effect that the Federal Government can confer upon a corporation extraterritorial powers which a State can not confer upon a corporation. I challenge the Senator to point to a single line in a respectable authority or any decision of a respectable court where there is any such enunciation.

The Senator may say, on the other hand, that mine is an assertion and that I have pointed to no authority when I say that a State can clothe a corporation with as great extraterritorial authority and power as the Federal Government can do. I reply to him that I have cited here the leading authority upon that question, and nobody has discussed it or dissented from it in any way—the authority of the case of Bank of Augusta vs. Earle, in 13 Peters, where the whole doctrine is discussed, where the general power of any government in this regard is discussed, and where that principle affecting the powers of all sovereignties is laid down without qualification, and which can not be met successfully by any argument or by any authority which can be produced.

And finally, Mr. President, I am opposed to this bank, because its incorporation by Congress would violate the Constitution as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. President, I deem it proper to say this much, although it is not directly upon the amendment I offered, but I think germane to it. I should be very glad if there could be given to us who are so deeply and earnestly opposed to the bill, because we believe it wrong, radically wrong, this much concession, by the acceptance of the amendment that the home of the corporation created by Federal authority shall be in the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. BERRY's name was called). I wish to state that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has left the city upon business of the Senate. If he were present, he would vote for the amendment. He was paired yesterday and is paired to-day with the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. If present, his vote yesterday would have been in favor of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I inquired of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to whom I could transfer my pair, and he suggested the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. So the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] will stand paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. With the consent of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] I transfer my pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and that will permit the senior Senator from Georgia and myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. MONEY's name was called). The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] has been called from the Chamber temporarily. He is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. He is absent from the Chamber. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE], and will vote.

Mr. PASCO. I call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

Mr. PERKINS. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK. I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], and I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that we transfer our pairs, which will allow both of us to vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is satisfactory. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ELKINS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY] and therefore withhold my vote. I desire to state that if my colleague [Mr. QUAY] were present, he would vote "nay," which will doubtless permit the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], with whom he is paired, to vote.

Mr. MORGAN. I am informed that if the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] were here, he would vote "nay." As I intend to vote the same way, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Delaware to my colleague [Mr. QUAY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BACON. The junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], with whom I am paired, is absent, but under the announcement made by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], by which the Senator from Rhode Island is paired with my colleague [Mr. CLAY], I will vote. I vote "yea."

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY]. In order to make a quorum, I will take the liberty of voting, as it will make no difference in the result. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR. In order to make a quorum, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In order to assist in making a quorum, I will take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Is the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] recorded?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine is not recorded.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Maine. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FORAKER (to Mr. JONES of Arkansas). Vote to make a quorum.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—19.
Bacon, Bate, Chilton, Cockrell, Faulkner,	Heitfeld, Jones, Ark. Kyle, Mallory, Mills,	Mitchell, Pettigrew, Pettus, Rawlins, Teller,	Tillman, Turner, Turpie, White.
NAYS—25.
Allison, Burrows, Caffery, Clark, Cullom, Davis, Deboe,	Fairbanks, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Hanna, Hansbrough,	Hawley, Hoar, Lodge, McMillan, Morgan, Morrill, Penrose,	Platt, Conn. Sewell, Shoup, Warren.
NOT VOTING—45.
Aldrich, Allen, Baker, Berry, Butler, Cannon, Carter, Chandler, Clay, Daniel, Elkins, Gorman,	Gray, Hale, Harris, Jones, Nev. Kenney, Lindsay, McBride, McEnery, McLaurin, Mantle, Martin, Mason,	Money, Murphy, Nelson, Pasco, Perkins, Platt, N. Y. Pritchard, Proctor, Quay, Roach, Smith, Spooner,	Stewart, Sullivan, Thurston, Turley, Vest, Wellington, Wetmore, Wilson, Wolcott.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays do not disclose the presence of a quorum in the Senate, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon, Bate, Caffery, Chilton, Clark, Cullom, Davis, Deboe, Fairbanks, Faulkner, Foraker, Frye,	Gallinger, Gear, Hanna, Hansbrough, Hawley, Heitfeld, Hoar, Jones, Ark. Kyle, Lodge, McEnery, McMillan,	Mallory, Mantle, Mitchell, Money, Morgan, Morrill, Pasco, Penrose, Perkins, Pettigrew, Pettus, Platt, Conn.	Pritchard, Rawlins, Sewell, Shoup, Spooner, Teller, Tillman, Turner, Turpie, Warren, White.
--	--	--	---

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. By arrangement previously made I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], who is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). In view of the fact that I am paired, I reserve my vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH], and withhold my vote.

Mr. FAIRBANKS (when the name of Mr. PLATT of New York was called). I was requested to state that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] is unavoidably absent and is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLaurin], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], who is necessarily absent. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). The junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], with whom I have a general pair, being absent, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CLARK (after having voted in the negative). I voted under a misapprehension as to pairs. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MANTLE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. ELKINS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. MALLORY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCENERY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] with whom I am paired would vote "yea" if present. Therefore I will exercise the right to vote. I vote "yea."

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. ELKINS. In order to make a quorum I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR. For the purpose of making a quorum I will break my pair and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MANTLE. In order to make a quorum I will cast my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WELLINGTON. In order that there may be a quorum I vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—18.
Bate, Chilton, Clark, Cockrell, Daniel,	Heitfeld, Mallory, Mantle, Mills, Mitchell,	Pasco, Pettigrew, Pettus, Rawlins, Teller,	Turner, Turpie, White.
NAYS—27.
Allison, Baker, Burrows, Caffery, Cullom, Davis, Deboe,	Elkins, Fairbanks, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Hanna,	Hansbrough, Hawley, Hoar, McMillan, Morgan, Morrill, Penrose,	Platt, Conn. Sewell, Shoup, Warren, Wellington, Wilson.
NOT VOTING—44.
Aldrich, Allen, Bacon, Berry, Butler, Cannon, Carter, Chandler, Clay, Faulkner, Foraker, Frye,	Gray, Hale, Harris, Jones, Ark. Jones, Nev. Kenney, Kyle, Lindsay, Lodge, McBride, McEnery, Quay,	McLaurin, Martin, Mason, Money, Murphy, Nelson, Perkins, Platt, N. Y. Pritchard, Proctor, Quay,	Roach, Smith, Spooner, Stewart, Sullivan, Thurston, Tillman, Turley, Vest, Wetmore, Wolcott.

So Mr. BACON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment heretofore adopted on the subject of taxation may be read in order that we may see whether or not it is full and complete. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] offered the amendment, and he is probably more familiar with it than I am.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment heretofore adopted on the subject of taxation.

The SECRETARY. Section 23, on page 25, as modified, reads as follows:

That the property of said corporation shall be subject to taxation by any State, municipal, or other authority having jurisdiction thereof within the United States, the same as other like property, and the several stockholders shall be liable to assessment and taxation upon the shares held by them at their respective places of residence according to the true value thereof, and to the same extent and in the same manner as other personal property is there assessed and taxed.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, if in order, I should like to offer a substitute for that section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order.

Mr. TURNER. Then I offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for the section just read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 23 and in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 23. That the property, franchise, and business of the said corporation shall be subject to be taxed by the States in which said property shall be, or the said franchise and business shall be exercised and conducted, as fully and to the same extent as said States may tax the property, franchise, and business of domestic corporations, and the shares of stock of said corporation properly situated in any State for taxation may be taxed in such State to the same extent and in the same manner as other personal property.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Washington who offered this amendment as to whether or not I correctly understand it. I have only heard it read at the desk. As I understand the amendment, it provides, in addition to what was already taxable by the section as we had heretofore adopted it, that the franchise and business of this bank shall be taxed, but only in the same manner in which the franchise and business of like character may be taxed in the State where located.

Mr. TURNER. To the same extent.

Mr. FORAKER. That is, if there be a State where they do not tax a franchise or tax business in the sense in which it is contemplated in the amendment, then of course there will not be any tax imposed?

Mr. TURNER. That is true.

Mr. FORAKER. I make the inquiry only because there is a lack of uniformity in the States upon that point. I accept the amendment if that is a correct understanding of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington as a substitute for section 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURNER. I desire to offer an amendment to be incorporated as a separate section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as section 33 the following.

Mr. FORAKER. There is a section 32 now in the bill, I believe.

Mr. TURNER. Let the section be numbered correctly by the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That course will be pursued, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That for the purposes of jurisdiction of State courts in suits by or against the said corporation the said corporation shall, for all of said purposes, be taken and held to be a domestic corporation in all the States of the Union in which it may do a general business or have established branches.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept that amendment also, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to inquire as to an amendment offered by me, which I understood the Senator from Ohio had accepted, inserting a new section as section 33. I inquire if that was adopted?

Mr. FORAKER. That was the one offered by the Senator on Wednesday last?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida was agreed to, and is part of the bill as it now stands.

Mr. PETTUS. I move to amend, in section 7, on page 11, striking out, commencing with the last word in line 46 and including the word "agent," in line 48.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, on page 11, line 46, after the word "person," it is proposed to strike out "and to perform any and all acts and duties not inconsistent with law that it may undertake and assume as such financial agent;" so as to read:

Seventh. To act as the financial agent of any nation, government, State, municipality, corporation, or person, including the sale, exchange, or other disposition of any bonds or other evidences of indebtedness issued by any such government, State, municipality, corporation, etc.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not accept that amendment.

Mr. BACON. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], with the permission of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] before he goes on, in order that we may have an understanding of this matter, whether or not a bank, duly incorporated, doing an ordinary banking business, would not have the power to act as an agent without any express authority?

Mr. FORAKER. I think it would, and it is because of that, in part, that I think there is no objection to the provision as it stands; but if there should be any doubt about it at all, it is better to have it here so written in the bill. Certainly that does not confer upon the bank any power that can be exercised to the prejudice of anybody.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, it will be noticed that the preceding words of this paragraph give to this corporation the power "to act as the financial agent of any nation, government, State, municipality, corporation, or person." It gives them that power. Surely that would be enough. It also gives this bank power, while acting as such agent, "to perform any and all acts and duties not inconsistent with law that it may undertake and assume as such financial agent." In other words, it gives it the power to act as agent and then it gives it the power to do any act as such agent which it may assume to do—that is, it may discharge all the functions of business on earth, if it chooses to assume to do so, in addition to the power to act as agent. This bill confers upon this corporation the power to give itself power by assuming to discharge the duties. It is not limited to any banking business; it is not limited to any agency in any particular line of business. It is universal. Whenever it undertakes to act as an agent, it may do anything that mortal man could do for himself. It could establish a blacksmith shop; it could establish a line of steamers across the ocean; it could engage in the manufacture of goods; in a word, it could do any business that is lawful that man can possibly do. That is too much.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). Being paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY].

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. BATE (when Mr. TURLEY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TURLEY] is not present. He is paired, as has been announced, with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. My colleague is detained at home by reason of illness in his family.

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and as he is not present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY] who is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that we exchange our pairs, and that will enable the Senator from Louisiana and myself to vote, and the Senator from Georgia will stand paired with the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. McENERY. That is satisfactory to me. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. I vote "nay."

Mr. WELLINGTON. As I have already announced, I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that we transfer our pairs, which will enable us both to vote.

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is satisfactory to me. I vote "yea."

Mr. WELLINGTON. I vote "nay."

Mr. MANTLE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and unless my vote is necessary to make a quorum I shall withhold it. Is it necessary?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. MANTLE. Then I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK. As announced, I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], but for the purpose of making a quorum I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR. For the purpose of making a quorum I will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—20

Bate,	Faulkner,	Mills,	Sullivan,
Chilton,	Heitfeld,	Mitchell,	Teller,

So Mr. PETTUS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTUS. I move to amend, in section 4, on page 7, line 10, before the word "million," by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "ten," so as to fix the amount of the capital stock of this corporation at $10,000,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, on page 7, line 10, before the word "million," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten," so as to read:

Not exceeding the sum of $10,000,000.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I make the same exchange of pairs as before with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY]. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] will stand paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I will again announce my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). Under the arrangement previously announced, I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MONEY. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. I wish to again announce the pair of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. If the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MANTLE. I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. BACON. I desire to announce my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK. Understanding that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] would vote "yea" on this question, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. I exchange pairs with the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—19

Bate,	Faulkner,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Chilton,	Heitfeld,	Pasco,	Turner,
Cockrell,	Kyle,	Pettigrew,	Turpie,
Daniel,	McENERY,	Pettus,	White.
	Mills,	Sullivan,

NAYS—27

Allison,	Elkins,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,
Baker,	Fairbanks,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.
Burrows,	Foraker,	Hoar,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Frye,	Lodge,	Warren,
Cullom,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Wellington,
Davis,	Gear,	Morgan,	Wilson.
Deboe,	Hanna,	Morrill,

NOT VOTING—43

Aldrich,	Hale,	Mason,	Sewell,

Gray,	Martin,	Roach,

So Mr. PETTUS's amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I again announce the pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I announce the same exchange that I made on the previous vote, pairing the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and thus enabling the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY] and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. MANTLE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], but I will vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay." The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] would vote "yea," if he were present.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. I voted on the last vote because of the transfer of the pair of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. I do not feel at liberty to vote this time unless the same arrangement is made.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well; we will transfer pairs.

Mr. PERKINS. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAIRBANKS (when the name of Mr. PLATT of New York was called). I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). My pair being transferred, I vote "nay." I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MONEY] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE].

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). Under the arrangement previously announced, I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], so that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] stand paired on these votes. I am not aware how either of them would vote.

Mr. PASCO. I wish again to announce the pair of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. If the Senator from Arkansas were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BACON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON]. We have agreed to transfer those pairs, so that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] will stand paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], and the Senator from West Virginia and I can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ELKINS. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MANTLE. I have already announced my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I am informed by his colleague [Mr. DANIEL] that if he were present he would vote "nay." Upon that assurance I desire to vote. I vote "nay."

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is necessarily absent and is paired with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am instructed to state that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] is unavoidably absent, and if present would vote "nay" on the passage of the bill. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	Elkins,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.
Baker,	Fairbanks,	Hoar,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Warren,
Caffery,	Frye,	McMillan,	Wellington,

So the bill was passed.

SISSETON AND WAHPETON BANDS OF SIOUX.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3698 be made the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota requests that the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians be made the unfinished business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the bill be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the bill which was considered to-day and discussed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. PETTUS. I beg pardon; I thought it was a new bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order is simply to place it upon the Calendar as the unfinished business.

Mr. BATE. Is that the bill which proposes to appropriate $7,000,000?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the bill which was under discussion to-day when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Arkansas, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

On motion of Mr. PETTUS (at 5 o'clock p. m.), the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 20, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 17, 1898.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock m. by the Clerk, ALEXANDER McDOWELL, who read the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 17, 1898.

I hereby designate Hon. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, to preside during the session of the House this day.

T. B. REED, Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore thereupon took the chair.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.
The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to call up business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia next Tuesday, as Monday was taken for other matters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that it shall be in order on Tuesday next to call up business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is to entertain a privileged motion made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BABCOCK. Pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the bill (S. 914) to compel the street railway companies of the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. I will raise the question of consideration against that conference report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is in order.

Mr. CANNON. I think it is in order.

Mr. RAY of New York. I would like to suggest that the Speaker of the House ruled last Friday that we could not take up any public business on Friday except by special motion made to the House and a special vote upon it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no; the gentleman is in error about that. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker has never ruled that a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill did not take precedence of all other motions, unless it was a conference report.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Speaker held that the motion took priority over a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is satisfied that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois takes precedence, except the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to submit a conference report.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, one week ago the Private Calendar was dispensed with by a special vote. The question came up whether public business should take precedence of pension business on the Calendar, the unfinished business of Friday, and, as I understood the ruling of the Speaker, it was this: That under the rule the House had the power on Friday by vote, by so ordering it, for that purpose, to take up public business, but that we could not take up public business under the rule without a special vote of the House; that it would not do to do so.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care to take the time to raise the question of consideration on the conference report, but I want to say that I want to get on with this bill, and I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if it will not suit his convenience to call that up some other time?

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the conference report at this time. Now, will the gentleman permit me to ask for the consideration of my motion for unanimous consent? I will renew it. I ask unanimous consent that the business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia may be taken up next Tuesday.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that next Wednesday be set aside for private-bill day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman include the evening session?

Mr. CANNON. I object.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. RAY of New York. I object to that, Mr. Speaker, and it was objected to before by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his objection?

Mr. CANNON. I do not object to next Wednesday.

Mr. RAY of New York. I object before the Friday night session is dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair put the request of the gentleman from New Jersey, and did the gentleman from New York object at that time?

Mr. RAY of New York. I was on my feet for the purpose of objecting, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has made the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair will entertain the objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to know, in the first instance, whether there is a purpose here to do away with the Friday night session?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. There is not. I asked the consent of the House that it should be Wednesday night. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my request. I ask unanimous consent that Wednesday be set apart for the consideration of private business.

Mr. RAY of New York. That includes this evening?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. I think we ought to have the regular order.

Mr. RAY of New York. I make the point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read the ninth section of Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

At any time after the reading of the Journal it shall be in order, by direction of the appropriate committees, to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue or general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, there being on a division (called for by Mr. RAY of New York)—ayes 96, noes 8.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. PAYNE in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10691) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege of having printed in the RECORD the paper which I hold in my hand. The Chair will remember that some days ago a very interesting question arose about the right to substitute one regular order of business for another. The question was debated briefly in the House and decided by the Speaker. The same question seems to have come up again this morning, and as part of my remarks I desire to put in the RECORD citations of various rulings, which are uniform upon the subject, running back as far as the first session of the Eleventh Congress.

There was no objection.

The paper presented by Mr. GROSVENOR is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1895.

MY DEAR GENERAL: In accordance with your request that I give you the history of the rule and the rulings in respect to Friday's business, I submit the following statement:

On January 22, 1810 (first session Eleventh Congress), the House, by a vote of yeas 83, nays 15, adopted the following amendment to the standing rules and orders of the House as submitted by Mr. Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky, viz:

"Resolved, That Friday in each week be set apart for the consideration of reports and bills originating from petition."

On January 26, 1823 (first session Nineteenth Congress), the House, without division, adopted the following amendment to the rules, proposed by Mr. William L. Brent, of Louisiana, viz:

"That Friday and Saturday in every week be set apart for the consideration of private bills and private business, in preference to any other, unless otherwise determined by a majority of the House."

On April 26, 1828, the House adopted, without division, the following amendment to the one hundred and fourth rule, submitted by Mr. Ichabod Bartlett, of New Hampshire, viz:

"Nor shall the order of business as established by the rules of the House be postponed or changed except by a vote of at least two-thirds of the members present."

Under this amendment relating to a postponement or change of the daily order of business, it was decided by Speaker Stevenson, of Virginia, in the same session, that a two-thirds vote was required to proceed to public business on Friday and Saturday. The ground given by Speaker Stevenson and subsequent Speakers was that, under the rule of April 26, 1828, no exception was made in favor of the clause for a majority contained in the original rule, and that therefore that provision was annulled. There have been at least three appeals taken upon this question in different Houses, but in each instance the House affirmed the decision in favor of a two-thirds vote in order to postpone or set aside private business.

On May 8, 1874 (first session Forty-third Congress), Mr. Randall reported a resolution from the Committee on Rules proposing to amend Rules 123 and 129 by striking out the words "and Saturday" where these words are used in said rules. Rule 123 provided that "Friday and Saturday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private bills and private business, in preference to any other, unless otherwise determined by a majority of the House." Rule 129 provided that "on the first and fourth Friday and Saturday of each month the Calendar of Private Bills shall be called over," etc. (The remainder of the rule provided for what was then known as objection day and consideration day, the first Friday being assigned to the consideration of bills to which no objection was made, and when that bill was again reached it should be considered, unless objected to by five members.)

In the revision of the rules made in the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress the following rule (XXVI) in relation to private bills was adopted, viz:

"Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting."

In the revision made in the rules of the House in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, the Committee on Rules reported in favor of striking out the following words, Rule XXVI, viz: "by a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "by the House." In the report accompanying the revision proposed it was stated that the words "a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting" were stricken out and the words "the House" inserted, in order to make the rule harmonious with the third paragraph of clause 7 of Rule XXIV. There had been a conflict between the two provisions which had occasioned bitter controversies in previous Houses, and I called the attention of the committee to this conflict, with the result that the committee unanimously decided that it should be settled by allowing a majority to decide what business it will take up. That code of rules was adopted on December 18, 1885, and from that time motions were repeatedly made, especially toward the close of the session, to dispense with private business for the day, or to dispense with private bills, for the purpose of considering appropriation or revenue bills, or for the purpose of considering continuing special orders. The following are a few instances of motions made to that effect, viz:

On Friday, January 15, 1886 (Journal first session Forty-ninth Congress, page 372), Mr. Springer moved that private business for the day be dispensed with, not to interfere with the previous order of the House for an evening session; which said motion was agreed to.

On Friday, April 2 (ibid., Journal, page 1129), Mr. John J. O'Neill, as a privileged question, moved "to dispense with private business for the present;" which motion was agreed to, by yeas 155, nays 71.

On Friday, April 30 (ibid., Journal, page 1437), "on motion of Mr. Willis, of Kentucky, private business was dispensed with for the day."

On Friday, May 7 (ibid., Journal, page 1538), "Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, moved that private business be dispensed with for to-day;" which motion was rejected by yeas 104, nays 106.

I might go on with the list of Fridays for the remainder of the session, which terminated on August 5, 1886, but there would be but a repetition of the instances cited. In every case where a motion was made to dispense with private business for the day it was held by Speaker Carlisle to be a privileged motion, requiring only a majority vote to carry it. It was not, as in the case of your motion, one "to proceed to the consideration of public business," but it was the absolute equivalent, making the case affirmative rather than negative. It was discussed informally at the time, and on the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules, it was agreed that the motion to dispense with private business for the day, "or for the present," as was done, was preferable to the motion to proceed directly with the consideration of public business.

Clause 6 of Rule XXIV provides that on Friday of each week, after the unfinished business has been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar, "and if this motion fails, then public business shall be in order as on other days." Now, Rule XXVI, which provides that Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by the House, cuts off unfinished business, unless it be of a private character, for it might happen that there would be at least twenty or fifty private bills coming over as unfinished business, and Rule XXVI was framed by me for the Committee on Rules of the Forty-ninth Congress for the express purpose of cutting out that class of bills, it being desired that toward the close of a session private bills should give way to public business, especially appropriation bills.

There might, as Mr. RICHARDSON stated, be private unfinished business coming over from a previous Friday, and there might be private business on the Speaker's table, so that it would require two motions to accomplish what was done by your single motion to proceed to the consideration of public business. Technically, Mr. RICHARDSON was right in stating that it is without precedent in the House to move to consider public business on Friday, but Mr. RICHARDSON was well aware that it was in order to move to dispense with private business for the day, or for the present, as might be determined by the member making the motion. Each motion was held to be privileged and in order by Speaker Carlisle, both in the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses. Speaker REED followed the practice all through the Fifty-first Congress, and the instances are numerous, passim (as they say in Athens), and it would be merely piling Pelion on Ossa to reproduce them.

The intention of the Committee on Rules in the Forty-ninth Congress, which made the present rule, was to accomplish this precise result by one motion, to do away with private business for the day or for a part of the day. I am sure that Mr. REED will remember perfectly well the remark made to Speaker Carlisle in the committee room "that having beaten Randall out of most of the appropriation bills and the Holman amendment, they had better let him have a chance to wipe out Fridays in order to save the public money." I think you will see, upon reflection, that while it might be a refinement, perhaps, of parliamentary law, the correct practice is to move to dispense with private business for the day or for the present, rather than to move to the consideration of public business.

As you will observe, Friday is "set apart" for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by the House. Therefore, you will observe, the motion to dispense with private business is the natural, legitimate, and logical motion to make. It is not very material, perhaps, "as you got there just the same," but under a strict construction Speaker REED would have been justified in ruling out your motion in the form it was put by you. I notice, however, that the Speaker saw the point, for at the conclusion of his ruling he said (page 6383, second column): "The gentleman moves that we lay aside private business for the day," whereas your motion was that the House "proceed at this time to the consideration of public business." From this I judge the Speaker still has an abundant supply of "gray matter."

Very sincerely, yours,

HENRY H. SMITH.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
House of Representatives.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I should like to insert in the RECORD the letter of the Postmaster-General in regard to the estimated deficiency in the appropriations for the free-delivery system, which was under discussion yesterday.

There was no objection.

The letter submitted by Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to request that you ask Congress to provide an appropriation of $163,000 to meet a probable deficiency of that amount in the appropriation for the free-delivery service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898. For your information I submit a detailed statement showing the manner in which the deficiency is created.

Very respectfully,

JAS. A. GARY, Postmaster-General.

Hon. LYMAN J. GAGE,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

against the Committee on Appropriations for reporting this particular item. They found this deficiency in the Post-Office Department and they reported this appropriation as a necessary consequence. But, Mr. Chairman, I feel that Congress should rebuke the Postmaster-General or the Post-Office Department for expending more money than was appropriated by Congress. In this particular instance we find that $163,000 has been expended over and above what was appropriated at the last session of Congress for this particular purpose.

At every regular meeting of Congress estimates are made and considered by the Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. This particular item of expenditure came before the committee at the last session. A statement was submitted to that committee from the Post-Office Department as to the amount which would be necessary to carry on this free-delivery system. The committee reported an appropriation of almost the identical amount that was asked for by the Department. Yet we find that the Department, regardless of its estimate and the amount appropriated by Congress, has gone on and expended an additional sum. Now, if the Department has no regard for the amounts which have been appropriated and exceeds them at will, what is the use of Congress fixing these amounts, and what is the use of acting upon estimates and making appropriations in accordance therewith if those appropriations can be exceeded afterwards by executive officers?

Mr. Chairman, in this instance there were, I believe, about 370 letter carriers appointed in addition to the number that were already on the list. Now, it does seem to me that it is very poor business management on the part of the Postmaster-General if he could not see that if this number were appointed, in addition to the number that were already on the list who had not been included in the estimate, he must necessarily fall short in the amount of money appropriated. And we find that in the very first six months of his administration he expended over $40,000 more than had been appropriated for that period.

I think, however, we will have to make this appropriation. Under the circumstances I am not in favor of striking it out, although I will say that if I believed, as does the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], that the former appropriation had been squandered and stolen, I would have moved to strike it out. I do not believe that this was the case, however, and we can not afford even for a short time to cut off the entire delivery service, but at the same time it is a question that is open to criticism, and I believe that the administration of the various Departments should be held within the limits of the appropriations that are made. If they are to simply disregard the law and go on and make expenditures that they have no legal right to make, and Congress must afterwards meet the deficiency, then there is no restriction or limit to be placed upon these appropriations.

If there ever was a time when we should practice rigid economy and comply strictly with the letter of the law upon these appropriations, it is now, for we are necessarily making large appropriations daily to carry on the necessary expenses of the war, which must be borne by the taxpayers of the country. We find that in many of these cities there are more deliveries than are actually necessary, and in this instance, instead of cutting off the free deliveries as they exist in many of the cities, eight or ten a day, the Department actually increased them where there was no necessity, and we find ourselves to-day confronted with this deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I speak on behalf of the city of New York, whose interests are involved in every effort to strike out this appropriation. Last year it was discovered that the appropriations for the postal service were not going to hold out. In endeavoring to recoup, the Postmaster-General proposed to cut off the number of deliveries in the large cities. This was a vital blow at the commercial interests of New York. The post-office building there is not large enough to-day to accommodate the business of that city. The building ought to be enlarged, but all efforts to secure an enlargement are opposed by the economists. New York City pays a net profit of $5,000,000 a year to the Government from its post-office revenues.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a reduction of the number of daily deliveries to four would have practically made it impossible for the letter carriers in New York to make any complete deliveries whatever. It was a physical impossibility for the letter carriers to distribute the mail in four deliveries.

The whole business would have been congested in the post-office. The letters would have accumulated in the office until an additional force would have been required to clear them away.

It requires eight deliveries a day now to get the mail out of the post-office into the hands of the citizens of New York, and hard work at that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think if gentlemen here will calmly and dispassionately look at the proposition to strike out this appropriation they will see that it is a losing operation, instead of one beneficial to either the Department or the people. If you reduce the postal facilities of the city of New York, you reduce the receipts from that city, and the General Government will get less net revenue than it gets today. The increase in the number of deliveries of that city has already increased the net revenues from $4,600,000 to $5,000,000. Mr. Chairman, a city producing this net revenue for the Government ought at least to have some consideration from this House in regard to its own business.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is it not true that the non-delivery offices produce greater net revenue than the delivery offices?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have only three minutes, and regret that I can not yield to the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this clause is stricken out, who will suffer? First, the poor letter carriers. You must either reduce their wages or reduce their number to make your balance. Who will suffer next? The commercial interests of the large cities. Who else will suffer? The people of the United States, because the Government will get poorer service and less net revenue from those cities than it does to-day.

Mr. Chairman, I hope, in view of this explanation, that gentlemen will see the necessity of making this appropriation and not of striking it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MCCALL. I apprehend that there is no serious danger of the committee striking this provision out of the bill; but inasmuch as my district is entirely under the free-delivery system, I ought perhaps to say a few words upon it. It seems to me that if the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman who has been the Democratic chairman of the Committee on Appropriation [Mr. SAYERS] had not disdained yesterday to make more than a mere technical and perfunctory explanation of this provision, nothing would have been said in objection to it.

What is the practical question before the House? I am not concerned with the defense of the action of the late Postmaster-General. At the same time, since that gentleman is out of office and has retired to private life, it is well for us to remember that this deficiency is only about 1 per cent of the total amount appropriated, and that deficiencies have occurred in other Departments of the Government, and that there was a great increase in the postal business, which made necessary some additional service.

I say that with regard to him, although I am in no wise concerned to defend him. But what is the practical proposition? We have here a deficiency of $161,000. If no appropriation is made for that, there is but one way of meeting it, and that is, during the balance of this fiscal year, to cut down the service enough to recoup the whole of the $161,000; that is, in about ten days we have got to cut into the bone and body of the postal service enough to save $161,000. That would be at the rate of six millions a year, and it would cut off nearly half the carriers in the United States. I imagine that no gentleman on this floor, when he is faced with that proposition, will for a moment think of voting to strike out this provision in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BRADLEY] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, representing as I do a district which was formerly represented by one of the ablest men that ever graced the halls of Congress, a man to whom the letter carrier was the darling of his heart, and who did more to build up the postal service than any other one man in the United States, the late Samuel S. Cox, I feel that I would be an unworthy successor of his if I failed in my humble way to do what I could to further the work which he did so much to forward.

Not only is what my friend and colleague [Mr. CUMMINGS] has said true, that the large cities are self-supporting in their postal service, but in every one of them the revenue contributed to the United States Treasury has been increased in proportion to the number of their free deliveries.

In this connection I desire to submit the following table, furnished by the Postmaster-General of the United States:

Post-office.	Free-delivery expense.	Net revenue to Department.	Percent expense to gross receipts.
New York	$1,406,033.00	$4,003,730.56	41
Chicago	1,171,245.78	2,890,411.39	44
Philadelphia	890,554.34	1,330,073.74	53
Boston	644,932.83	1,510,405.90	45
St. Louis	317,604.83	946,735.22	40
Brooklyn	675,929.44	246,462.09	78
Cincinnati	207,348.80	654,979.27	39
Baltimore	314,210.37	879,111.05	58
San Francisco	215,169.87	413,461.79	51
Buffalo	179,942.23	365,459.80	45
Cleveland	167,224.91	404,872.41	42
Detroit	155,547.08	339,176.85	45

The proposition here is to make an appropriation of $163,000 to supply a deficiency for the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1898. Much argument has been had as to who is responsible for the deficiency; whether Congress in failing to make a sufficient appropriation or the Postmaster-General in expending more for the first ten months of the fiscal year than should have been expended. But it is a condition and not a theory which confronts us.

A failure to make this deficiency appropriation means injury to a great many and benefit to no one. In the first place, it would require the suspension of over 9,000 letter carriers between now and July 1. They, of course, would be injured on account of their loss of employment.

The letter carriers who are still retained will be injured because their work will be increased, and they are sufficiently worked at the present time. The commercial interests of the country which conducts much of its business through the mails, will be injured by a reduction of the number of deliveries. The Government of the United States will be injured because many of the short-distance deliveries, the most profitable mail service, will be cut off. For instance, it costs as much to send a sealed letter five or six blocks in my district as it does to send a similar letter to San Francisco. Reduce the number of mail deliveries in New York City, or any of the other large cities, and the short-distance service will be replaced by messenger, telephone, or telegraph service. The Government is thus injured by the loss of its most profitable mail service, while the merchant or business man is put to an extra expense.

Much complaint has been made about the unjust discrimination in behalf of the large cities and against the country districts. While we have many free deliveries each day, they have none. The injustice, however, is apparent and not real. If complaint is to be made, it should be made by us and not against us. While we pay for our own service we contribute revenue toward building up the postal service throughout the United States. Our postal service as a business proposition is a great benefit to the United States, while the postal service of country districts, which we desire and are anxious to build up, is a burden upon the people of our country. Yet I shall always vote in favor of any reasonable extension of the free mail delivery throughout the United States, as I feel it to be a benefit to the body of the people.

In speaking of the postal service of the city of New York, I wish also to call attention to the fact that in reckoning up our own accounts we charge ourselves not alone with the service, which is for our own benefit, but also with a money-order department, which is practically the same thing to the different post-offices throughout the United States as a clearing house is to the banks of our country; also, the principal publications of weekly and monthly newspapers and magazines intended mostly for the benefit of country districts are sent from the city of New York.

In view of all these facts, it seems to me that there can be no reasonable ground of objection to the passage of this appropriation. If there be any objection because more money has been expended by the head of the Department than was appropriated, it is an objection which might be against any deficiency bill, and I have never known a bill less objectionable on its own merits than the one now under consideration.

In passing, also, I wish to pay what I consider a well-merited compliment to all those engaged in the postal service. So careful and efficient has been their work, that in courts of justice, where the strictest proof of service is required, when evidence is given of the fact that a letter properly addressed has been mailed, no matter what distance it must go or through how many hands it must pass, it is presumed to have reached its proper destination in the absence of absolute proof to the contrary.

The letter carriers are perhaps the most faithful and efficient of any persons in the public service. The post-office clerks are undoubtedly the poorest paid of any in the Government employ. Seeking to cut appropriations for the postal service is cheese-paring parsimony and not economy. I hope that these few remarks will still and forever silence the complaints so frequently and unjustly made against numerous free deliveries in our large cities and that this appropriation will be passed by the unanimous vote of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, the most important feature of this contention is not the amount of money involved, but the question as to what should be the conduct of officials having the disbursement of public money. I have been astonished at the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL]. In order that there may be no misunderstanding of his position I want to read from his remarks of yesterday:

Now, the situation was just this: The Postmaster-General went ahead with the authority that he had the right to exercise, to employ additional force if he chose for the first few months—the first six months, we will say—of this present fiscal year. He notified the country that if that force was to be continued for the entire year there would be a deficiency.

Now, I deny the right of any official of the Government who has a certain fund appropriated for the use of his Department for the entire year to consume it in one-half the year, doubling the service for a short period and then deprive the whole country of all the service the balance of the year. Such a position is monstrous to begin with.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will yield to the gentleman later. Now, that was attempted here once before. I do not mean that the late Postmaster-General has resorted to the methods that were then employed, but it will be remembered that when the celebrated star-route jobbing was going on the man in charge of the fund did this very thing and said he exercised his discretion therein, and having used the fund of a whole year in part of a year threatened to cut off every star route in the United States for four or six weeks if Congress did not come forward and make the appropriations he asked, and thereby ratify his crooked methods.

The spirit of the law that ought to characterize the administration of the Post-Office Department and every other Department is, and should be, to run with the appropriation that Congress makes for each year, and to give the service that Congress appropriates for. That is not, however, a mere matter of my opinion, but I read the statutes on the subject. It is not contended that this official used more funds than were appropriated; and the question is whether or not any official is allowed to do so under the law. Section 3679 of the statutes provides that—

No Department of the Government shall expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

Section 3674 provides that—

Payments of money out of the Treasury on account of the postal service shall be in pursuance of appropriations made by law, by warrants of the Postmaster-General, registered and countersigned by the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, and expressing on their face the appropriation to which they should be charged.

Then, Mr. Chairman, away with the doctrine that any official, high or low, can involve the Government in a charge by expending any more money than is authorized by law. Away, also, with the doctrine that the spirit of the law is not overridden when any official expends all that is appropriated in the bill in one-third or half of that year and then deprives the people of the service to which they are entitled. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROMWELL. As I am promised recognition in my own right, I will not interrupt the gentleman and take a portion of his time.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gist of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio is that an official may do this very thing. Suppose an official says as to these letter carriers, "I will treble the number of letter carriers of the United States; I will expend all of this sum in four months, and the balance of the twelve months I will discharge all the employees; I will stop every letter carrier in the United States, and the entire mail system of the United States shall be diverted from its legitimate use." Does anyone say that is not a violation of the law? And if it is a violation of law in entirety it is in every particular. Officials having charge of public funds should expend them according to law; then if a sufficient service is not given, the people can settle the account with their Representatives.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee might be a good argument against the passage of any deficiency bill, for there is not a single deficiency bill ever brought into this House but what means that the Department has expended more than the appropriation. That is what we mean by a deficiency appropriation bill, and it is made necessary by the fact that we have not the necessary foresight to enable us to determine absolutely the amount of money that each of these great Departments is going to need.

Now, in regard to the statement made by me yesterday, and to which the gentleman has referred, that the Postmaster-General has a right in his discretion to expend more than the fractional proportion of the entire annual allowance during any portion of the year, provided he reduces the expenditure proportionately during the remainder of the year, it seems to me too plain to be controverted. The necessities of the service has to determine as to what amount of money is to be expended month by month. During the summer months, when the seaside resorts are thronged, they require postal service that is not called for during the winter months. During election times the mails are loaded down with literature, and that requires an additional force of men for the purpose of carrying that mail. During the Christmas season, when Christmas goods and Christmas gifts are passing through the mails, in every one of the large offices additional carrier force is put on temporarily.

I say again that inasmuch as we do not make this appropriation for each month, but for the entire year, we do not limit the Postmaster-General to so much for January, so much for February, and so much for March, and so much for each month of the year, and that if the Postmaster-General during the entire fiscal year expends the amount of money appropriated it is a matter entirely in his discretion as to how he shall scatter the expenditures of that amount throughout the year. The Postmaster-General has not violated any act of Congress. He said to us early in the spring, or in the latter part of the winter, it will be necessary to cut down the present force of carriers unless a deficiency is created. He notified the postmasters of the different cities how many he proposed to cut off at his office. For instance, I think he proposed to drop eleven in the city of Cincinnati. The business men of the country took the matter up, and they insisted that Congress should provide whatever money was necessary to continue the entire force during the year.

It was not any question of the political influence of the few carriers who were to be dismissed, but rather the absolute necessity of an efficient public service in all our large cities, which influenced the members of this House who at that time protested against the proposed reduction in the carrier service, and the same influence is behind the demand that this item should not be stricken from the bill and entail a most serious interference with all the business of the country between now and the 1st of July.

The remarks of some of the gentlemen would seem to imply that the Postmaster-General had already violated some law and that in passing this item in the bill we are condoning the offense. As a matter of fact, the Postmaster-General has not yet expended the entire amount of the appropriation for free-delivery service and can very easily get within the appropriation by the proper use of the power of dismissal. But such a step would be productive of the greatest dissatisfaction and complaint, for which we would be justly chargeable.

The deficit is but a small percentage of the entire amount to be expended for the free-delivery service during the current year—not any way near as great as the deficit in other Departments of the Government which are not being criticised. The money has unquestionably been honestly and carefully expended for the benefit of the public. There is not the slightest hint or suspicion of any dishonesty in its disbursement, and from a knowledge more or less intimate of the workings of the Department I feel sure that no great branch of the Government or, for that matter, any corporation or private business disbursing such immense sums of money could be more careful or more economical in all those matters of administrative detail where discretion is left to the head of the Department. Particularly do I wish to bear witness to the faithfulness and efficiency of the First Assistant Postmaster-General and the Superintendent of Free Delivery in this matter of care in handling the great army of mail carriers throughout the country, upon whose efficiency so much depends for the expedition of the business of the country.

I refer to these gentlemen particularly because the one item of this bill which seems to have drawn forth any criticism is the one which calls for an expenditure under their charge and direction, and I do not intend by referring to them especially to disparage the eminent fitness and qualifications of the gentlemen having charge of the other divisions of the Post-Office Department. I believe they are all honest, capable, and conscientious public servants, all working to increase the efficiency and usefulness of the particular branch of the Post-Office work intrusted to their charge.

While I recognize the desirability of adhering to the general policy of keeping our expenditures within the amount of the appropriation, yet I know that the policy of Congress has been to cut down estimates below those submitted and to substitute the judgment of a committee for the opinion of the heads of Departments as to what those Departments need.

As a result of this it invariably happens that not in one Department alone, but in all of them, we come each year with a deficiency bill to correct the errors of our judgment by appropriating enough to make good the legitimate expenditures which have been necessarily incurred. As long as a great Department of the Government, upon whose successful administration so much depends, is able in the expenditure of millions of dollars to keep its deficit in the neighborhood of 1 per cent of the amount appropriated, I for one, in the absence of a showing of fraud and dishonesty, will be ready to vote the money to make up the deficiency.

Mr. CANNON. How much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Four minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Am I recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in this House, on the 27th day of January, this year, I stated my position in regard to the proposed attempt to curtail the free-delivery post-office system in certain cities in this country, especially in the city of New York, which I have the honor in part to represent. I reiterate now all I said then. I am and always will be a sincere friend of the letter carriers. I shall always stand by them and do all in my power to secure their rights. I simply desire to say now that I hope this appropriation of $163,000 will not be stricken out. It ought not to be. It is absolutely necessary, and unless it is passed by this House the service will be severely crippled. I trust no member of this House will object to it. You remember that at the time, the beginning of this year, an attempt was made to reduce the letter-carrier force in a number of the cities of the United States by reason of the fact that there was not sufficient money to pay them.

It was then that the chairman of this committee stood upon the floor of this House, and in reply to a question from me he said that he would see that they were not discharged and that he would provide for their pay in the urgent deficiency bill, or that he would bring in a special deficiency bill to pay them. They were retained. The service was not crippled, and this appropriation is now made and is necessary to pay them. And, sir, we are in honor bound, it seems to me, to appropriate this money to pay these letter carriers. If we do not do it, we will cause confusion, delay, and irreparable injury; we will stultify ourselves, injure the service, and embarrass the Department, and besides we will go back on the word of the distinguished and genial chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. [Laughter and applause].

I hope there will be no objection to this appropriation and that it will pass this House now by an unanimous vote. There are no better employees of the Government than the letter carriers.

Mr. CANNON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is any intention on the part of this committee to strike out this appropriation from the deficiency bill. So far as I am personally concerned, I am willing to allow the matter to rest with the good judgment and sense of justice of this committee. These deficiencies have been created in the cities which are the largest revenue producers of the Post-Office Department. I simply desire to voice my sentiments to the House that I may appear in the RECORD as favoring this appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in the two minutes I have remaining I only desire to say that this is not an additional appropriation for this service. It is not a deficiency appropriation, in fact, although called such. If the House makes it, it will be expended. If the House does not make it, there will be enough letter carriers discharged throughout the country, furloughed, between now and the 1st of July to bring the service within the appropriation. That is all I want to say about it.

Mr. MAHON. Six thousand carriers discharged.

Mr. BINGHAM. Ten thousand.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know how many, but enough will be cut off to bring it within the appropriation. Now, as to whether this condition ought to be created or not, I will not discuss. The rule of the Department is to expend the money that is appropriated and properly apportion it throughout the twelve months. I believe that is a sound policy and one I hope and expect in the future will be adhered to and ought to be adhered to. Now, is there any motion pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a motion to strike out the last word, and without objection the formal amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Indian Territory jails: To establish sites to be selected by the Attorney-General and for the erection thereon complete of three United States jails, one each in the northern, central, and southern districts of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes incident thereto, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, and to be available until expended, $100,000.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 12, page 53, the word "three" and insert "seven;" in same line strike out the words "one each" and insert "three;" and after the word "northern," in line 12, insert the words "two each in the;" and in line 16 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas if it will not suit his convenience if by unanimous consent we pass by this provision, with his amendment pending, and return to it when we have finished reading the bill?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. That will be quite agreeable to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that this paragraph be passed over with the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas considered as pending. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 7, 8, and 9 and word "Texarkana," in line 10, page 61, and insert the following:

"That the clerk of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of the State of Arkansas shall hold his office at Fort Smith, in said State, and shall be ex officio clerk of the district court of the United States at Fort Smith aforesaid. The clerk of the district court of the United States for the western district of the State of Arkansas shall hold his office at Texarkana, in said State, and shall be ex officio clerk of the circuit court of the United States at Texarkana aforesaid."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, has the paragraph which the gentleman from Iowa seeks to amend been read?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. McRAE. I have no disposition to take up the time, and I ask that it be considered as read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks that the paragraph, which has not been reported, but to which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa applies, be considered as read by the Clerk.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order as to that paragraph when it is read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

That an additional clerk of the district court and an additional clerk of the circuit court for the western district of Arkansas shall be appointed to be clerks of said courts at Texarkana; that the acts and doings of the acting clerk of each of said courts at Texarkana since February 20, 1897, are hereby validated, and the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow said acting clerks the same fees and compensation for services rendered for the United States as they would have been entitled to if they had been lawfully appointed and held said offices in strict compliance with law.

The CHAIRMAN. To that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] offers the amendment which has been read.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph as it stands.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to call my friend's attention to the fact that no points of order were reserved against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that no points of order were reserved.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not understand that because the first reading of the bill was dispensed with we have no right to make a point of order against a paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the point. The first reading of the bill was dispensed with in Committee of the Whole, but when the bill was reported to the House was the proper time to reserve points of order. The Chair is informed that no points of order were reserved against the bill or any part of it, and so the bill has been sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union without any points of order reserved against it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Nobody had an opportunity to present a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, they did, when the bill was reported to the House from the Committee on Appropriations. That was the proper time to reserve points of order.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The effect of dispensing with the first reading of the bill in the House was to cut off all points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. Points of order could have been reserved when the bill was reported to the House without the bill being read, and that was the proper time to do it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. How could a member know what was in the bill until it was read to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of precaution, any member of the House might reserve points of order without knowing what was in the bill.

Mr. CONNOLLY. If such is the rule, of course I can not insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the rule which, as the Chair is informed, has always been enforced with reference to appropriation bills; and the present occupant of the Chair is inclined to think that the ruling is correct. If a point of order should be submitted to any paragraph of the bill, the Chair would be compelled to overrule it.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in explanation of the amendment which I send to the desk. The clause of the bill as it now stands provides for two additional clerks—one a clerk of the circuit court of the United States and the other a clerk of the district court of the United States for the district of Arkansas. I think it clear that these new officers are entirely unnecessary, and my amendment will obviate their authorization.

In the western district of Arkansas there are two places, and only two, for holding court. One of them is at Fort Smith and the other at Texarkana. In the western district of Arkansas there is a clerk of the circuit court of the United States and there is a clerk of the district court of the United States. These clerks at the present time reside at Fort Smith. The clause in the bill as it now stands creates a clerk of the circuit court and a clerk of the district court at Texarkana. Now, there are only four terms of court held in the western district of Arkansas during the course of the year—two terms of the district court and two terms of the circuit court. Surely two clerks are enough for the business arising in connection with four terms of court.

The amendment provides that the clerk of the circuit court of the United States for the western division of Arkansas at Fort Smith shall be the clerk of the district court for the western district of Arkansas at Fort Smith, and that the clerk of the district court shall hold his office at Texarkana and shall be the clerk of both courts at that place.

It may be said, and probably will be said, and probably was so assumed by the Committee on Appropriations in reporting this provision, that nothing is to be gained by restricting the number of clerks. My experience in public life is that a public officer generally manages to get his pay and a little more if he is attached to a Federal court, and that the fewer there are of these officers the better for the public service. The pay of the clerks of the Federal courts is taken out of their fees, and they can receive nothing beyond their fees. The maximum of their compensation, however, is $3,500, which amount they receive if the fees collected or received by them reach that sum. Now, with two clerks in the western district of Arkansas, only $7,000 can be legitimately taken out of the public Treasury for their compensation. But create two more clerks, and it is possible for four clerks to take $14,000 out of the public Treasury.

A MEMBER. Not out of the Treasury, but out of the fees collected.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It comes out of the public Treasury just the same.

Now, in 1895 the clerks for the western district of Arkansas earned over $10,000 and were obliged to pay over $3,000 into the Treasury. In 1896 the two clerks for that district earned again over $10,000, paying the excess into the public Treasury. Now, I insist that there is no necessity for two other clerks when there are only four terms of court held each year. Therefore the amendment provides that one clerk shall hold his office at Fort Smith, where both courts are held, and the other is to hold his office at Texarkana, where both courts are held. This completes the organization on the most economical and the fairest basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I should like to have a minute or two more. The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman's time will be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. It is only a little while since the Appropriations Committee reproached the Committee on the Judiciary for the enormous expenses of the judiciary of the country. That was at the beginning of the Fifty-fourth Congress. The Judiciary Committee then went to work, and by means of an immense amount of labor accomplished a reform which has saved the country I can not say how many million dollars—variously estimated at from one million to two million per annum. Now, the Judiciary Committee is naturally a little jealous and naturally objects to having this reform nibbled away by insects; and while this very matter is now pending before the Judiciary Committee I have not been able to assent to the addition of two more clerks in that western district of Arkansas. We have asked for information from the Department of Justice and have not yet received it. But in so far as I have communicated with the members of that committee they are opposed to the increase. That is all I care to say.

Mr. McRAE. I ask the careful attention of every member of the committee in order that my position upon this amendment may be fairly understood. It is a matter of great importance to the judicial district in which I reside. By a Treasury ruling the Texarkana division of the western district of Arkansas has recently been deprived of any clerk, and the pending paragraph in the bill is intended to give that division what Congress has heretofore attempted to give it. On April 1, 1892, a law was passed, which is found on page 13 of volume 27 of the Statutes at Large, which reads as follows:

There shall be appointed in the eastern district of Arkansas one additional clerk of the district court and one of the circuit court, who shall reside and keep their offices at Texarkana.

Under that law the circuit judge and the district judge appointed clerks. On the 20th of February, 1897, after the western district of Arkansas had lost the Indian Territory jurisdiction, it became necessary to reorganize the judicial districts of Arkansas by adding more territory to the western district, and in doing this Congress substantially transferred the Texarkana division from the eastern to the western district, but there was no purpose to repeal the act of April 1, 1892, which gave the division clerks. In fact, Mr. Chairman, it was understood and agreed, as far as such matters can be made the subject of agreement between members, that the clerks in both districts should remain as they were, and the power to appoint them should rest upon the statutes which had been previously passed, except in the northern division of the eastern district, which was a new division. For that two clerks were authorized by section 8 of the act of February 20, 1897, and required to keep their offices at Batesville. It is as follows:

SEC. 8. That there shall be appointed in the northern division of the eastern district of the State of Arkansas one additional clerk of the district court, and one of the circuit court, who shall reside and keep their respective offices in the city of Batesville.

By the act of January 31, 1877, district clerks were authorized for Helena and Little Rock. That act is as follows:

In the eastern district of Arkansas there shall be appointed two clerks of the district court thereof, one of whom shall reside and keep his office at Little Rock and the others shall reside and keep his office at Helena.

There was no reference in the act reorganizing the district to the clerks at Helena, Little Rock, or Texarkana. There was no purpose to repeal the act of April 1, 1892, or to dispense with the clerks at Texarkana. On the contrary, it was assumed by the committee that the said act would continue in force. The judges so construed the law. Judge Caldwell continued Samuel Gibson, who was clerk of the circuit court prior to the passage of the act of February 20, 1897, and he has up to this time performed all the duties of such clerk. Judge Rogers appointed John M. Sommer-vell clerk of the district court, and he gave bond as such June 1, 1897, and has acted as such clerk until now. The clerks have both continued to perform services and have submitted their accounts to the Treasury Department for settlement, but the accounting officers take the position that there is no authority of law for clerks at Texarkana, and have refused to pay for work performed. This paragraph in the appropriation bill now pending is intended to authorize the appointment of clerks and to validate the acts and doings of the said acting clerks at Texarkana since February 20, 1897.

I am not satisfied that the Treasury construction is the correct one, but I think the easiest way to remedy it is to pass this or some such provision. Although this act of April 1, 1892, is still upon the statute books, it is held by the Treasury officials that neither of them can legally serve as clerks. If that be correct, then there is no authority for appointing deputies for that division, and no authority for any clerk whatever. The condition is too serious to delay action on it. The important question involved in the paragraph here is whether we will authorize Judge Caldwell and Judge Rogers to do as other judges may do—appoint clerks for their respective courts. I admit that there is not more than business enough in each of these divisions for one good clerk—at least that is the case in the Texarkana division—but I submit to the gentleman from Iowa and to those upon the opposite side of the Chamber that it would be unjust and unfair to Judge Rogers, the district judge, to authorize and direct the circuit judge, who has never held, and perhaps will never hold, circuit court in that district, to appoint the clerks to serve the courts over which Judge Rogers presides. The district judge ought to have the power to appoint and remove his clerk.

I have no objection to that part of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa which relates to the Texarkana division, and if the gentleman will modify it so as to strike out that part which refers to the Fort Smith division he can get rid of one clerk, or he can get rid of two if he will allow the district judge to appoint for both courts. That is perhaps what ought to be done in most districts. In fact, circuit-court jurisdiction ought to be given to the district courts, for circuit judges now give almost all their time to the courts of appeal, and can not do circuit-court business. There are three clerks, all appointed by Judge Williams, district judge in the eastern district of Arkansas.

I make no complaint about this, but I ask that Judge Rogers be authorized to do the same thing for the two divisions of the western district. I did not seek to interfere with Fort Smith, and it is not involved in the paragraph reported in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations. If I could write the law as I want it, I would make several changes in the method of appointing and paying clerks and commissioners; but in this matter at this time I only want what I thought we had for our Texarkana division. It is easy enough for the gentleman to strike out that part of his amendment which refers to Fort Smith and let the district clerk be appointed at Texarkana, with authority to perform the duty of circuit clerk, and if he will not withdraw it I hope he will consent to that much. If not, then I hope his amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to continue for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman from Iowa prefers only to have one clerk for each division, and is willing to let that be the district clerk at Texarkana, I am content. But in all fairness to the gentlemen who were appointed to hold the offices there, in fairness to both of the judges, I think we ought to reenact the old law and let each judge appoint his clerk unless we change the present method of appointments in all of the districts. There is no danger of these clerks in the Texarkana division receiving the maximum compensation. The truth is, neither one of them is now earning and receiving exceeding $1,500 per annum. It is expected that business will increase, but there is not, in my judgment, the least possibility that either clerk will any time soon receive half of $3,500. I do not know so well as to the Fort Smith division of the district, but I do not think both clerks will earn $3,500 as the law now stands. One man can perform the duties of clerk for both courts in both divisions, but will Congress make an exception of this district, or leave us without a clerk?

When the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] seeks further to reform the judicial system as to the appointment of clerks of the Federal courts, he will have the cooperation of gentlemen upon this side in any fair measure, as he had with the bill to put marshals upon salaries.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will agree to modify his amendment so as to let it relate only to Texarkana and leave the Fort Smith division as it is.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not see how I can consent to that, because our amendment has been very carefully prepared so as to protect everybody's rights and preserve the proper organization. I could not consent to make a change in it.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] will allow me, as I understand it, although I do not know much about it, the clerks do not get any salary from the Treasury, but receive fees. If they receive over $3,500, the fees above that amount are turned into the Treasury. I understand further that since the business which formerly came to Fort Smith from the Indian Territory is transacted in the Indian Territory the clerk in the Fort Smith district does not get anywhere near the maximum that he did at the time the gentleman speaks of, but that since that date the business has been diverted to the Indian Territory. Am I right about that?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. For 1897 the clerk of the district court alone collected over $3,400 of emoluments.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, in 1897.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. That is a preliminary report. The next report from the Department of Justice usually gives about the same or nearly the same amount as that earned in 1897, but paid in 1898.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That does not include the report of the last fiscal quarter of the year.

Mr. CANNON. But since 1897 is it not true that the business which was formerly done at Fort Smith has much of it been transferred to the Indian Territory?

Mr. McRAE. Oh, yes; it has nearly all gone. There is very little at Fort Smith.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I only know what the reports tell me, and I have the latest report.

Mr. CANNON. I have no doubt the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. These two clerks are now earning the maximum, according to our latest report.

Mr. McRAE. Not at Texarkana.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. A year or two ago the criminal jurisdiction of those courts in cases arising in the Indian Territory was taken away.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Oh, I know all about that.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. And since then the fees have greatly fallen off.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. But there are now two offices there, two clerks for four terms of court, capable of taking $7,000 out of the public Treasury. You propose to put two more there, capable of taking another $7,000 out of the public Treasury. That is just the situation.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I only want to say to the gentleman I have not the slightest feeling, and I do not think the gentleman has.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Not a bit.

Mr. CANNON. I understand this to be the situation: Judge Caldwell is judge of the circuit court.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. In theory he goes to Texarkana and also to Fort Smith?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes, in theory; but not in practice.

Mr. CANNON. In practice Judge Rogers holds the courts, substantially all that are held at Fort Smith and at Texarkana.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As judge of the district court. Now, Judge Caldwell has appointed a clerk at Fort Smith, although he never goes there. Now, then, he appoints one also over at Texarkana, although he never goes there. Now, then, Judge Rogers, who does the work and holds the court, if this legislation goes in, can appoint another at each place.

Mr. McRAE. As they have.

Mr. CANNON. As they have.

Now let me go further. I think it is understood that at Texarkana there never has been business enough to pay one clerk, let alone two. The fees at Texarkana never have run over $2,500.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. McRAE (to Mr. CANNON). You are right about that.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I have nothing official.

Mr. McRAE. I live in that district.

Mr. CANNON. The clerk has never made over $2,500. It may run to $3,500 before it would be enough to pay one clerk the maximum amount allowed. Now, the gentleman from Arkansas seeks, with this legislation in this condition, to allow, first, the man who holds the court to appoint a clerk at Texarkana, so that there would be two clerks there, and the two clerks would get less than the maximum for one. Now, that does not cost the Treasury anything; and it did seem to the Committee on Appropriations that the gentleman from Arkansas who represents the district was probably entitled to that much recognition.

So we reported this matter. I am entirely frank about it. The gentleman from Arkansas is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and a very useful one, and when this matter was presented to us, we said at once, after it was fully presented, that the proposition that the gentleman from Arkansas desires would not take a single dollar from the Treasury or keep a single dollar from it, but would allow the judge that actually holds the court to designate a clerk, and we could see no objection to it; and perhaps it would be better that the legislation should be enacted. Therefore we reported it, not with a desire to take anything belonging to the Committee on the Judiciary or to antagonize the Committee on the Judiciary; and I would be very glad now, if it would meet the judgment of the gentleman from Iowa, if he would accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas (if I can have his attention) to validate the action of these clerks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I thought I had the floor. I will ask recognition and yield to the gentleman.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I have no time.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to the gentleman all the time he wants. [To Mr. McRAE.] Now, your proposition is to validate the action of these clerks that has been invalidated by the action of the Treasury Department. What you ask is, that in the future there shall be two clerks at Texarkana.

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir; let each judge appoint his clerk, as he did before. They would not both together exceed $3,000, but I did not want to interfere with Judge Caldwell's right to appoint a clerk.

Mr. CANNON. Without sacrifice and without compromise, as the gentleman represents the district, I appeal to my friend from Iowa if that modification of the amendment can not be made with safety and without injury?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not know what modification the gentleman from Arkansas suggests; but I can not, for myself, accept any modification that creates a new office anywhere.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to my friend, in reply to that, if you carry out that doctrine, you would have to discharge over half the clerks of the courts.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I would like to do it.

Mr. CANNON. If you were to carry it out in Iowa, and carry out any such doctrine, you would throw out a great many clerks. How many places have you in Iowa where courts are held?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Six.

Mr. CANNON. Six! And an able delegation from Iowa, the ablest one, averaging from one Congress to another, of any State in the country. The fact is that Iowa has her own way, and she has six circuit and district courts and places of holding courts. I ask my friend if she has not six clerks?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I do not know.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will answer that. We have only one clerk for both district and circuit courts of the United States in Iowa, and there is not a deadhead clerk in Iowa, but all doing big work for what pay they get. We have no supernumeraries; and if there were, I would slash them off at once.

Mr. CANNON. I am thankful to hear my friend from Iowa say he would glory in slashing.

Mr. HENDERSON. We did the slashing in the last Congress. I am glad, although absent when he commenced, that my colleague called attention to this matter. And while I am on my feet, if the gentleman will allow me, I will state that this same matter is before the Judiciary Committee, and it was referred to my colleague's subcommittee because he had had that matter in charge in the last Congress. It was discussed before the full committee, and further information was needed from the Department, and while in process of investigation, after the gentleman from Arkansas sent it to our committee and we are considering it, we find it put onto an appropriation bill and brought before this House. I do not think that is a proper way to consider such matters.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, what a great fire is kindled by a very little matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. My friend from Illinois says, "Oh, well, oh, well;" but let any man go to the Appropriations Committee when he wants to get anything on there, when he is not a member of that committee, and the "Oh, well, oh, well," is changed to "Let us try it with an amendment in the House first." It is very hard to get it on, no matter how meritorious the case may be. If there had been points of order reserved against this bill, this whole provision would not have existed for a moment.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want, in an altercation with the two gentlemen from Iowa, to sacrifice the very proper provision in this bill that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] desires to have retained. What is it? I am speaking now because frequently men, when they represent something that needs to be done, are not free to exercise the same language they would if they did not represent it. What is this? The gentleman from Arkansas represents the district in which these Federal courts are held. Judge Caldwell, judge of the circuit court, holds court at two of these places—Texarkana and Fort Smith. There are district courts held also, and Judge Rogers holds all the courts that are held there. Judge Caldwell appoints the clerk at Fort Smith one place, and appoints the clerk at Texarkana, the other place.

Now, then, naturally, the man that does the work wants to have the right to designate at least one of the clerks. That is a very natural feeling. What does this provision do? It allows Judge Rogers to appoint a clerk at Fort Smith and another clerk at Texarkana. Does it cost the Treasury anything? Not one sou marquee. Now I am measuring my words from the best information I can get. What is the law about the payment of clerks of Federal courts? It is that they shall be paid from the fees they earn, and they shall not receive over $3,500 from this office.

At Texarkana the office of both courts never has amounted to $3,000, let alone $3,500; so there would be two clerks at a compensation of from $1,000 to $1,500 apiece to fill these positions. At Fort Smith it is different, because Fort Smith used to do all the business for the Indian Territory; but last year that was taken away, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] informs me, and I believe it, that after inquiring he is satisfied that there is not $3,500 in fees earned at Fort Smith. So if this is true, it costs the Treasury nothing. That is all I desire to say about it.

The provision has been reported, and I feel as a member of the House that it was as little a courtesy as could be paid to my colleague on the committee to report this provision to the House for its consideration, as he represents the counties that compose this judicial district and comprise also his Congressional district. But I do not desire to make words with the two gentlemen from Iowa, both of them able and strong. I did what I could to make an appropriation bill a vehicle under the rule of the House to carry necessary appropriations. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa representing the Dubuque district that the history of this Congress will show that quite frequently items have been carried that were as pleasant to Iowa as to any other State, and I have no doubt in the near future that thing will happen again; but there is no necessity for criticising methods of the committee over which I have the honor to preside.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, no man ever heard me in this House ask for anything for Iowa, and I want to say this to the gentleman from Illinois, that he may know the truth, that if he will point out a case where any man in Iowa or any man from Iowa is holding unnecessary office or drawing improper pay I will be swifter than he is to put a stop to it. I have no quarrel with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, but I do dissent to what he says and from the spirit of his remarks.

This is not a great divide between the States. If it is, it were better that this Congress were abolished forever. Nor is it a tribunal to gratify Federal judges and give them the appointment of clerks for which there is no public necessity. I would like to see Judge Rogers—I have not the honor of his acquaintance—and every other judge and everybody else have everything they want, but I can not vote for it as a member of this House.

Now, the truth is just here, that Texarkana has not been running a year, and no man knows what the fees of the clerk amount to. And when the gentleman from Illinois says that Fort Smith does not yield the maximum amount of fees, I confront him with the official report of the Attorney-General, wherein the district court alone in that district in 1897 is credited with $3,480; the clerk of the circuit court undoubtedly as much; and when the next report comes in from the Department of Justice it will be found that that $3,400 will be about doubled for the district court alone, saying nothing of the circuit court. Now, while I would be pleased to gratify Judge Rogers, I can not vote him a clerk out of courtesy to him—not by a good deal.

It appears that Judge Caldwell, who appointed the present clerk, has abandoned his duties, or this branch of his duties, or is unable to perform them. Judge Rogers, coming in, finds that Judge Caldwell has appointed these clerks, and now two additional clerks must be put there to please Judge Rogers. Then in a year or two from now I suppose the Judiciary Committee will be again scolded and reproached for the enormous expenses of the judiciary of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the whole question is right here. This is nothing but some "taffy" for somebody. That is all there is about it. It is an ungracious task to expose it and oppose it. I do it fearlessly; but the duty is not agreeable. It is proposed to authorize the employment of two new officers capable of taking out of the Federal Treasury $7,000 per annum more than the needs of the public service require or more than they will earn. I give my voice against it and put myself on record against it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I take it from the closing remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that his committee reported the pending provision of this bill as a matter of courtesy to one of the members of the committee. A matter of courtesy toward a member of the committee to create two new officers, each of them, I believe, taking $3,500 out of the Treasury! I can not comprehend that kind of courtesy.

The gentleman says that this provision of the bill does not take any more money out of the Treasury than would be taken without it. Sir, each of those two clerks in the western district of Arkansas is entitled to $5 a day for every day his court is in session, making $10 a day for the two. If you authorize two more clerks of the same kind, the per diem fee for the four clerks will amount to $20 a day instead of $10 a day. Thus you double in that one respect alone the compensation—the amount they will get from the Department on the number of days the court may be in session.

I agree thoroughly with my colleague on the Judiciary Committee, Judge UPDEGRAFF, that there is no necessity for this provision in the bill. It looks to me very much like an attempt to dodge the action of the Judiciary Committee on this very question; because on the 31st day of May, a little over two weeks ago, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] introduced a bill identical in language with this paragraph. Our committee has been considering that bill and has not been willing to recommend its passage; and with a knowledge of that fact, some member at least of the Appropriations Committee having knowledge of it, that bill now pending before the proper committee in this House is carried to my colleague from Illinois, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and out of courtesy to one of its members he embodies that bill in his appropriation bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I interrupt my colleague a moment? It was only last year that we passed the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, redistricting the State of Arkansas, and it became a law.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAY of New York. And that action was taken by the Committee on the Judiciary upon the distinct understanding and statement that no additional officers would be required.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is the fact.

Mr. RAY of New York. There is no more business now, no more necessity for additional officers, than there was before we took that action with that distinct understanding.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The only necessity seems to be the supposed necessity of gratifying the gentleman from Arkansas who represents that district and gratifying the gentlemen who want to hold those offices as clerks.

Now, members of the House must think on this question. There is now pending before Congress a bankruptcy bill with a very fair prospect of its becoming a law by agreement between the two Houses. If that bankruptcy bill should become a law, the fees or earnings of the clerks of the district courts will be doubled as compared with what they are to-day. Now, with the possibility in contemplation of that bill becoming a law, we propose to have four clerks in that western district of Arkansas—two district clerks who will have their fees doubled by the operation of that law. My colleague from Illinois knows well that in our own State there are two divisions in the northern district, but there is only one district court clerk; and there is but one circuit court clerk in the southern district of Illinois, although there are four or five places for holding court. There has never been any trouble about those clerks in Illinois discharging all the duties. And there the Government pays but one per diem in the district when the court is in session. The effect of this bill is to provide that the Government shall pay two per diems.

I therefore, Mr. Chairman, favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, providing that the circuit court clerk at Fort Smith shall be ex officio clerk of the district court at that place, and that the clerk of the district court at Texarkana shall be ex officio clerk of the circuit court at that place. I know there can be but little business at Texarkana, for, according to my recollection, there are but twelve counties in the southern part of Arkansas where writs are returnable to Texarkana. Certainly, therefore, there can be little necessity for even one clerk there, and there can be no necessity for two. I therefore hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will be adopted in lieu of the provision of the bill.

Mr. McRAE. I ask the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], who was kind enough to give a good deal of time and attention to the bill introduced in the last Congress to reorganize the judicial district of Arkansas, and through whose labors and those of other members of his subcommittee we were enabled to pass that bill. I appreciated his kindness and work at that time, and I do not think he and I will disagree as to what occurred between us. It is true, and I am glad the gentleman calls attention to it, that in those conferences he asked if there was any purpose to get rid of any existing clerk or to create any new offices, and as I stated in the beginning to-day, I assured him that there was no purpose of that kind on my part and that, except at Batesville, we intended that the law should remain as it was so far as it related to clerks. We did not seek to depose any of the clerks. We made no reference to them, or how they should be appointed, in that act. He and other honorable gentlemen construed the law at that time to the effect that the act of April 1, 1892, would continue the clerks in the Texarkana division.

Now, the question here is not of creating additional clerks, but of preventing the Treasury Department from taking both clerks away from the Texarkana division. I said to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] privately, and I say to him publicly now, that there is not more than enough business at Texarkana to pay one man a decent salary at Texarkana.

I want to be perfectly fair with the gentlemen who hold the offices and with the judges who appoint them, but I do submit, and I submit it believing that every gentleman who will consider this matter from an impartial, nonpartisan standpoint will agree with me, that it is unfair to take from Judge Rogers the right to designate his clerk at Fort Smith. Since the Indian Territory jurisdiction has been taken away, I do not believe that the fees of district clerk there will exceed $1,500. About this my colleague, Judge LITTLE, can speak more accurately. I know at Texarkana they will not reach $1,500.

Mr. Chairman, there has been no desire on my part to dodge the Judiciary Committee. I did not go around the Judiciary Committee. I introduced the bill and had it referred to the Judiciary Committee, and on the next day the chairman was kind enough to immediately refer it to a subcommittee. I saw each member of the subcommittee and sought to get immediate legislation or a recommendation from them, all the time telling them that a communication had gone from the Appropriations Committee to the Attorney-General inviting him to suggest an amendment by which the trouble could be cured.

The paragraph which is in this bill was submitted by the Department of Justice. I preferred to have the Judiciary Committee act, but as is known to almost every member of the House, the Judiciary Committee has almost ceased to do further business during this session. There has been but one meeting of the committee since this bill was introduced. I have pressed my friends in season and out of season to act upon it, and yet no action was taken.

I make no complaint against the gentleman who had it, because I know the difficulty in getting committees and subcommittees together in the latter days of a session of Congress, when we have disposed of almost all the business that can be attended to. This is a matter which does not concern the whole country, but to ten counties in my district it is important, because we have no clerk and no authority to appoint any deputy clerk. I could not neglect any opportunity that presented itself. I thank my friend from Illinois for the opportunity to get a vote on it. If we do not get some relief here, what shall we do? Wait until next session?

Does the gentleman from Iowa believe that I would have performed my whole duty to my constituents if I had permitted the matter to rest when I was told by members of the committee that perhaps the Judiciary Committee would not meet again, and when I could see from what he said that the disposition was to deny to Judge Rogers that which had been accorded to Judge Williams and other judges—the right to name his own clerk? I hope that no gentleman will suppose that I was seeking to take an undue advantage of any member of the House or of any committee when I asked the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member, to put this curative legislation in this bill.

It is not true that the Texarkana division is only a year old. It was created in 1887, I believe; but it was then in the eastern district. As I stated in the beginning, it was transferred from the eastern to the western, and everybody supposed the transfer carried with it the clerks; but we find ourselves now in a new district, with a new judge, but no authority to have a clerk or a deputy of any kind, and all that we ask here is to give the division of Texarkana the right to have these clerks. If you do not want us to have but one, we are satisfied with that; but I shall insist that the judge who holds the court shall appoint the clerk.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, only a few moments ago my attention was called to this proposition, and as we had it before the Judiciary Committee last year, and again this year, and reported a bill to redistrict that State, because we thought it was proper and necessary, and inasmuch as I had considerable to do with the matter and investigated it thoroughly, I deem it proper to say a few words on this subject now.

When we redistricted that State last year the matter of clerks was discussed, and it was understood that no new offices or officers would be required. We did not increase the number of districts; but we simply made, for the convenience of the people of that State, the litigants and the judges, a new division. There was no claim that they needed any additional clerks. There was no claim that the business of the State required it, and it was understood, of course, that the old clerks would continue to serve and receive their pay. The bill having been reported favorably to the House by the Judiciary Committee, which investigated it, and of which I am a member, and as the Judiciary Committee now have a bill before them to adjust this matter of clerks, it seems to me that wisdom and propriety demand that the whole subject be left with the Committee on the Judiciary to settle. I think that committee is capable of settling the matter. If we have left all the clerks in one district, by an appropriate bill we can abolish a portion of them, legislate them out of office, and provide for the appointment of some new ones in the district where they are required.

Mr. MCRAE. The gentleman, I hope, did not understand me to say that the clerks in the other districts were useless. If I made such a statement I did not intend to do so. I only meant to say that in that district they still performed the duties of clerks, but the Treasury Department holds, I presume, that because the Texarkana division has been transferred from one district to the other the transfer did not take the clerks, and that we have no clerks now. If we can have the clerks we had at that time continued, that is all we want, and that is all this paragraph from the Appropriations Committee does.

Mr. RAY of New York. I understand the proposition. In other words, you claim and the Treasury Department claim that when we made that redistricting or redistricting of that State we left all the clerks in one district and no clerks in the other. Now, your proposition as contained in this appropriation bill—

Mr. MCRAE. The gentleman is not quite accurate in that. They have not held that. I do not know by what process of reasoning they came to the conclusion that Texarkana has no clerks and that Fort Smith has, but they have so held. Yet neither of them is referred to in the bill reorganizing the districts, and both divisions have been changed. I presume it is because Fort Smith is still in the same district.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. The amendment perfects that.

Mr. RAY of New York. The proposition resolves itself into this, that they want a clerk at a point where they have not got one now under that holding of the Treasury Department, and at a point where they do not need a clerk they have a surplus one. Now, the proper thing to do, Mr. Chairman, is for the Judiciary Committee to look that matter up and legislate the surplus clerk out and then provide for the necessary clerk at the proper point. That can be done in the proper manner at the proper time without increased and unnecessary expense. That is the course that ought to be followed.

I think the Appropriations Committee has enough to do if it takes care of the legitimate business that belongs to that committee. I know how grasping my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is. There is no legislation connected with this House that he does not comprehend, and it is very difficult for him to keep his fingers out of anything that is going on, especially when it creates an office or grants a salary, because that carries money, and he seems to think any proposition belongs to his peculiar and individual jurisdiction if it carries a cent of money.

I want to say to him, while he is older than I am and has had more experience than I have had, that I do think he had better leave the business of the Judiciary Committee alone and leave the forming of the judicial districts and the creation of these new judicial offices in the various districts to the proper committee, or else bring in a proposition in the next appropriation bill that will dispense with the Committee on the Judiciary entirely and transfer its jurisdiction to the Committee on Appropriations.

I love my friend from Illinois as one man can love another; I respect him; but I do think that he is going further than he ought when he puts such a provision as this, the proper settlement of which has bothered the Committee on the Judiciary, into this bill, a bill that appropriates money, a bill in which such legislation as this does not belong. If a point of order had been promptly made, the proposition would have been ruled out. It was not made because but few knew that this proposition was contained in this bill.

I do trust he will "back down" just a little, and permit this provision to be stricken out, and leave it to the Committee on the Judiciary to settle.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I hope this proposition, that is entirely harmless and entirely proper, will not get a black eye on account of any little jealousies that anybody may have in the House on account of committee jurisdiction. It is not necessary to explain further how this provision came here and what it is.

Mr. RAY of New York. It creates new officers.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says it creates new officers. And then he proceeds to turn round and deliver me a personal lecture that I am trenching upon the jurisdiction of the committee that the gentleman belongs to, or that he at one time presided over. Well, I will take it meekly and humbly; but as the gentleman wants to go on, I will tell the gentleman that he can turn to something on pages 46 and 47, where there is more legislation, two or three pages of it, to cure defects of the law that the Committee on the Judiciary has not reported any legislation for, and asked frequently by people who are constituents of some of the very gentlemen who are on the Committee on the Judiciary, by far than is covered by this item.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, now, I call the gentleman's attention to pages 46 and 47, to which he referred. They relate to Indians, a subject which the Committee on Indian Affairs deal with.

Mr. CANNON. Pages 56 and 57. It is not worth while; the gentleman can turn and read and he will find them. And later on, in this bill, I will say to the gentleman, he will find a provision, put in this bill at his request, to pay an official of this Government that has been working for his committee more than any such official ever got before. [Laughter.] Why? Because I wanted to be courteous to the gentleman. [Great laughter.]

Now, then, there is sometimes a little trouble with a committee that has to do with hundreds and thousands of items of appropriations for the public service. There are 360 members, with 70,000,000 people, and an ever-increasing public service, each gentleman seeking to represent his district. Under the strict rules of law, no appropriation is in order on an appropriation bill except when authorized by law. Never in the history of this country have general appropriation bills been kept closer to the law than they have been during this Congress, but there are some things in all these bills not authorized by law. Why? Because it seemed to be proper to do that. We put in the item I referred to for the gentleman. Why? Because it seemed to be proper to do it, to a worthy employee that assists his committee. We think it ought to go there; and while it is a larger amount than had gone there, I put it, or the committee over which I have the honor to preside, did that; yet I am subject to a lecture now, that I, or my committee, is always getting its finger into somebody's pie. If the gentleman wants to pose as a humorist, well and good; if in earnest in his lecture, I would say, gentlemen living in glass houses had better not begin casting stones. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, the gentleman, when he gets going wrong, always demonstrates that he goes very rapidly, and when he gets into the mud he sinks deeper and deeper, and the more he struggles the deeper down he goes. [Laughter.] He has called attention here to pages 46 and 47, and then to 56 and 57 of this bill, and says there are provisions in those pages—

Mr. CANNON. Pages 57, 58, and 59.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now he has changed it again.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman will find the provisions.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, I want—

Mr. CANNON. In the middle of page 57, all of page 58, all of 59, and all of 60.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to say that I have not time to look at those pages. I presume that if I had three minutes to look at them the gentleman would change the pages once more.

Mr. CANNON. Very likely.

Mr. RAY of New York. But I want to say this: That if there are any defects in the law that ought to be attended to and remedied by the Committee on the Judiciary, the attention of that committee should be called to it, and the Committee on Appropriations should not assume jurisdiction and undertake to remedy omissions or defects in the statutes of the United States relating to courts and officials of the United States courts.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It is to suggest that the Judiciary Committee has reported a bill, which is now on the Calendar, correcting that condition of the law that has existed nearly a hundred years.

Mr. RAY of New York. And to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. CONNOLLY. And to which he refers.

Mr. RAY of New York. And I will say that in all human probability, after the Committee on the Judiciary had worked out a remedy and framed it, the Committee on Appropriations has assumed jurisdiction, taken one proposition and put it into this bill, a place where it does not belong. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, I am glad to learn that the Committee on the Judiciary performed its function. The gentlemen who compose it are exceedingly able. I do not know the bill my colleague refers to, but if it is a good bill and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that matter were before us, I would be glad to avail myself, and so would the committee, of the ability of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, I am not finding any personal fault with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but I do criticize, and I shall continue to criticize, the Committee on Appropriations when it puts general law on general subjects into appropriation bills. It is wrong and contrary to the rules of this House. We should look in the general laws relating to the judiciary, courts, judges, clerks, etc., for laws bearing on those subjects and provisions regulating the United States courts, and neither judges nor lawyers can expect to find in appropriation bills provisions regulating the courts and increasing salaries or decreasing salaries, or creating new offices or officers, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] knows that just as well as I know it.

Now, I want to refer to another matter. He says he has put into this bill a provision giving pay to an able and industrious employee of this House, and he intimates that that act is something that the Committee on the Judiciary ought to have dealt with. Who appropriates the money to pay the employees of the House?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman does not want to misrepresent me nor be misinformed himself, and I will read the provision.

Mr. RAY of New York. What did you mean to intimate—that it was not the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to provide for the payment of these employees?

Mr. CANNON. On page 71 is an item to pay H. W. Blanchard for extra services as assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions $750. Now, I understand that Mr. Blanchard is a clerk in one of the Departments. He was detailed to your committee, the committee of which you are chairman, and still is receiving his pay, if I am correctly informed, as clerk in one of the Departments.

Now, then, you brought this item to the committee and asked that $750 be inserted in this deficiency bill because of the great value of the services of this gentleman. It was said to you that $500 was as much as had ever been inserted, and you said you thought he ought to have $750, because of his very great services. The committee inserted it, and I think we did right; but nowhere, between time and eternity, is there one scintilla of law that authorizes that provision, and yet it stands there, and the gentleman, I take it, will say it is a provision affixed by the Appropriations Committee to this bill at the request of the gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I do not say this was improper, but it did seem to me that I had better bring a little bit of practice to the gentleman's attention in view of the general character of his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAY of New York. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Illinois has taken up about all of my time, I request that my time be extended.

Mr. CANNON. If I can be recognized, I will yield further time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to call attention to the provision to which the gentleman from Illinois has so kindly and courteously referred. Every year the Committee on Appropriations has put into the appropriation bill a provision giving extra compensation to the clerks of the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions detailed here from the Bureau of Pensions to perform work in this House. They have fixed that amount heretofore at $500 extra compensation because it was worth it. They have put in for Mr. Porter, of the Committee on Pensions, detailed from the Bureau, $500. When it came to the amount to be put in for Mr. Blanchard, I went to the chairman of the committee and said: "I want you to increase it to $750." Why? Because he has earned it, and earned twice that.

When I became chairman of that committee, instead of following the precedent of former committees and in the last Congress, instead of having three extra clerks, I dispensed with two of the extra clerks, and the work has been all done. I have saved $12 a day by that act all through this Congress. I did more than that. I dispensed with one extra clerk at a regular salary who heretofore has been getting $500; so we saved $12 a day and $500 in addition. The work has been done, and well done. Then one thing more. I said to the gentleman, "Mr. Blanchard, if you will stay here with me and work evenings, and not go away at 4 o'clock"—as they are not required to work after 4 o'clock—"if you will stay and work evenings, I will ask the Committee on Appropriations to give you extra pay," and Mr. Blanchard for six months has worked all day, and then from 4 o'clock to 6 o'clock, and has been back in the committee room at 7 and worked until 9 and 10 o'clock in the evenings for the benefit of the members of this House and their constituents.

Now, the gentleman has the great courtesy to get up here and say it was doing me a great favor to give Mr. Blanchard $250 for this extra work done for the members of this House and the old soldiers of this country and their widows and orphan children. If he wants to stand in that light, he may. It was not a favor to me, but to the country, the members of this House, and the deserving old soldiers.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman allow me a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman inform the House what benefit to the invalid pensioners of this country has accrued from the economy he has so rigorously practiced in cutting off two clerks of the committee?

Mr. RAY of New York. It has resulted in giving the old soldiers more pensions than have ever been given by a House of Representatives in the same length of time. This Congress since the 1st day of last December has reported to this House and had passed more pension bills than were passed in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses during their entire existence.

Mr. MAHANY. Yes; but both these Congresses were Democratic and hostile to pension legislation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If we abolish another clerk, I suppose you could get still more for pensions. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want the main question under discussion to be obscured by any controversy between my friend from Illinois and my friend from New York as to the action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, or the rivalry that seems to be growing up between committees in their anxiety to retain their proper jurisdiction.

As it stands in the bill, the proposition is to make two new officers. There are now two clerks at Fort Smith, capable of handling all the court business at Fort Smith and Texarkana. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] transfers one of the two clerks now at Fort Smith to Texarkana, and clothes him with power to do the work there of the United States district court and circuit court, while the clerk remaining at Fort Smith will do all the work of the district and circuit courts at that place; so that without creating any new office ample provision is made for doing all the business of those two courts. This is the purport of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

I do not think the proposition contained in the pending paragraph of this bill should have been brought here in this way; for the gentleman who asks to have it put on this bill introduced the proposition as a separate bill, and referred it to the Committee on the Judiciary, invoking our action upon it. It has been promptly considered by our committee during the last two weeks, in subcommittee, and even in full committee; and the full committee has not yet been able to satisfy itself to make such a recommendation to the House. But that subject being now before us in the House, I believe it to be the clear duty of this House to adopt the amendment of my colleague, Judge UPDEGRAFF, which will preserve the full official force for the work of those two courts without making any new office or imposing any new burdens upon the Government.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to participate in this debate, but there seems to be a misunderstanding about the facts of the case. This provision in the appropriation bill does not increase the number of Federal officers in Arkansas. Both the officers in the Texarkana district were provided for by the act of 1892. I will read the provision; it is brief:

That there shall be appointed in the Texarkana district of Arkansas one additional clerk of the district court and one of the circuit court, who shall reside and keep their offices at Texarkana.

That is the provision of the act of April 1, 1892.

By the bill redistricting the State of Arkansas for judicial purposes—passed, I believe, at the last session of Congress—the Texarkana district was bodily transferred to the western district. Everybody thought that that transfer would continue the officers as they had existed, the language of the bill as passed being supposed to be sufficient for that purpose.

As to the Fort Smith district, the amendment proposed would take from the district judge of that court the power to name his own clerk. The judge there performs, I might say, all the judicial duties of that court. While there is a circuit court clerk, yet he is not appointed by or responsible to the district judge. I think it not right and just that the district judge should have the naming of his clerk and that that clerk should be directly responsible to him in the discharge of his duties, which is not the case as to the circuit court clerk.

These officers must earn their money if they get it. They are not salaried officers. Speaking for the western district of Arkansas—that is, the Fort Smith division—I have no hesitancy in saying that both these clerks do not earn to-day the amount that is allowed to a single clerk under the law. Since the transfer of the jurisdiction of that court, of the business of the Indian Territory, the statement I make is true. Prior to that time the earnings of the clerks were greater. Neither of them can receive a dollar that he does not earn; and when a man earns his money it is but right that he should have it. With the fees divided, they do not get as much as one ought to have. I do not see any wise economy in cutting off one, and especially do I think it wrong to cut off the district clerk and leave the district judge to hold court with a clerk that does not properly belong to his court and is not under his control.

I trust members of the House will understand that there is no increase asked—simply that as the Texarkana district was transferred to the western district, the officers should be transferred with it and continue to hold their places, according to the understanding which was had at the time the act on this subject was passed.

If the gentleman wants to bring in general legislation to regulate these matters, he will find the Representatives of Arkansas ready to join him in supporting a proper bill placing these courts in the hands of the district court clerk, or putting these officers upon salaries, or adopting any other general plan that will advance the public service. But I do not think we ought to take hold of this particular locality, and begin a reform which will very likely stop where it began. If we are to have a general bill, I will heartily join in giving my support (whatever it may be worth) to any just measure looking to the improvement of this service. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. UPDEGRAFF, there were—ayes 23, noes 40.

Mr. HENDERSON. We had better have tellers, Mr. Chairman. Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. CANNON and Mr. UPDEGRAFF.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 63.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I think there ought to be a quorum to pass this.

Mr. CANNON. It will only take seven more.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman raise the point of no quorum?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. I made the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN counted the committee, and announced 111 members, a quorum, present.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay three deputy clerks of the United States district courts in the Indian Territory, one at Muscogee, one at South McAlester, and one at Ardmore, at the rate of $1,300 per annum each, for services performed and to be performed, from the 1st day of July, 1897, to the 30th day of June, 1899, $7,800.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 67, after line 13, after "legislative," insert:
"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House, borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of June, 1898, including the Capitol police, the official reporters of the Senate and of the House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the Fifty-fifth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think if the amendment is to be offered—

Mr. DOCKERY. A point of order ought to be reserved.

Mr. CANNON. It ought to be after line 14 instead of line 13, so as to follow the word "legislative." It is a mere formal matter, and I suggest that the Clerk can make it come in the right place.

Now, so far as I am concerned, I shall not make the point of order against this provision, for the reason that almost invariably a provision similar to this has been adopted at each regular session of Congress following an extra session. Therefore, while it is subject to a point of order, in my judgment, I do not feel at liberty to make it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not the precedents warrant this resolution at this session? Is it not true that this resolution is customary at the second session of Congress?

Mr. CANNON. It has been offered at the first regular session, as a rule, where there has been an extra session of Congress. In the Fifty-third Congress there was an extra session, and at this stage of the Congress a similar resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY. At the short session of the Fifty-third Congress was the same resolution adopted?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE.
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For compensation and mileage of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from the Territories, fiscal year 1898, $12,972.00.

Mr. BULL. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 19, page 67, insert:

"That hereafter members of the House of Representatives who are chairmen of committees entitled to annual clerks shall be entitled to the same allowance for clerk hire as is authorized to other members of the House of Representatives who are not chairmen of committees by the joint resolution approved March 23, 1893, and by House resolution passed May 8, 1896, and the appropriation for clerk hire to Members and Delegates made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1898 is hereby made available to pay such clerk hire as herein provided."

Mr. CANNON. This amendment, as I understand it, is offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BULL], a member of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. BULL. It is.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say that I shall not make a point of order on that provision. A good many members of the House who are chairmen of committees having annual clerks and a good many who are not have spoken to me about the matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to reserve a point of order until I hear what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the remark of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to reserve a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. There is such a sentiment, at least upon the part of some members, that I felt I ought not to make the point of order, and so far as I am concerned, I shall not. Any other gentleman can, if he chooses.

Mr. LOVE. Does this mean that members who are chairmen of committees having clerks are to be allowed another clerk for private purposes?

Mr. CANNON. I understand that applies to clerks in vacation.

Mr. HULL. I think this only applies to clerks in vacation. The chairmen of committees having annual clerks are compelled to employ their own clerks during vacation. The committee clerk is not the personal clerk of the chairman, except in connection with the committee business.

Mr. CANNON. I am not familiar with the resolution myself.

Mr. HULL. I am the chairman of a committee having an annual clerk, and during vacation I have always been compelled to employ a private clerk, to be paid for out of my own pocket; and I think the same is true with all other chairmen of committees having annual clerks.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, we should like to have that resolution read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HULL. That ought to be amended so as to apply only during vacation.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand that resolution, it gives every gentleman who is chairman of a committee a clerk during the whole year. The chairman of the committee not having made the point of order—I waited for him to do it—I reserved the point of order against it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that the point of order comes too late; that the matter has been discussed here for five or ten minutes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that if that comes before the House it would be amended so as to apply only during the vacation of Congress.

Mr. MAHON. Why so?

Mr. HULL. Because I think the chairmen of committees while they are here and can have the benefit of the committee clerks have not the same reason for having clerks during the session of Congress that they have during the vacation.

Mr. MAHON. The clerk of our committee does not do my private work.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that the only time when we need this additional clerk is during the session of Congress rather than during the recess. During the session of Congress the clerks of the various committees are occupied substantially all of their time in the committee work. What time have the clerk or the assistant clerk of the Committee on Appropriations to devote to the work of the chairman of that committee? Not one single minute. The same is true of the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and my own committee, the Committee on Indian Affairs, whose clerk has now gone home sick, worn out with the work he has done during this session of Congress, all substantially work done for the committee.

The distinguished gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], will bear me out in the statement that he is forced, as many of us are, to provide out of our own purses for additional clerical assistance during the session of Congress. That rule, Mr. Chairman, is detrimental, so far as individual work is concerned, to us who are members of the committees having annual clerks, for our clerks are occupied every single minute of the time during the sessions of Congress in performing the work of the committee.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, must be aware that the clerk of his committee during this session of Congress has been able to devote very little time to his individual work. His time has been taken up with the work of the Committee on Military Affairs. So it is, it seems to me, with all these committees. This affects twenty-three committees and makes an appropriation of $27,000. It does seem to me, in all fairness not only to ourselves, but in fairness to the constituents whom we represent, that we ought to be provided with sufficient clerical help to do promptly the work that our constituents wish us to do and yet leave us time enough to examine into the public affairs upon which we have to legislate.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. May I ask a question for information?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Do not those committees have extra help?

Mr. SHERMAN. Only two or three of them; the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Commerce I think are the only ones.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Do they not have extra help?

Mr. SHERMAN. Only two or three. Most of them have not.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment ought to be adopted; but I regret that it does not go a good deal further and, in the same time in which it authorizes an increased expenditure, do something to cut off useless expenditures which we now make. I believe that every member of this House, whether he is a chairman of a committee or otherwise, ought to be treated with exact equality.

As the gentleman from New York has very well said, in the interest of his constituency, the clerk is a great help, more so, very often, to his constituents than the member may be himself; but I believe we have gone on treating this question of clerks for committees, annual clerks, session clerks, and clerks to members in a slipshod sort of way, so that inequalities have grown up, and there are a great many sinecures. I know from my own experience of the three divisions of the Elections Committee the clerks have almost nothing to do. They get $2,000 a year each, and they have practically nothing to do.

If there is any clerical service to be rendered to those three committees, it could be readily rendered by one clerk to all three divisions. The same thing is true of other committees which have either annual or session clerks, but is not true of the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means or the clerk to the Committee on Appropriations or of Military Affairs and, I have no doubt, of the Committee on Indian Affairs. These and other committee clerks have a great deal to do. But the fact remains that we are throwing away money in the payment of merely sinecure places, and I trust that before we begin another session of Congress the Committee on Accounts will reconsider the whole scheme under which we are acting and report to the House an intelligible rule, which will provide, in the first place, to release from the employ of Congress any clerk for whom there is no use, and which will provide for committees of Congress just as much clerical assistance as they need and no more. The net result will be greater convenience to the public interests and a diminution of the public expense.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I intended to make the point of order on this amendment as soon as it was offered, but did not because I did not know how the amendment read. I asked several gentlemen, but had to call for the reading of it again before I could understand what it meant; otherwise I would have reserved the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I reserved the point of order just as soon as I understood the gentleman from Illinois did not intend to reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raised the point of order that the point of order suggested by the gentleman from Missouri was not in order, as coming too late, and that we had discussed the matter for five or ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not necessary to raise any question of that kind, except as an argument on the point of order, and the Chair will hear the gentleman when the point of order is raised by the gentleman from Missouri, on the question whether it was presented early enough. Of course there is no question as to the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. The reporter's notes will show that I reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever the point of order is submitted, the Chair will hear the gentleman on that point.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is simply a question of fact. I do not desire any advantage, and if the notes do not show that I reserved the point of order as soon as I discovered that the gentleman from Illinois was not going to make it, then I will not press it. I know the proposition is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment should prevail, for several reasons. I think it would be altogether proper to allow the chairmen of some of the committees additional help. There are some committees of the House, no doubt, so burdened with business that some additional help is necessary, but there are other committees, I will venture to say, where the clerks are not occupied one-half of the time.

Now, Congress will adjourn in two or three weeks, and yet the clerks of the committees are to go on and draw their salaries, which is all right, but you propose to allow the chairman of each committee to have a clerk in addition. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen forget that these clerks of committees are paid a much better salary than clerks to members; and if they are not able to do the work of the committee and also the individual work of the chairman, it would be better to give them some additional help when Congress is in session and when these business matters are pressing most.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will permit me. In a great many of these important committees, where there is a large amount of work done, the clerk is compelled to work all the year, not only to answer the letters of the chairman, but also the other members of the committee in regard to the business before the committee.

Mr. LOVE. I have just suggested that I recognize the need of having this additional help in some of the committees.

Mr. HULL. It only applies to those committees important enough to have annual clerks to allow the chairman to have a personal clerk. The chairmen of committees who have only session clerks get these clerks when Congress is not in session.

Mr. LOVE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks this is the proper time to increase expenses?

Mr. HULL. I think any time is the proper time to facilitate the business of the members of the House.

Mr. LOVE. We might adopt it at the beginning of the next session, but surely not now at the close of a session when the expenses of the country are greater than they have ever been before, and I protest against the adoption of this amendment at this time. Congress has gone on for years and years without these additional clerks and the business has not suffered. Now, why add twenty-seven more to the pay roll at an annual cost of $32,400?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOVE] that now is as good a time as any to do justice in the matter. I have been unable to see how gentlemen can justify themselves for having voted for an appropriation for clerks and denying the same to chairmen of committees. Now, take the Committee on the District of Columbia. I have paid out of my own salary never less than $100 a month, and from that to $1,800 a year, and besides that my personal clerk has assisted the clerk of the committee to do the work of the committee, and he has done it to-day.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Do not you think it is right that out of the multiplicity of committees the committees benefited by this amendment should be named?

Mr. BABCOCK. It applies to committees that have annual clerks—twenty-three of the committees only in the House.

Mr. LOVE. Does that include the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think that committee has an annual clerk.

Mr. LOVE. I think the chairman of the committee will testify that the clerk is so able and efficient that he has done the whole of the work of the committee and the chairman with ease.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Does it include the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. BABCOCK. I can not tell all the committees it includes; the gentleman from Missouri, from the Committee on Appropriations, can tell you.

Mr. TAWNEY. It does include the Committee on War Claims, I will say to the gentleman. It includes all chairmen of committees that have annual clerks.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call attention to the specific result that will occur in three cases if this amendment is adopted without any modification. I think the amendment ought to be adopted, but I think it should be modified. There are three Election Committees, which have an annual clerk appointed by the chairman as a matter of practice at $2,000 a year. The work of these three committees is probably substantially finished. There never was any great amount of work for the clerks of these committees to do, because the work of those committees is work that the members themselves must do, and can not be delegated to a clerk.

Now, as I say, the work of these three committees is substantially done to-day, and if we adopt this amendment without cutting off these sinecures we shall have the chairman of each of these three Committees on Election appointing two clerks, one his own personal clerk, at a salary of $1,200, and another the annual clerk, paying him $2,000 for doing nothing.

Now, that ought to be remedied. I am in favor of the amendment, but there ought to be something else with it. The gentleman from Rhode Island ought to modify his amendment and let the matter go over until to-morrow. He ought to modify it so as to cut off the three annual clerks and give the chairman of that committee his personal clerk, cut off the annual clerk from the committees and give the chairman in place of that his own personal clerk. This would subvert the public interest and at the same time protect the public Treasury and do exact justice by each member's constituency and to every member on both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit me a question before he sits down?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Suppose the annual clerk of the chairman of the Committee on Elections does not live at or near the residence of the chairman. He will practically be deprived of his services. Should he not have a clerk at his home?

Mr. MOODY. That is what I say. I say he should have his personal clerk.

Mr. BRUMM. You are assuming, under all circumstances, the chairman appoints as his personal clerk one that lives in the locality where he resides.

Mr. MOODY. Oh, no. The gentleman misunderstood my proposition. Let me illustrate by his own committee. I suppose the committee over which the gentleman presides has a great deal of work for his clerk. The idea I have proposed would provide for sufficient clerical assistance, no matter what it might be, for that committee, and give to its chairman an additional personal clerk for his own use.

Mr. BRUMM. I was not speaking in my own behalf, but in behalf of other gentlemen.

Mr. MOODY. I understand that a man may appoint his clerk from his own neighborhood or from the city of Washington, and may leave him in Washington during the vacation or may take him home with him; that is his own concern. Personally I find it very much to the interest of my constituents as well as my own to have my clerk in Washington during the intermission of Congress. Other gentlemen may find it otherwise. That is a matter for each man to determine for himself.

Mr. RIDGELY. I do not fully understand the effect of the pending amendment. Is it to pay members who happen to be chairmen of committees the full compensation of two clerks for the full year?

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, no.

Mr. RIDGELY. Some gentlemen say that chairmen of committees having annual clerks are excepted; others say that they are included.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the practice, there are now twenty-three committees that have annual clerks—clerks paid by the year. The theory is that the clerk not only serves the committee, but serves the chairman as his personal secretary. Therefore, such chairmen do not get the $100 monthly allowance, either during the session or in vacation, that individual members generally get.

Now, it is claimed that, as a matter of fact, when a committee has use for an annual clerk, his time is taken up in the performance of his official duties without his doing the clerical work of the chairman. The present proposition is to give to the twenty-three members of the House who are chairmen of committees having annual clerks the same allowance of $100 a month for clerk hire that is received by members of the House generally.

Mr. RIDGELY. The same allowance for the full year?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; that is the effect of this provision.

Mr. LOVE. The pay of the committee clerks remaining the same?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; the committee clerk gets his pay as before. This proposition goes upon the theory that the clerk is the clerk of the committee, not the clerk of the chairman. I may as well state to the House my own experience in this matter. The Committee on Appropriations has a clerk and an assistant clerk. They are quite busy the year round. I have never felt at liberty to call either of them to my home in Illinois. In fact, in vacation, when I am at home, I hire my own clerk, and get along without any allowance for clerk hire. During the session the assistant clerk (I want to be entirely frank with the House) by working over hours—sometimes at night and on Sundays—is enabled to do the work of the committee, and, as I have no allowance for clerk hire, is enabled to do also my individual work.

Mr. LOVE. What is the salary of that clerk?

Mr. CANNON. One thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. RIDGELY. And this proposition simply provides for twenty-three additional clerks?

Mr. CANNON. It simply allows $100 a month clerk hire to twenty-three Representatives who do not now receive it.

Mr. SIMS. If the amendment gave to the chairmen of committees personal clerks during the vacation, would it not meet with the general approval of those chairmen?

Mr. CANNON. I would be quite content with that. In fact, I will say to my friend I do not think I am "on all fours" in respect to compensation with other members of the House. But I am not complaining. I have always been quite content, because I naturally complain about somebody else's woes more than I do about my own in little matters of this kind, although I am quite in favor of self-interest, if it amounts to much.

Mr. SIMS. I believe that as a matter of justice such a proposition as I have just mentioned ought to be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. I am quite content that this proposition shall prevail just as it is; or I am quite content, if such is the consensus of opinion, that an allowance of $100 a month be made to twenty-three chairmen of committees for clerks during vacation. I am easily satisfied and shall be quite content with whatever the House may do on this subject.

Mr. HARTMAN. With reference to the suggestion to limit the employment of clerks for chairmen of committees to the vacation, it does not seem to me fair either to the clerks of those committees or to the chairmen themselves. I was the author of the resolution adopted by this House in May, 1896; and it provided that all members, whether chairmen of committees or not, should be entitled to personal clerks. The reason and justice of such a provision must be as apparent to-day as it was then. The chairmen of committees ought to have better service than those of us who are not chairmen. They have more work to perform than the rest of us, and there is more responsibility attaching to their duties. It is not right to ask the chairman of a committee, in addition to performing his duties as such, to depend upon the clerk of his committee to perform his personal work as a Representative. It is equally unfair to the clerks of committees to ask them to do double duty. They are required to perform their duties to the committee, and should not be at the same time compelled to render personal service to the chairman.

I submit that we ought now to settle this matter for all time. Let us have no more gradual growths in this direction. The first step in this matter was in 1893, when we provided for clerks to members during the sessions of Congress. Now, let us clear the decks entirely and give to every member of this House a personal clerk, and then give to every committee whatever assistance is necessary to have them perform their duties. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the notes of the reporter very clearly show the parliamentary status of this amendment—clearly show that the point of order was reserved in time. The Chair can ascertain by examining them.

The committees having annual clerks are the Committee on Ways and Means, Appropriations, Accounts, Agriculture, Banking and Currency, Claims, District of Columbia, Elections Nos. 1, 2, and 3, Foreign Affairs, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Indian Affairs, Invalid Pensions, Judiciary, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Public Buildings and Grounds, Public Lands, Rivers and Harbors, and War Claims, twenty-three, I believe, in all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this amendment, under the rules, is clearly not in order, and the point of order was reserved in time. It seems to me, however, that there is some force in the suggestion that the chairmen of committees having annual clerks should be entitled to personal clerks during vacation. The committee clerk is constructively at Washington. I want to emphasize the word "constructively." He is by law here or supposed to be here, and therefore he could not actually serve the chairman of the committee when the chairman is at home in Missouri, or Iowa, or Illinois, or some other State.

I have heard a good deal from the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] about the onerous duties of these clerks. My sympathies went out unbidden when I listened to the plaint of the gentleman from Montana about the struggles, trials, and sorrows of clerks drawing $2,000 a year salary, with practically no business to transact during the vacation, and a great many of them, or at least some of them, with but little business to transact while Congress is in session. I wish this matter could come up in some other way. I observe gentlemen over there who have been appealing to me by look and by voice to withdraw this point of order.

It seems to be a very ungracious thing to do. If I had clearly known what the amendment was I might not have interposed the point of order, because I have been under pressure almost without limit since I made it. I did not know what the amendment was at the time I made the point of order. I suspected it was some raid on the Treasury, and therefore out of abundant caution interposed the point of order, but I think that a very safe compromise out of the difficulty can be secured, consistent with my own conscientious convictions and the demands of gentlemen on the other side, to make this amendment apply only to the vacation. Of course this is the first step. Later on I know that an additional step will be taken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will my colleague permit me a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do these committee clerks who are paid by the year do during the vacation?

Mr. SHERMAN. They do what you do; rest up.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I know; but I get paid for resting up $5,000 a year.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why should not they rest up?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And I do not rest much during the vacation when a campaign is on, either.

Mr. SHERMAN. Neither do they. They are kept pretty busy helping other people.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I want to see them do it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say, from some knowledge of the public service, in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], emphasized by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], that with the exception of the employees of the public service at the other end of the Capitol, the best paid officials in the Federal service are the employees of the House of Representatives. No man who knows anything about the various branches of the public service can successfully controvert that statement. But, Mr. Speaker, here are twenty-three gentlemen on the other side claiming these clerks. My own judgment is against the proposition, but I can not stand out entirely against their appeals.

Mr. LOVE. I will renew the point unless the amendment is made.

Mr. DOCKERY. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to let the amendment stand without the point of order, if it applies to the vacation only.

Mr. LOVE. I will do the same.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the gentleman from Rhode Island if he will accept this amendment—

Mr. HANDY. I renew the reservation, if the gentleman from Missouri withdraws it. I renew the reservation so that the point of order may still be reserved against the other, or any new legislation looking in that direction.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do I have the floor, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BULL] if he will accept this amendment to his amendment—

Mr. HANDY. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SHERMAN (continuing). Provided—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SHERMAN. Can a parliamentary inquiry take a man off the floor, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. HANDY. I will wait until the gentleman is through. I will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the gentleman from Rhode Island if he will accept this amendment to his amendment:

Provided, That this amendment shall entitle said members who are chairmen of committees to said allowance during the vacation of Congress only.

That meets the objection raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. BULL. I accept that amendment.

Mr. HANDY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is new legislation.

Mr. TAWNEY and others. The point of order comes too late. Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that the point of order comes too late, that there has been discussion here for three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. HENDERSON. I make the point of order that the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BULL] being in order, a germane amendment to that can not be held to be out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no difficulty about that.

Mr. HANDY. My point of order is against the whole amendment, not only against the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the question whether the point of order comes too late or not depends entirely upon whether the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] reserved the point in time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Here are the Reporter's notes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Reporter's notes show that immediately after the offering of the amendment the following occurred:

Mr. CANNON. This amendment, as I understand it, is offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BULL], a member of the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. BULL. It is.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say that I shall not make a point of order on that provision. A good many members of the House who are chairmen of committees, having annual clerks, and a good many who are not, have spoken to me about the matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to reserve a point of order until I hear what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the remark of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to reserve a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. There is such a sentiment at least upon the part of some members that I felt I ought not to make the point of order, and, so far as I am concerned, I shall not. Any other gentleman can, if he chooses.

Now, the Chair is inclined to think that the reservation of the point of order did not come too late from the gentleman from Missouri, and therefore if the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] insists on the point of order, the Chair holds that it is pending.

Mr. HANDY. I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I say just a word on the point of order? The notes that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole has just read show, it seems to me, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] after stating that he would not make the point of order, proceeded with the discussion with reference to the amendment, proceeded to a statement of why the amendment might be acceptable in this bill, to wit, that so many members were affected by it, and so forth; and not until after he had made one or two statements—a sentence or two—did the gentleman from Missouri rise at all; not until after he had passed from the proposition that he would not make the point of order, and had gone on to say that many members of the House, and so forth, was there any attempt even to reserve the point of order.

It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that under those circumstances that was an entry into the discussion of the merits of the proposition. And then, Mr. Chairman, even after that, the gentleman from Missouri stated that so far as he was concerned he would withdraw the point of order if the proposition was amended, and even suggested an amendment he proposed to meet his views; and that proposition was discussed before the gentleman from Delaware attempted to reserve the point of order, as I understand the proposition.

Mr. HANDY. That is a mistake as to the facts.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say, as I understand the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the gentleman from Illinois had said that he would make no point of order, or words to that effect. He was proceeding, as a matter of fact, with a further statement in regard to the amendment being offered by the gentleman, and was, in fact—although the Reporter's notes may not show that he was—interrupted in that sentence by the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, that he should like to reserve the point of order, and the Chair asked, "What was the observation of the gentleman from Missouri?" and he replied that he reserved the point of order.

Now, when one member reserves a point of order against any amendment, and reserves it in time, of course it cuts off every other member from an opportunity to reserve the point of order; and afterwards, if he wishes to withdraw the point of order, it is the privilege of any member of the committee to renew it, and of course the gentleman from Delaware has that right. He does renew it, and makes the point of order. Under the rules this amendment is not in order if the point is made in time; and the Chair thinks that the Committee of the Whole can not afford any other rule and to confine a member so closely that when a member rises in debate to say that in his first sentence of debate he can not be interrupted by a point of order by any other member.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to be permitted a moment. It seems to me the Reporter's notes read at the Clerk's desk do not go far enough. The gentleman from Missouri did not say, "I reserve the point of order;" but what he said was, "I would like to reserve a point of order." He did not make it. Subsequently my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL] made some observations in regard to it, and a gentleman across the aisle joined in, and discussion took place. Then, as the Reporter's notes will show, when the gentleman did reserve the point of order the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] promptly responded and made the point of order that it came too late. So that I hold that the notes thus far read by the direction of the Chair do not give the status of the matter as it was, and that the gentleman from Missouri did not make it at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did reserve the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. And when he did attempt to reserve the point of order, the point of order was made that discussion had taken place and it came too late. But, aside from that, I make a second point, Mr. Chairman. Suppose the gentleman does say, "I reserve the point of order." How long is that reservation going to hold good in this House? When speeches have been made over and over again, and nearly an hour's debate has taken place, is there a point of order still to be reserved? Is it never to expire; is the debate to go on as to the merits of the question? But I urge more especially the first point, that the point of order did not come in time. And I appeal to the Reporter's notes in support of the point that I now make.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri said, "I should like to reserve a point of order until I know what the amendment is." The Chair said, "What is the remark of the gentleman from Missouri?" the Chair not understanding whether the gentleman reserved the point of order or made the point of order. The gentleman responded, "I would like to reserve a point of order." It seems to the Chair that language is equivalent to the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. But, Mr. Chairman, he did not state specifically that he reserved the point of order; and I am sure the Reporter's notes will show that he did not reserve the point of order, because subsequently, when he did reserve the point of order, this point of order was made against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa remembers that it is the usual practice in Committee of the Whole, and very frequent, that a member will reserve the point of order, and then debate is had, and goes on for a great length of time, and the point of order is always regarded as reserved; and unless it is made at some subsequent period of time, it is the general practice of the Chair, almost invariably, to ask after the close of debate if the point of order is insisted upon.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish the notes of the Reporter could be written out, because this is an important matter. I call the Chair's attention to the fact that when the real point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Missouri, he said, "Inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not make the point of order, I do reserve the point of order."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the statement was made subsequently by the gentleman from Missouri, after the gentleman from Illinois had concluded his remarks.

Mr. HENDERSON. I contend the construction of the gentleman from Missouri himself was that he had not, in his previous conversation with the Chair, reserved the point of order, but later on he did ask to reserve it, and the point of order was promptly made by the gentleman from New York that it came too late. He said himself, "The chairman of the committee not having reserved it, I reserve the point of order." So that his own construction of his previous conversation with the Chair was that he had not then, at the earlier time, made the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman one question as a matter that has a bearing on debate here generally. Now, when a measure is proposed here and you get up and say you "reserve the point of order," do you not do it here for the very identical purpose of allowing members to have a discussion and make speeches, and then the point of order that has been reserved is withdrawn?

Mr. HENDERSON. A point of order is sometimes made when unanimous consent is asked, or the right to object is reserved until a gentleman can make an explanation.

Mr. HULL was recognized.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there is one point, it seems to me, that has not been brought to the attention of the House. The gentleman from New York was recognized to offer an amendment, and nobody had raised the point of order to the original amendment until after the amendment was submitted. Now, it seems to me, a point of order not having been made to the original by any other member of this House, the gentleman from Delaware raised the point of order after the amendment was offered.

Mr. HANDY. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will wait until I get through.

Mr. HANDY. The gentleman is misstating the fact.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Mississippi arose before the gentleman from Delaware, and when he said "I have no objection to it," then the gentleman came in and raised the point of order. But the amendment was read to the House offered by the gentleman from New York before the gentleman from Delaware woke up.

Mr. HANDY. The gentleman from Delaware was not asleep, and knows exactly what he said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. HANDY. I thought the Chair had already ruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not stated whether the amendment was in or out of order. The Chair has intimated, perhaps, how he was to rule. In regard to the last proposition made by the gentleman from Iowa, after the gentleman from Missouri said that if the amendment was modified as he proposed he would withdraw his point of order, the gentleman from Delaware immediately rose and said he renewed the point of order; so there was no question as to the time in which it was done. After that the statement of the gentleman from New York was made asking the gentleman from Rhode Island to modify his amendment, and the Chair thinks this is clearly out of order, and so rules.

Mr. BULL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island appeals from the decision of the Chair; and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, is this open for discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is debatable under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, under the law of the House as stated by the Chair and under the facts as shown by the Reporter's notes, I think no member of this House can doubt but that the occupant of the chair has discharged his duty and ruled correctly in the premises. It is simply a question whether the members of the House are going to allow the decisions by the Chair to be made mere matters to be tossed from one side of the House to the other; whether the members of the House are going to uphold the occupant of the chair when he does his duty. I say that on the point of order.

Now, as to the real merits of the case, I think the whole business of clerks has been placed on a wrong basis. Every member of this House is entitled to a private secretary, whether chairman of a committee or not. The fact that he is chairman of a committee simply gives him more work of a kind which his private secretary ought to do. The House ought to give every member a private secretary, and then if the committees have too many clerks let the House cut down the assistance.

There is no connection between committee work and the private secretary work. I can not imagine how I could get along with the clerk of a committee, if I happened to be the chairman, for I could not order the clerk of the committee to come up to my private room at the Cairo Hotel at 8 o'clock in the morning and attend to my private business for two or three hours and then come down and do his committee work. From the first time I looked into this matter and saw that the chairmen of the committees were not allowed separate private secretaries I never could understand the business sense of it. I think every member of the House ought to have a private secretary, and if the committees have too many clerks a proper resolution ought to be passed cutting them down. But this has nothing to do with the wisdom of cutting them down.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BULL] will withdraw the appeal from the decision of the Chair. The decision is correct, and we ought not to be overruling the decisions of the Chair to reach what gentlemen seem to desire in particular matters. I think it is better to withdraw it and let the proposition come before the House in such form as it will be able to fairly test the sense of the House.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt in my mind as to the correctness of the ruling of the Chair if the stenographer's notes bear out the statement of the Chair that the gentleman from Delaware did raise the point of order before the gentleman from New York made his motion to amend. If he made it before the motion to amend was made, then the Chair is absolutely right, and the House should sustain the Chair. The only question in my mind is as to the precedence of these events.

Mr. HANDY. Whatever the notes may show, the fact is as the Chair states. The gentleman from Iowa was asleep. As soon as the gentleman from Missouri indicated that he was likely to withdraw his point of order I got up and said, "If that is intended to be withdrawn I wish to renew it."

Mr. BULL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my appeal from the decision of the Chair and give notice that at an early day I hope to see this proposition brought in upon a report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MOODY. I hope that when that report is brought in it will embody some of the suggestions which have been made here, so as to abolish some of these useless or sinecure places.

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowances to the following contestants and contestees, audited and recommended by the Committees on Elections, for expenses incurred by them in contested-election cases, namely:

To John R. Brown, $2,000;
To C. A. Swanson, $2,000;
To B. P. Chatfield, $2,000;
To W. J. Talbert, $2,000;
To E. W. Carmack, $2,000;
To R. T. Thorp, $2,000;
To S. P. Epes, $2,000;
To G. W. Murray, $2,000;
To T. B. Johnston, $2,000;
To J. William Stokes, $2,000;
To R. A. Wise, $2,000;
To William Elliott, $2,000;
To A. C. Latimer, $913;

To T. J. Strait, $1,000;
 To T. H. Clark, $500;
 To Jesse F. Stallings, $750;
 To G. L. Comer, $1,061.50;
 To Henry D. Clayton, $1,368.75;
 To William F. Aldrich, $2,000;
 To Thomas S. Plowman, $2,000;
 To A. T. Goodwyn, $2,000;
 To Willis Brewer, $2,000;
 To G. B. Crowe, $2,000;
 To O. W. Underwood, $2,000;
 To J. S. Willis, $500;
 To L. Irving Handy, $750;
 To W. Godfrey Hunter, $2,000;
 To John S. Rhea, $2,000;
 To W. A. Young, $2,000;
 To Josiah Patterson, $2,000;
 To T. C. Catchings, $2,000;
 To Armand Bomain, $2,000;
 To B. L. Fairchild, $2,000;
 To Joseph Gazin, $1,734.75;
 To W. E. Ryan, $2,000;
 To W. S. Vanderburg, $1,359.95;
 To William McAleer, $1,831.80;
 To Samuel E. Hudson, $1,941.63;
 To Cornelius J. Jones, $2,000;
 To William L. Ward, $2,000; in all, $99,711.47.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 22, on page 69, insert:

"To Thomas H. Tongue, $100."

And in line 24 strike out "seven" and insert in lieu thereof "eight."

Mr. BAILEY. In this connection I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether it would not be within the power of the Committee on Appropriations to allow the men who have established their rights to the seats which they occupy in this House an amount sufficient to cover the expenses they have actually incurred in their contests and to disallow the accounts of men whose contests have been proven to be without merit?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas is aware as well as myself of the legislation covering this class of appropriations. In 1878 legislation was enacted prohibiting the payment to any contestant or contestee of any amount in excess of $2,000, and providing in substance, if I recollect correctly, that payments should be made upon certificates of the Committee on Elections after auditing the claims and that such claims after certification should be reported upon a general appropriation bill. I have no doubt that from that time to this there have been in every Congress, as there are in this Congress, cases where these expenses of contestants and contestees have been legitimately in excess of the maximum sum allowed—$2,000. But there is the law, and I do not know of any way to get around it except by an amendment of the law, which, of course, it is always within the power of Congress to adopt.

Mr. BAILEY. The difficulty which occurs to my mind is this: A candidate defeated at the polls and with no real grounds for a contest inaugurates one and puts the holder of the certificate to an expense, reaching in some cases within my own knowledge $4,000 or $5,000; and then, after having inaugurated a groundless and a fruitless contest, he gets $2,000 as his allowance, while the gentleman who was really elected and who, holding the State certificate, was, of course, obliged to defend it, and has thus incurred an expense of perhaps $4,000 or $5,000, is allowed only $2,000. These contests have become a matter of speculation to one class of men and a great burden to another class.

I realize that if all limitation were removed in respect to the payment of expenses, you would introduce an element of serious danger, so that men might not carefully make their contracts for the services of attorneys in their various counties. But it does seem to me that those in charge of these matters might devise a rule that would give to a man who had been elected—not only certified by the State authorities to have been elected, but decided by the House upon a contest to have been elected—a rule under which a man of that kind might receive his actual expenses, while the man who had inaugurated the contest against him, without any sufficient ground, ought to be denied even a dollar.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Texas, allow me to say that the law provides that the Committee on Elections shall audit the accounts for the expenses of these contests. In theory at least, and I apprehend in practice, the Committee on Elections having this authority by law does in fact audit. It is quite within the power of the committee in auditing to reject all or any portion of a proposed amount to a contestant or contestee. I do not know the facts in regard to the allowances in any of these cases, for I have not examined any item touching them.

Mr. LOVE. Have they been certified to by the Committee on Elections?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; every one of them. And under the law we took the certificate and embodied the amount in the bill.

The point of the gentleman from Texas as to the desirability of discouraging contests by mulcting a contestant or contestee or withholding the appropriation where the case is without merit is worthy of consideration. Undoubtedly men have in some cases obtained certificates of election proper in form when they had no more right to a seat here than I have to be translated, and the House has unseated such members. So that we can not make a rule that a contestant shall not be paid. Such a rule would unduly discourage contests.

Mr. BAILEY. But the instituting of contests in election cases has become a regular industry in some districts in this country.

Mr. CANNON. I suspect that is entirely true. But I am speaking of the difficulty that the gentleman suggests. I say that I find the law as it is; and it is with Congress, of course, to change it if it sees proper.

Mr. BAILEY. I know in the present Congress three or four gentlemen who have spent in defending their seats $4,000 or $5,000 each, and investigation of the records will show that they have spent it with reasonable care. Now, it does not seem to me exactly just that members who are thus compelled to defend the certificates of their States should be called upon to put their hands in their pockets and pay their own expenses.

Mr. CANNON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me to mention my own case? My seat was contested in a Democratic Congress, and, first, every member of the committee; and afterwards every member of the House, decided that the contest against me was ill founded. Without counting the fees of my principal attorney, who was my brother, I brought in an itemized account of $4,700, every dollar of which had been expended and the receipts filed. Yet I received only $2,000—$2,700 short of what I had to expend in defending my seat, which every member of the House said I was entitled to.

Mr. BAILEY. There could not be a stronger illustration of the injustice of the present rule than that just stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE]. I believe, of course, that there ought to be some statute for the compensation of a man who makes a legitimate contest, even though it should be decided that he was not actually elected. Any other rule would compel a man who in good faith believed himself elected and his certificate unjustly withheld to carry on the contest at his own expense, which many men would be unable and some men unwilling to do.

But it appears to me that where a member of the House in defending his right to a seat incurs a given amount of expense and can show that he has not been reckless or extravagant in doing so, he ought to be reimbursed; while the man who will institute a contest so utterly groundless that a committee in the first place and the House in the second place unanimously decide it to be simply frivolous or vexatious, ought not to be allowed a dollar.

Mr. STEELE. I failed to state that my competitor got the same amount that I did.

Mr. BAILEY. The same amount as you did; put you to the expense of $4,700 and the Government to the expense of $4,000, and all without any sufficient cause.

Mr. CLAYTON. And he got two thousand himself.

Mr. LOVE. In a case of that kind, where the contestant clearly failed to make out his case at all, would the Elections Committee have the right to report as to the amount he should receive, or does the law fix that?

Mr. BAILEY. I think possibly they would; but a practice has grown up—and it will always grow up where there is a hard and fixed allowance—to let them have it. The question is not very clear, but my own judgment is that the committee ought to take the matter under consideration and allow every man, whether contestant or contestee, what he has actually expended, provided, of course, that he exercises good judgment in the expenditure of it, but not allow a man a dollar who institutes a frivolous contest for a seat in this House.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, so long as the law remains as it is to-day on the statute books, just so long will it be an incentive and a stimulus to the instituting of contested-election cases and proceedings.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that he does not know any remedy or any way by which this can be remedied. Let me suggest to the distinguished gentleman a remedy, full, complete, and comprehensive in every respect. On a previous day of the session of this Congress I introduced a bill and had it referred to the appropriate committee, absolutely repealing the statute giving a fixed sum in every contested-election case in this House. Before I had done that I went to the Clerk of the House and ascertained from him that since the passage of the act allowing $2,000 for both contestant and contestee in election cases there had been expended in this House, out of the public funds of the country, over $600,000.

Mr. CLAYTON. The language of the law is:

Hereafter no contestee or contestant for a seat in the House of Representatives shall be paid exceeding $2,000.

Mr. BURKE. I understand that.

Mr. CLAYTON. It shall not run over that.

Mr. BURKE. I understand that.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is the maximum amount.

Mr. BURKE. That is true, but even under that, I will state to the gentleman from Alabama, the records show in the neighborhood of $600,000, not counting the $70,000 proposed to be carried in this bill.

Mr. LOVE. How long ago was that law passed?

Mr. BURKE. In 1878. I realize, Mr. Chairman, the force of the suggestion made by my colleague from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]; and I believe that this House ought to repeal the existing statute and inaugurate a system that will carry into practical effect and operation the suggestions made by him. I believe it is right. That bill is now pending before Elections Committee No. 3 of this House.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman construe the existing law as mandatory upon this House to pay each person $2,000 whether the claim is meritorious or not?

Mr. BURKE. No; I should think not.

Mr. GAINES. Not at all. It is a matter of discretion whether they pay anything or not.

Mr. BURKE. But practically it is done.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let me say to the honorable gentleman that the law requires, and in the Committee on Elections of which I am a member the law is carried out, that there shall be an itemized statement of the expenses, verified by the affidavit of the person who makes the claim. That is done in each case presented to the committee of which I am a member.

Mr. BAILEY. But if my friend from Georgia will permit me, while that is true that no more is allowed than has been expended, yet the question as to the merits of the contest is hardly ever taken into consideration.

Mr. BARTLETT. But we did not think we had a right to go into that.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, I think that is very probably true, and I have never known a contestee or a contestant to be denied whatever he spent (and they generally spend up to the $2,000 limit), without any reference to whether the contest was groundless or not.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman from Texas think that the committee have any right in this matter to determine whether or not the case is groundless, and therefore make an allowance accordingly?

Mr. BURKE. That is exactly what I wish to see remedied by legislation.

Mr. KING. Is not the law susceptible to that construction, now that the committee have jurisdiction to determine whether it is a frivolous claim or not?

Mr. BURKE. I think possibly they have a right to do it, but I wish to say that practically it is not done.

Mr. KING. One other question, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If that is true, why not refer this matter back to the committee and let them make recommendations accordingly?

Mr. BURKE. It might be too late for that now in this Congress.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him just for a moment?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. I think that the Committees on Elections pass upon these expenditures as a clerk or master would, and recommend them to the House. The House, of course, passes upon the merits or demerits of the contest, and settles that before anything is paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that my colleague be permitted to proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me? I should like to move to rise, to allow a conference report to come in. The gentleman can take his time in the morning.

Mr. BURKE. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee do now rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10691) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present a conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I ask that the reading of the report be omitted and that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to omit the reading of the report, and to have the statement read. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the report be not read, but that the statement be read.

Mr. McMILLIN. The statement contains the substance of the report as well, I presume?

Mr. GROUT. It does.

Mr. DOCKERY. It does.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6897) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

On No. 84: Appropriates $3,000, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, to make an investigation concerning the filtering of the water supply.

On No. 85: Appropriates for resuming work on the construction of the Washington Aqueduct tunnel, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, and 103, relating to the public schools: Appropriates for school teachers as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $12,000, as proposed by the Senate, for kindergarten instruction; appropriates $64,126, instead of $62,426, as proposed by the House, and $64,326, as proposed by the Senate, for janitors and care of school buildings; appropriates $25,000, instead of $42,100, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs to plumbing in school buildings; appropriates $6,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of manual training, and $40,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $45,000, as proposed by the Senate, for purchase of text-books and school supplies; appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $45,500, for a new school building and site in the third division, southeast, and $50,000 for a manual training school building and site therefor for the first eight divisions, with authority to contract therefor, not to exceed $125,000; and strikes out the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, of $12,000 for a new school building on Grant road and $41,250 for a new school building and site in the ninth division.

On Nos. 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, and 114, relating to the Metropolitan police: Strikes out the proposed increase by the Senate in the number of officers and privates; provides for two additional laborers, as proposed by the Senate, at $180 each, and appropriates $35,025 for miscellaneous and other expenses, instead of $32,499, as proposed by the House, and $30,525, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, and 125, relating to the fire department: Strikes out the appropriation of $1,150 for a machinist in charge of repairs, proposed by the Senate; appropriates $45,977, instead of $44,000, as proposed by the House, and $49,727, as proposed by the Senate, for miscellaneous expenses; strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for an additional stable for No. 8 engine house; strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, diverting the unexpended balance of appropriation for engine house in the vicinity of North Capitol street and Florida avenue to the Anacostia engine house; and appropriates $9,000, as proposed by the Senate, for a new horse carriage.

On Nos. 126 and 127: Appropriates for one additional repair man, at $720, as proposed by the Senate, for the telegraph and telephone service.

On Nos. 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, and 134, relating to the health department: Strikes out the appropriation of $720, proposed by the Senate, for an engineer at the smallpox hospital; appropriates $6,000, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the House, and $7,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the enforcement of laws to prevent the spread of scarlet fever and diphtheria; appropriates $500, instead of $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the abatement of nuisances under the act of 1894; and makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

On Nos. 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, and 142, relating to the Washington Asylum: Appropriates for personal services as proposed by the House, instead of as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $47,000, instead of $44,000, as proposed by the House, and $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses; appropriates $1,000, instead of $4,000, as proposed by the House, and $0,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the erection of a building for a nurses' home; and strikes out the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, of $1,000 for furniture for nurses' home and $7,000 for a building for the care of colored female inmates.

On Nos. 163, 169, 170, 171, and 172: Appropriates $1,000, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs of furniture for the Columbia Hospital for Women; appropriates $1,500, as proposed by the Senate, for furniture and equipment of building for the Industrial Home School; and appropriates $34,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $30,500, as proposed by the House, for expenses of the Board of Children's Guardians.

On Nos. 173, 174, 175, and 176: Strikes out the increases proposed by the Senate in certain appropriations for the militia.

On No. 177: Changes the title, as proposed by the Senate, of the chief clerk of the water department to that of water registrar.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree upon the following amendments of the Senate:

No. 12, for free public library, $6,730;
Nos. 60, 70, 71, 72, 73, and 74, relating to electric arc lighting;
Nos. 79 and 80, appropriating $25,000, respectively, for the Connecticut avenue and Massachusetts avenue bridges;
No. 128, relating to telephone poles and electric wire conduits; and
Nos. 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, and 167, relating to the charities.

The bill as passed by the House appropriated $5,000, $47,57, to which the Senate added by its amendments $1,320, $47,63. By the action of the conference committee the Senate recedes from $710,688.13, the House agrees to $759,062.50 of said increase, and there is involved in the amendments upon which the conference committee has been unable to agree the sum of $59,720.

WILLIAM W. GROUT,
MAHLON PITNEY,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the report of the committee of conference be agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GROUT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the first item upon which a disagreement is reported is the amendment numbered 12, and my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY], has a proposition to submit in connection with that Senate amendment.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a proposition with respect to amendment No. 12 that I desire to submit, and also a proposition in respect to amendment No. 74. I have already prepared the latter in writing, and would prefer to submit it first, if there be no objection by the gentleman from Vermont. It is in respect to electrical conduits, and I should like to bring it up before the other amendments.

Mr. GROUT. I have no objection.

Mr. PITNEY. I move, Mr. Speaker, the following resolution—that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree thereto with an amendment which I submit.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree thereto with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Provided further, That all overhead electric-light wires and poles in the territory bounded by B street north, First street east, the fire limits, and Rock Creek, including said B street and First street, shall be removed within one year after the passage of this act, and that from and after the passage of this act no further overhead electric-light wires or poles shall be erected within said territory, and after the expiration of said year no overhead electric-light wires or poles shall be maintained within said territory, excepting, however, such wires and poles as may be necessary in alleys for distribution purposes, as hereinafter provided.

"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and required, as soon as practicable and within ninety days after the passage of this act, to prepare detailed plans for a system of underground conduits for the territory aforesaid, specifying the number, character, and location of the several conduits for the said territory; which plans shall provide for a sufficient number of ways or ducts in said conduits to contain the wires necessary to take the place of the overhead electric-light wires and other overhead wires now existing in said territory, and said conduits shall also contain a sufficient number of additional ducts to provide for all probable future needs of said territory; and each conduit shall also contain at least two ducts which shall be reserved for the use of the United States and the District of Columbia.

At any time within sixty days after the passage of this act any company or corporation now maintaining overhead or underground wires in the District of Columbia for electric lighting, telegraph, telephone, power, heating, or other purposes, may apply in writing to said Commissioners for duct room in said system of conduits, specifying as nearly as may be the number of ducts required for the present and future needs of such company or corporation; and the said Commissioners shall, after fully hearing the said applicants and all other parties interested, upon consideration of the whole matter, settle and determine not only the number, character, and location of said conduits, but also the total number of ducts to be laid in said conduits, and how many of said ducts shall be allotted to the several companies or corporations applying for duct room in said conduits, and how many ducts shall be provided and set apart for the other present and future needs of said territory; and said Commissioners shall thereupon prepare the plans of said conduit system, which plans shall be open to the inspection and examination of any person or corporation applying to inspect the same, and may be modified or amended by said Commissioners as circumstances may in their judgment require; and at the expiration of said ninety days the said Commissioners shall proceed to construct said system of conduits at the expense of the several companies or corporations to whom duct room shall have been allotted as aforesaid; each company or corporation to contribute to the cost of said construction in proportion to the duct room allotted to such company or corporation.

"Before proceeding to construct said conduits the said Commissioners shall require from each company and corporation to whom duct room has been allotted, as above provided, a bond with sufficient security satisfactory to the said Commissioners and in such amount as they shall prescribe, securing the payment on demand from time to time of such sums as may be necessary to cover the cost of said conduits, or such proportion thereof as may be chargeable to such company or corporation; and a failure to furnish such bond within fifteen days after the same shall be required by said Commissioners shall annul the right of the person or company so failing to participate in the construction of said conduit system as herein provided. Said Commissioners may demand payments from said companies from time to time in advance of the work of construction, so that said Commissioners may have in hand not less than 10 nor more than 25 per cent of the total cost of construction in advance of the actual construction of the work.

"The said conduits, when completed (except such portion thereof as shall be reserved for public use), shall be the property of the several companies contributing to the cost of construction, in proportion to the amount of their several contributions; but the use of said conduits shall be subject to the provisions of this act and to such further laws as Congress may enact in that behalf, and the right to maintain and use said system of conduits shall be revocable at any time by Congress, upon making to the parties interested therein such reasonable compensation (if any) as shall be fixed by Congress.

"The several companies or corporations owning said conduit system shall be severally entitled to use the several ducts therein contained in proportion to their respective contributions to the cost of construction, but subject to regulation by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as to the number of ducts necessary to be used and as to the reservation of duct room for the other present and future needs of said territory, and the said Commissioners shall have the power from time to time to let out the right to use and occupy such duct room as shall not in their judgment be needed by the owners of said conduit system to any company authorized by law to carry on business requiring the use of electric wires in said territory, upon such reasonable rentals as shall be prescribed by the said Commissioners, said rentals to be paid to said Commissioners for the use of the owners of said conduit system, but no such lease shall be made for a longer term than three years.

"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have power to construct, from time to time, within the territory above described, such extensions and branches of said conduit system as in their judgment may be required, such extensions and branches to be located and constructed in the same manner and upon the same terms as herein above provided, and under such regulations and restrictions as said Commissioners shall prescribe.

"All electrical conduits now existing within the fire limits of the District of Columbia and all overhead electric wires and poles now existing outside of said fire limits are hereby legalized until otherwise provided by law; but the right to maintain and use the same shall at all times be revocable at the will of Congress, and with or without compensation, as Congress may deem proper.

"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to issue permits for the construction of such conduits as may be necessary to enable the companies owning or lawfully using said new conduits to connect the same with their now-existing conduits at the nearest and most accessible points for each, not exceeding two squares' distance and not exceeding two connecting conduits for any one company; and said Commissioners may also issue permits for the construction of conduits for house connections between any street conduit now existing or hereby authorized and any house or building adjacent to such street conduit or situate within a distance of 125 feet therefrom; and where it may be necessary for this purpose to cross any public grounds or reservation not controlled by said Commissioners it shall be lawful for the proper public authority to grant a permit for the construction of a conduit across said public grounds or reservation for that purpose.

"And the said Commissioners are further authorized to issue permits for the construction of service wires, either overhead or underground, in the alleys of squares adjacent to street conduits, and for the construction and maintenance of such alley poles as may be necessary for the distribution of electric-light wires in such squares; and any square located within 125 feet of any street conduit shall for this purpose be considered as adjacent thereto. And said Commissioners may permit overhead wires to cross alleys where necessary for such distribution, but no overhead wires shall be permitted to be placed or maintained across any street or avenue; and said Commissioners may also issue permits for the construction of overhead electric lines and extensions thereof and house connections therewith in that portion of the District of Columbia which lies outside of the fire limits, by any company or corporation now carrying on the business of electric lighting in the District of Columbia.

"And said Commissioners may issue permits for the construction of connecting conduits, not exceeding 500 feet in length in any case, to lead from any electrical conduit now existing or hereby authorized to the conduit of any electrical railway: Provided, however, That no house connection shall be made from any conduit of an electrical railway: Provided further, That after eighteen months from the passage of this act no person or corporation shall operate or maintain within the District of Columbia any dynamo or generator or any electrical circuit for furnishing or distributing electricity for light or power purposes, having any terminal grounded, or any part within the District of Columbia in electrical connection or contact with the earth, except upon lines or parts of lines owned by such person or corporation which are authorized by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain such electrical contact or connection with the earth. Any violation of the provisions of this paragraph shall render the person or corporation so offending liable to a penalty of $25 for each and every day during which such violation shall continue, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve a point of order upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask on what ground the point of order is made. If my motion is not in order, it is not necessary to submit any remarks on the merits. The proposition is entirely germane to the amendment for which it is a substitute.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey is clearly objectionable to this provision of the rule:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or any amendment thereto.

As I understand, this is a proposition which looks to the creation of a different system from that now prevailing in reference to electric apparatus within the city and to the mode of illuminating the streets. This is a general appropriation bill, carrying large sums for sundry purposes respecting this city. In this general appropriation bill is a proposition now, looking, as I understand it, to a change in one of the ordinances, if it may be so denominated, or one of the laws respecting the manner of utilizing electricity. It seems to me clearly that it is objectionable, in that it changes existing law, or, if there is no law whatever upon this subject, it seeks to introduce a law governing the same, and, of course, it would be objectionable, because it would be a change of the present status.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment does change the existing law. But that point of order can not be raised to an amendment of this character on an appropriation bill at this stage. If the appropriation bill were under original consideration in the House, any proposition contained therein to change existing law would be out of order. But the Senate has amended this appropriation bill, either under their rules or in spite of their rules, or in the absence of objection thereto, they have put upon the bill an amendment which does change existing law, and the House can not complain of that, of course.

Now, the Senate amendment being here on a conference report, which reports a disagreement between the House conferees and the Senate conferees, it is in order for the House either to insist upon our disagreement, or to recede from our disagreement, or to partially recede, which I propose we shall do, by receding from our former disagreement to the matter contained in the Senate amendment, provided the Senate will amend it in the manner proposed in my resolution.

Now, any amendment which is germane to the amendment proposed by the Senate is in order at this stage, under the rules; and the only question is, not whether this proposition will change the law of the District of Columbia, but whether it will change it in a respect germane to the change proposed in the Senate amendment.

Mr. KING. May I inquire what the character of the amendment is? As I am not informed as to the amendment offered to the amendment of the Senate, I would be very glad if the gentleman would indicate the character of the amendment.

Mr. PITNEY. I will indicate and thereby go to the merits of the question. The Senate amendment requires that all electric-light wires in a certain part of the District of Columbia which are now over head shall be placed under ground within a year. My amendment requires exactly the same thing with respect to exactly the same territory. But the Senate amendment provides that subways or conduits shall be constructed under regulations made by the District Commissioners and under permits granted by the Commissioners at the expense and for the sole benefit of the company or companies owning the present overhead wires and that extensions of these conduits may be permitted.

My amendment, instead of giving a monopoly to the one company or two companies, if such there be, which now have the overhead wires, provides that the Commissioners shall lay out a system of conduits to accommodate that territory, and shall permit any company to contribute to the cost of the construction of the conduit system and have the use thereof in proportion to the needs of the company. There are a large number of provisions respecting matters of detail. Some of these I have put in in the same form or the same in substance as the Senate amendment, and others in different phraseology. I am ready to discuss the merits at any time, and should be glad to do it now if the point of order were first passed upon, but there is nothing in my amendment that is not germane to the subject-matter of the Senate amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add a single word to what has been said by the gentleman from New Jersey. A point of order would lie if this bill was being considered in the House originally; but the Senate having amended the House proposition, it is in order, as proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, to offer a substitute for the Senate amendment.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman will permit me, I concede the correctness of the position just stated by the gentleman; but, as I understand, the amendment offered by the Senate does not relate to the establishment of a system to be coextensive with the city, to be a harmonious system for the whole city. Of course, if it looks toward the Government control of electrical appliances of the city, I concede it would be germane to that subject to go further and attempt, as the gentleman has stated, to extend the opportunity to the other companies.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] can make answer to the inquiry, but the general purpose of the amendment is to put the two electric-light companies of this city on an equal footing so far as the law can do so. The House conferees insist that competition will be advantageous to the people of the District of Columbia, beneficial to the Government of the United States, and not disadvantageous to the stockholders of the companies.

Mr. KING. Does not the gentleman think the importance of the subject requires that the whole matter be relegated to the proper committee and have a hearing, if necessary, and have a complete investigation and report by bill that will finally meet the requirements?

Mr. DOCKERY. The suggestion of the gentleman from Utah is a timely one, and ordinarily I would say yes. Theoretically that is the correct course of procedure, but as a matter of fact it is practically impossible to secure independent legislation. Of course, this proposition could not have appeared on this bill under our rules, but the Senate having raised the question by amendment, the gentleman from New Jersey offers the amendment in response to that proposition, and the House can now take up the question and deal with it, and I believe we can secure a satisfactory adjustment. I feel sure that unless we can secure competition under the terms of this amendment the District Committee will be unable to secure the enactment of an independent bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] moves to recede from the House disagreement to the amendment No. 74 and to agree with an amendment. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING] makes the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey is new legislation. The Chair is very clearly of opinion that the point of order is not well taken. It is conceded that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey is germane to the Senate amendment, and the point that it is new legislation can not be raised at this stage of the proceeding, inasmuch as the new legislation originated in the Senate. If that was not the rule, it would be in the power of the Senate at any time to originate new legislation and deprive the House of any judgment with reference to it. If new legislation originates in the Senate, the House has the right to agree or disagree or to agree with an amendment, and the point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment No. 74 and agree with an amendment which the Clerk has reported.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words—

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I should be glad, if there were time enough to do it, to discuss this amendment at length; but I have taken some pains to explain to the gentleman from Utah in his seat the purport of the amendment in detail, and I have taken a great deal of pains in the preparation of it. The Committee on Appropriations has been obliged to spend much time on this question during the past three years. The question is always raised in the shape of a Senate amendment on an appropriation bill. We have necessarily assumed jurisdiction of it, and have spent much time and pains upon it. This amendment has been carefully prepared in the light of our experience. It has been submitted to the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, who has gone over it word by word; it has been submitted to the superintendent of street lighting, and both have approved it and consider it a great improvement on any other proposition that has been made.

It is now twenty minutes to 5 o'clock, and we have to close the session at 5. We are anxious to dispose of this conference report before that time. If there is any particular point about which the gentleman from Utah desires information, I should be glad to give it to him; otherwise I will ask for the previous question.

Mr. KING. I yielded to the gentleman after I had been recognized, and he must not move the previous question until I make an observation or two.

Mr. PITNEY. I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, that that is the status of affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. PITNEY. On the merits of the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know for what purpose the gentleman rose.

Mr. PITNEY. How much time does the gentleman from Utah want?

Mr. KING. Well, I have the floor; but I will not consume much time.

Mr. PITNEY. I should like the opinion of the Speaker as to who has the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the amendment offered in the Senate. I heartily agree with the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, if we are to have any legislation whatever on this subject. My opposition relates to the entire subject and not to the amendment just submitted. I think this question is of so much importance that it ought to be considered by the proper committee. I believe it to be an unwise, not to say a very vicious principle that controls to such an extent the action of the House in incorporating upon appropriation bills legislation so important as this.

Mr. PITNEY. We have not done it. The Senate has done it. If the gentleman could raise his point of order at the other end of the Capitol, it might serve some purpose.

Mr. KING. If my friend from New Jersey will listen he will understand that I am not finding fault with him, but with the action of the Senate. It seems to me that the proper course for the conferees would have been to resist this amendment of the Senate and not to have brought back this report asking that the amendment be adopted. I am in favor of rejecting not only the amendment, but the entire proposition submitted by the Senate. That is the nature of my opposition. If we are to legislate at all on the subject, it is infinitely better that we should adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman, as I understand it, than that we should accept the Senate proposition without amendment.

Mr. PITNEY. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY], that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to it with the amendment which has been reported.

The motion of Mr. PITNEY was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PITNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. PITNEY. I now move that the House recede from its former disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 12, and agree thereto with the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the whole of the paragraph in said amendment numbered 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Free public library: For librarian, $2,000; first assistant librarian, $900; second assistant librarian, $720; and for rent, fuel, light, fitting up rooms, and other contingent expenses, $1,100; in all, $5,720.
"Provided, That whenever said library shall be opened for public use such books, periodicals, and papers in the existing libraries of the several Executive Departments and offices of the Government in the city of Washington as in the judgment of the head of the Department, bureau, or office affected are not required for the special official use of said Department, bureau, or office shall be transferred as a loan to the free public library and reading room for its use, and it is hereby made the duty of the head of each Department, bureau, or office in which a circulating library is maintained for the use of employees of the Government to deliver all such books, periodicals, and papers, without delay, as a loan to the free public library and reading room, and thereafter no general circulating library, but only such library as is required for its special official use, shall be established or maintained by any Department, bureau, or office of the Government in the District of Columbia; but the books, periodicals, and papers so loaned shall be and remain the property of the United States and shall be labeled in such manner as to show such ownership."

The motion of Mr. PITNEY was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PITNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4107. An act for the protection of subsurface pipes, cables, wires, and other metallic constructions in the District of Columbia from danger by electrolysis, and for other purposes;

S. 4070. An act to amend an act granting to the St. Louis, Oklahoma and Southern Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes;

S. 3890. An act to grant lands to the State of Alabama for the use of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Alabama, for negroes, and the State Normal College, at Florence, Ala.;

S. 3941. An act regulating the inspection of flour in the District of Columbia;

S. 4571. An act to extend Rhode Island avenue;

S. 4070. An act providing for the immediate repair of the reservoir dam at Lake Winnibigoshish, Minnesota;

S. 3972. An act for the relief of Dr. John B. Read;

S. 3728. An act for the relief of William B. Reaney, surviving partner of the firm of Reaney, Son & Archbold;

S. 2844. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Elias B. Bell; and

S. 4326. An act to regulate the sitting of the United States courts within the district of South Carolina.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9338. An act to restore to the State of New York the flag carried by the One hundred and fourth New York Volunteer Infantry;

H. R. 7696. An act granting an increase of pension to William Christenberry;

H. R. 7314. An act for the relief of John B. Tyre; and

H. R. 3243. An act for the relief of Cordell B. Green, Company D, Sixteenth Michigan Infantry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 7844) to increase the pension of Mary Brogan; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House concurrent resolution No. 36, relative to Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6897) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3173. An act for the relief of the owner or owners of the schooner Bergen—to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 4655. An act granting an increase of pension to Richard L. Titworth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4326. An act to regulate the sitting of the United States courts within the district of South Carolina—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2844. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Elias B. Bell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2723. An act for the relief of William B. Reaney, surviving partner of the firm of Reaney, Son & Archbold—to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 4079. An act providing for the immediate repair of the reservoir dam at Lake Winnibigoshish, Minnesota—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

S. 4571. An act to extend Rhode Island avenue—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 3941. An act regulating the inspection of flour in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 4107. An act for the protection of subsurface pipes, cables, wires, and other metallic constructions in the District of Columbia from danger by electrolysis, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. The next amendment to which we desire the attention of the House relates to the bridges over Connecticut avenue, Rock Creek avenue, and Massachusetts avenue. The conferees on the part of the House have brought this matter here with a disagreement, because that was the understanding in the House at the time the bill was sent to conference. I understand that all opposition is withdrawn, but we have chosen to report the disagreement to the House.

Mr. KING. I do not know that the gentleman is warranted in saying that all opposition to those bridges is withdrawn.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman from Vermont allow the matter to be submitted to the House now? I desire to move to concur in the Senate amendment as to these two bridges. I move that we concur in the Senate amendment as to the Connecticut avenue and the Massachusetts avenue bridges.

Mr. MAHANY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether the proposition to build one of these bridges was not rejected by the House earlier in the session?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly—the one on which the House acted at the time the bill was passed; the other is the Connecticut avenue bridge.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I move to concur in the amendment as to the first of these bridges—the Connecticut avenue bridge. That is amendment No. 79.

Mr. MAHANY. I desire to say that in this Congress and in the Fifty-fourth Congress I have repeatedly heard the professional "watchdogs of the Treasury," on both sides of this House, get up and howl dismally against even urgent and necessary appropriations for public improvements of general utility, and yet it is calmly proposed by the committee having this measure in charge to expend $200,000 for a bridge in a remote and comparatively uninhabited region of the District of Columbia. At the time when the proposition for this particular bridge was overwhelmingly defeated in the House the debate developed, clearly and distinctly, the fact that such an improvement was absolutely unnecessary and unwarranted on any grounds of public convenience or advantage.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Which bridge is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman means the Massachusetts avenue bridge.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. My motion now is to concur in the amendment of the Senate with reference to the other bridge. I hope the gentleman from New York will wait and not speak upon the other until this question is decided.

Mr. MAHANY. The bridge to which I refer is the one proposed to be built over Massachusetts avenue. I have no great objection to the other.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the Massachusetts avenue bridge.

Mr. FLEMING. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that after a long discussion in this House one of these measures was voted down.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the Massachusetts avenue bridge—not the one to which my motion applies.

Mr. FLEMING. The other one—the Connecticut avenue bridge—may be as bad as that. It has never been discussed in the House at all, as I understand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to vote upon these questions upon their merits when we have a full House; but I for one am not willing to see this bridge matter carried through this House with only a scattering number of members here, when it has already been voted down in the full House. So I give notice that I am going to raise the question whether or not there is a quorum, if a vote is to be taken upon this question.

Mr. PITNEY. I think these matters might well be postponed. I hope the gentleman in charge of the conference report will agree to a postponement until to-morrow.

Mr. FLEMING. If gentlemen will allow both bridge matters to go over until morning I will not raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. GROUT. I have no objection to leaving these items open until to-morrow morning. We could hardly have time to dispose of them to-night anyway, if there was any discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia has already made a motion.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why not let the other go over and let the Connecticut avenue item go through?

Mr. FLEMING. We have not discussed the Connecticut avenue bridge at all in the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Nobody has objected to that.

Mr. FLEMING. I should like to know something about it. What is it? What is the necessity for it? The House did not put it on the bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The law provides for it; the property is all condemned and everything has been done.

Mr. GROUT. If the gentleman from Georgia would withdraw his motion to concur, I would move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this particular amendment, or on all of them?

Mr. GROUT. On all of the remaining amendments.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am perfectly willing to have the matter go over until to-morrow, but I do not propose to be taken clear off the floor.

Mr. GROUT. I do not propose to take the gentleman off the floor.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not the floor, but the field, on that proposition.

Mr. PITNEY. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will withdraw that motion. I do not think the conferees ought to be put in that position—

Mr. GROUT. There is a motion pending, and unless that is withdrawn I can make no motion. I simply suggested to the gentleman from Georgia that he withdraw it.

Mr. FLEMING. And let it go over until morning.

Mr. GROUT. The matter had better go over.

Mr. PITNEY. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am perfectly willing to have that done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am perfectly willing to have that done, with the understanding that my motion is pending.

Mr. GROUT. I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. MAHON. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] to make that motion, which I believe is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands now, and will put the motion in a moment.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. WHITE of North Carolina, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ELLIOTT, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HARMER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. GAINES, for the remainder of this day, on account of illness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The Committee on Pensions was discharged from further consideration of the bill S. 4246, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion of Mr. GROUT was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the evening session the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. EVANS, will act as Speaker pro tempore.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House at 8 o'clock resumed its session and was called to order by Mr. EVANS as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the rule for this evening's session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

N. WARD CADY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 8098) to correct the military record of N. Ward Cady, late major, Second Mounted Rifles, New York Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge, with the following Senate amendment:

In line 4, strike out all after "to," down to and including "regiment," line 7, and insert "revoke, annul, and set aside the General Orders, No. 42, dated Headquarters Army of Potomac, October 23, 1864, approving the findings and sentence of the general court-martial before which N. Ward Cady, late major, Second Mounted Rifles, New York Volunteers, was tried, found guilty, and sentenced 'to be dismissed the service with loss of all pay due or to become due,' and to issue to said Cady an honorable discharge as of date October 26, 1864."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, as to each of the bills that have passed the House this evening, I move to reconsider the vote by which they were passed, and to lay the latter motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar, under the rule.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. MOODY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills upon the Private Calendar under the rule, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

THOMAS W. O'BRIEN.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2832) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas W. O'Brien.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas W. O'Brien, late a private in Battery C, Fifth United States Artillery, and that an honorable discharge be issued in lieu thereof, to date from July 29, 1865.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add to the end of the bill the following:
"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS CONNOLLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3230) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas Connolly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the charge of desertion standing against Thomas Connolly, private in Company G, Ninth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, be removed on the grounds that while absent from his command, under authority of his commanding officer, he was drowned while returning to camp before the expiration of limitation of time allowed, as was shown by coroner's inquest, after recovery of said soldier.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add to the end of the bill the following:
"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL F. NEWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1008) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Michael F. Newell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against Michael F. Newell, who enlisted and served under the name of John Nolan, as a private in Company C, Fortieth New Jersey Volunteers, and to grant to said Michael F. Newell, alias John Nolan, an honorable discharge.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the reading of the report in that case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1008) for the relief of Michael F. Newell, have carefully considered the same and beg leave to report as follows:

Michael F. Newell, when a boy of 15 or 16 years of age, enlisted in Company C, Fortieth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, some time in 1864, without the knowledge or consent of his parents. To avoid disclosing his identity, lest his parents might seek to reclaim him from the service, he enlisted under the name of John Nolan, and served under that name until the end of the war. He was a brave and faithful soldier, present in every battle and skirmish in which his regiment was engaged. He was present with his regiment constantly until, while on the march to Washington to take part in the grand parade, his ankle became swollen and lame and he was unable to keep up with his regiment and had to fall out of the ranks. He followed as best he could, but when he reached Washington he did not find his company. He was but a boy, 16 or 17 years of age, knew nothing of the form or necessity of being mustered out of service, but supposed his duties were ended and he had nothing to do except go home.

He had a brother in Pittsburgh, and finding a lot of soldiers who were on their way to that city, he joined them. He had no intention of deserting—the war was over, there was nothing to be gained and no motive for deserting. He had been a brave and faithful soldier, had never flinched in battle, and would not run away when the war was over. His failure to report and be mustered out was due simply to a boy's ignorance and thoughtlessness. He is an excellent citizen and a man of high character and entire credibility, as is testified to by Hon. Thomas A. Morrison, judge of the courts of the county in which Mr. Newell lives; by Senator Bannon, Mayor Dempsey, and others, who know him personally and whose letters were presented to the committee.

There having been no intention of default or wrongdoing on the part of Mr. Newell, it seems entirely unjust that his excellent military record should be marred by an unfounded charge of desertion.

Your committee therefore report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass with amendment by adding the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that desertion cases be passed over this evening, without losing their place on the Calendar, unless the member introducing the bill is present.

The motion was agreed to.

CORYDON WINKLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 987) to correct the military record of Corydon Winkler, late private Eighth Company, First Battalion, First Ohio Sharpshooters (introduced by Mr. SOUTHARD).

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records in the office of the War Department the charge of desertion now standing on said rolls and records against Corydon Winkler, late a private of the Eighth Company, First Battalion, Ohio Sharpshooters, and issue to him an honorable discharge, to date the 1st of May, 1864.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the act the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask some gentleman who knows the circumstances of this case to make an explanation. I think cases of desertion ought to be explained.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, I know this man perfectly. He enlisted in the Army, was mustered into the service on November 10, 1863, and went South and was detailed as chief sawyer in a steam mill in Bridgeport, Ala. He worked in the sawmill a considerable length of time as head sawyer, and while thus engaged met with an accident. His leg was crushed between two saw logs in such a way as to completely disable him. His leg now is as stiff as a board. He was taken to a house, and as soon as he was able to get about, his comrades assisting him, he worked his way North. For two or three years he was totally disabled.

Mr. LOVE. Why was he not discharged? If he was in the employment of the Government while in the sawmill, he ought to have been discharged.

Mr. SOUTHARD. There is no dispute about the circumstances. There is no discrepancy between the real and what you may call the extrinsic evidence. It is agreed on all hands that he came North without any intention of deserting, and nobody thinks that there was any intention on his part to desert. He could not have rendered any service after the accident if he had wanted to, nor could he have done so within two or three years afterwards. The reason he was not discharged, I suppose, was that he was isolated from the Army after the accident. He did not apply for a discharge, and nobody thought of it for him.

Mr. LOVE. What period was that?

Mr. SOUTHARD. It was in 1863, I think. The report is short, if the gentleman desires to hear it read. There is nothing in the case to intimate that the soldier ever intended to desert from the service.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CARL F. W. STOLLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1798) to remove the charge of desertion against Carl F. W. Stolle, of Iron Ridge, Wis.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the name of Carl F. W. Stolle, late of Company K of the Third Regiment of Cavalry of Wisconsin Volunteers, and correct the record so that it may show that said Carl F. W. Stolle was mustered out and honorably discharged at the date of the muster out of his company.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

Add at the end of the act the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report, unless the gentleman introducing the bill can explain it.

Mr. SAUERHERING. Mr. Chairman, this man enlisted January 24, 1863, for three years. In 1864 he reenlisted as a veteran volunteer. He was granted the customary furlough in May, 1864. Having received a letter from his wife that the house was destroyed by fire, he left the company, having an understanding with the captain that if he found it impossible for him to return he was to be permitted to have his son take his place. This is proven by the testimony of numerous witnesses, comrades of Mr. Stolle. It appears that he did not return to his regiment, but his son entered the service in his place under date of August 30, 1865.

Application was made to the medical director of the hospital in Arkansas for Carl Stolle, that being the son, for treatment. He was thereupon admitted to the hospital in Arkansas, had typhoid fever, and died September 18, 1864. It appears that the agreement that the son was to take his place was made between the soldier and the captain, but the captain, of course, was not authorized to accept the son in the place of the father. The boy was never placed on the rolls, but the records of the War Department show that he performed military duty and was admitted to the hospital, where he subsequently died. There was certainly no intention of the soldier to desert, and the son reported for duty and died in the service of his country.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, I spoke to Major Schroeling at one time about this case, and he related to me the circumstances. He stated that the party interested in this case, Mr. Stolle, was a faithful soldier, one of the best in his regiment; that he went home in the winter of 1864 because his buildings had burned down and his wife was very sick, and when he got home, it was concluded, in talking it over in the family, that it would be better for the boy to go back and take his father's place.

The boy had become old enough, and they thought it would be permissible, and so the father stayed at home and the boy went down to the regiment and reported that he had come to take his father's place. While it was irregular, he did take his place and served in the company and regiment until he died. So it was simply a matter of ignorance on the part of the people thinking the boy had a right to do it. He gave up his life for his country, and the father never went away with any intention of deserting. He went home to his farm and has been there ever since.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM D. KURFISS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8336) to correct the military record of William D. Kurfiss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to correct the record of William D. Kurfiss, private, Company F, First Ohio Cavalry, so as to show his honorable discharge from service on December 1, 1864.

Mr. LOVE. I do not like to occupy time on these questions, but where parties are charged with desertion I think some explanation ought to be made as to the reason for removing that charge or the report ought to be read.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The report, I believe, is a brief one. Perhaps it will be more satisfactory to have it read.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8336) to correct the military record of William D. Kurfiss, submit the following report:

William D. Kurfiss enlisted as a private in Company A, Seventeenth Ohio Infantry, on April 23, 1861, for three months, served honorably and was mustered out with his company on August 15, 1861, having served nearly a month over his term of enlistment. He again enlisted in September, 1861, as a private in Company F, First Ohio Cavalry, to serve three years.

Under this enlistment he served honorably three years and four months, and on January 4, 1864, he reenlisted for another term of three years in the same company and regiment. During his term of enlistment he took part with his company and regiment in nearly fifty battles and skirmishes, and proved himself a brave soldier, always ready for duty, and never shrinking from any demand made on him, as is testified by many commissioned and noncommissioned officers of his company and regiment.

His soldierly conduct, his readiness to join his comrades in every engagement, his cheerful service over the time of his first enlistment, as well as for four months over the time of his second enlistment, the latter being in the actual presence of and frequent conflict with the enemy, his reenlistment as a veteran, all serve to demonstrate that he was a good soldier, without the slightest inclination to desert his colors or shrink from any soldierly duty.

In December, 1864, his regiment was ordered from the front to the rear at Louisville, Ky., to be remounted, and he went with it. During the winter of 1864-65, while his regiment was awaiting its remount at Louisville, he learned of the serious illness of his father at his home in Fairfield County, Ohio, and he went to his home to see his sick father. His father lingered as a paralytic, and died in April, 1865—about the time the war closed—Kurfiss remaining with him openly and with no attempt at concealment.

When the war closed, he supposed there was no further actual need for him as a soldier, as was really the fact, so he did not return to his company. He served as a soldier altogether, under his first, second, and third enlistments, about three years and eight months, covering the entire period when his command was actually confronting the enemy, and only left when the war was practically ended, so far as his command was concerned, prompted alone by the very natural and pardonable desire to be with his father in his fatal illness.

It seems to be a very technical and very excusable case of desertion, and we therefore recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendment: Add after the word "sixty-four," in line 6, the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment appended to the report of the committee was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILHELM SPIEGELBURG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 129) to amend "An act for the correction of the military record of Wilhelm Spiegelburg," approved July 21, 1892.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the "act for the correction of the military record of Wilhelm Spiegelburg," approved July 21, 1892, be amended so as to read: "That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to revoke the order of discharge in Special Orders, Department of Virginia and North Carolina, dated October 26, 1864, of Wilhelm Spiegelburg, and to discharge him, to date May 1, 1865; and the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to adjust and pay the accounts of the said Spiegelburg for pay and allowance from November 23, 1864, to May 1, 1865, inclusive."

Mr. DOCKERY. Is there any amendment proposed by this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there is none.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that this bill raises a new question and is not in harmony with the practice of the House. It has never been our practice to grant arrears of pensions even when we passed private pension bills.

Mr. DAVIDSON of Wisconsin. This soldier enlisted as a second lieutenant and served about three years, when he asked for a discharge on account of the sickness of his wife and child. After his application had been sent in, and after the discharge was granted, but before he received notice of it, a battle occurred. He went into the battle and was wounded, in consequence of which he was in the hospital for three or four months. An act was passed heretofore for his relief, but the language was not explicit enough to enable the Treasury officials to pay him for the several months he was in hospital suffering from wounds received in battle after the date of his discharge. When his discharge came it bore date prior to the date of the battle in which he took part and was wounded. I hope the bill will be passed as it came from the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think this bill ought to pass. I do not mean to say that the charge of desertion ought not to be removed; but the House has never granted arrears of pensions in passing special pension bills.

Mr. DAVIDSON of Wisconsin. Let me explain. This is not a bill to remove a charge of desertion. I would like to have the report read.

Mr. DOCKERY. There is another question which might be raised—that the House to-night has no jurisdiction to consider this bill under the special order of business. I prefer not to raise that point; but I am frank to say that this bill seems to be a new departure.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, from which this bill was reported, that this is an exceptional case. I doubt very much whether the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], in all his service here, has found a case similar to this. This is a case where the officer tendered his resignation for the reason stated by my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIDSON]; but after his resignation had been tendered a battle came on, and, like a true, loyal, heroic man, he did not ask excuse from military service upon the ground that he had tendered his resignation (although such an excuse would probably have been accepted), but he went into battle when he might have remained out. During that battle he was wounded—was so disabled that he was placed by the military authorities in the hospital and taken care of by military authority.

In 1892 Congress passed a bill which undertook to pay him for the period which elapsed between the time when his resignation was accepted and the time when he was discharged by the military authorities from the hospital.

Mr. LOVE. What length of time?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I do not remember now. The report shows. But I say that for that time, whatever it was, long or short, the nation was under obligation to pay him, for it would be the sheerest injustice to say here to-night that a man who performed such service should not receive pay for the time he was actually in the military service, though his resignation had been accepted.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, I doubt whether the gentleman will find a similar case anywhere upon the records of this country.

Mr. LOVE. Is the pay for the period just named by the gentleman all that is asked in this bill?

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is all—that he shall receive pay for the time that he was sick and disabled and unable to get home—unable to get out of the hospital.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say to the gentleman that I misunderstood the reading of the bill. I thought it granted him pay from that time until the present.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Oh, no; the Military Committee are not doing that sort of thing.

Mr. DOCKERY. I knew that would be very unusual for my friend from Wisconsin to favor anything like that.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PATRICK HANLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1737) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against Patrick Hanley, late a private in Company H, Twenty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, and to issue to him an honorable discharge, to date December 10, 1862.

Mr. LOVE. Let the report be read, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1737) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The report made by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 503, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1737) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley, report:

A similar measure (H. R. 5706) passed the House of Representatives, and after favorable report by this committee passed the Senate during the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, but failed to become a law.

The committee now adopts their former report (No. 1546), which is hereto appended and made a part of this report, and again recommend the passage of the bill.

Said report is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the House bill 5706, have had the same under consideration and find the facts to be as stated in House Report No. 2470, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, which is made a part of this report, as follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5706) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley, having considered the same, would respectfully report such bill back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

"The facts upon which your committee rely for the clemency sought to be extended by this bill are briefly as follows: The soldier ran away from home and enlisted, without bounty, in Company H, Twenty-eighth Wisconsin, on the 30th day of August, 1862. He was then about 17 years old. He remained with his company in camp within his own State until December 19, 1862, when he obtained leave to visit his home, and while absent on such leave his regiment was ordered to the front, leaving the soldier behind. When he learned that the regiment had left he followed it to Chicago. When he arrived there the regiment had left. Not being able to learn of its whereabouts, he enlisted in the Mercantile Battery, but was rejected on account of physical defects.

On the 10th day of June, 1863, he again tendered his services to his country and was assigned to the Navy, where he served faithfully for the full term of his enlistment and was honorably discharged. Had he been accepted when he enlisted in the Mercantile Battery the soldier could have been relieved under the general law.

It is apparent the soldier never did intend to desert, and although he had to enter the service against the wishes of his parents, when he was fairly in the service and beyond the influence of his parents he served faithfully during his full term.

"The total bounty paid him for his entire enlistment was $25.

"The record of such soldier, Army and Navy, is hereto attached and made a part hereof."

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, Washington, D. C., May 7, 1896.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 6th instant to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, I have the honor to state that one Patrick Hanley enlisted in the Navy, at Chicago, Ill., June 15, 1863, as seaman for one year; served on board of the Covington, Fairy, and hospital Pinckney, and was discharged June 25, 1864.

Respectfully,

F. M. RAMSAY,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. S. A. COOK,
House of Representatives.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, April 17, 1896.

SIR: * * * It is shown by the records that Patrick Hanley was enrolled August 20, 1862, and was mustered into service October 14, 1862, in Company H, Twenty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry, to serve three years. He appears to have served faithfully to December 10, 1862, when he deserted. He never returned thereafter, although his company remained in service to August 31, 1865. No evidence has been found showing he was a minor at the date of his enlistment or was enlisted without the consent of his parents, or that he was released or discharged from such service by the order or decree of any court of competent jurisdiction on habeas corpus or other proper judicial proceedings.

It does not appear from the files of this office that an application for removal of the charge of desertion has been presented to this Department, and in the absence of testimony the status of the soldier can not be determined under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, the only law now in force governing the removal of the charge of desertion.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,

Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

Hon. S. A. COOK,
House of Representatives.

In addition to the foregoing House report, the committee gives an extract from a private letter, written by James Murray, of Fremont, Neb., to a Senator, who says he has implicit confidence in his statements. Mr. Murray was a captain in the Twenty-eighth Wisconsin, from which Hanley deserted. He says:

"I was one of the line officers in the Twenty-eighth Wisconsin. You were another. My company was H. Now to business. A man whose name is Patrick Hanley enlisted upon the occasion of the organization of the Twenty-eighth, from Merton or Lisbon, and chose Company H to go in; went into Camp Washburn with the rest of us; was mustered and drilled, and on the whole made a good soldier, no way disorderly, and was, I verily believe, never reprimanded by any of his superior officers. He went home; we marched the next day; he failed to get back in time; he followed us to Chicago; we were gone; he enlisted in a battery at that place, was rejected for physical disability of some kind. In a short time he enlisted in the Navy and served three years.

"Of course most of this has been told me, after we got home, by him. I know this, however, while we were in camp at Mobile, one of my men came to me one day and said: 'Patrick Hanley is down on board of a gunboat and expressed a desire to see us, but said that he was afraid I would have him arrested as a deserter, and that as he had seen about as much service as any of the Twenty-eighth, he would not like to be arrested.' As the war was about winding up I forebore sending for him. Well, of course, he was reported as a deserter and the muster-out rolls so reported him. It seems that he not long since found it out. He writes me that he is seeking to get the disgrace effaced on account of his children. I sympathize with the boy, particularly in that respect. Congressman Cook, of Wisconsin, is about to try and have a bill passed restoring him. Now, as you were in those days one of us, could you not, if you deem it consistent with right, etc., give the matter a helping hand? My recollection of the boy is quite vivid, and I found him a dutiful, orderly, and manly young man."

While Hanley might have persevered in his attempt to overtake the Twenty-eighth Wisconsin and thus have avoided the charge of desertion, we think that his conduct in seeking to enlist in the Mercantile Battery, and enlisting and serving a year in the Navy, shows that he was not endeavoring to avoid the service of his country, and the committee report the bill back with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. LOVE. Is the usual amendment attached to that bill, that no pay or emoluments shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOVE. Then I move that the usual amendment be added.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE WITTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10276) granting an increase of pension to George Witter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Witter, late private, First Battery Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read and agreed to:

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

REBECCA OTIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4173) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Otis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll as an army nurse Rebecca Otis, at the rate of $24 per month, and this shall be in lieu of the pension that she is now receiving.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out "as an army nurse" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the name of."

In line 5, after the word "Otis," insert the words, "late an army nurse, and pay her a pension."

In line 6 strike out the words "and this shall be."

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear the report read in that case. I do not know why this woman should get $24 a month.

Mr. RAY of New York. I can give the gentleman a statement that will save the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, this lady is now drawing a pension of $12 per month as the widow of a soldier. When the war broke out, her husband went into the service as a soldier. She went with him to the front and served as a nurse all during the war. While he was fighting she was nursing and caring for the soldiers. At the close of the war he came home wounded and disabled, and died as the result of wounds received in the service. She is pensioned as his widow, on account of his death from these wounds and disabilities. She has got along with that pension until now.

Mr. LOVE. How much does she get now?

Mr. RAY of New York. Twelve dollars a month. She has gotten along with that pension until now, when she is nearly 80 years of age. She has not a child or a relative to take care of her. She is old, very poor, and broken down, suffering with diseases that she contracted while a nurse and caring for sick and wounded soldiers. Your committee, therefore, because of her double claim upon the generosity and bounty of this Government and because of her age and her necessities, decided to increase her pension to $24 a month. She will draw it but a little time. We need to encourage such women as this, for our boys are marching and soon will need the care of faithful and devoted nurses. Let the people know that the Republic is not ungrateful.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES BURNETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10055) granting a pension to James Burnett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of James Burnett, dependent father of Thomas Burnett, late a private of Company B, Fifth Regiment of Tennessee Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 a month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES C. YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3938) granting an increase of pension to James C. Young.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll at the rate of $20 per month the name of James C. Young, late of Company C, Twenty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Pensions were read, and agreed to:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6 strike out the word "to."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN R. BEVAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3169) granting a pension to John R. Bevan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of John R. Bevan, stepfather of Edward L. Bowden, deceased, late private in Company G, First Maine Regiment Heavy Artillery Volunteers, at $12 a month.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5 strike out the word "deceased."

In line 7 strike out the word "at" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CORNELIA M. MASON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3111) granting a pension to Cornelia M. Mason.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cornelia M. Mason, widow of John S. Mason, late brevet brigadier-general, United States Army, at the rate of $30 per month.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, and agreed to.

In line 7, after the word "Army," insert the words "and pay her a pension."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY ELIZABETH HIESKELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2545) to pension Mary Elizabeth Hieskell, widow of the late Pay Director H. M. Hieskell, on the pension roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Mary Elizabeth Hieskell, widow of Horace M. Hieskell, late pay director, United States Navy, at the rate of $30 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6, after the word "Navy," insert "and pay her a pension."

In line 6 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

Strike out all after the word "month," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in lieu of the pension she is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary Elizabeth Hieskell."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PATRICK BREEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3110) granting a pension to Patrick Breen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Breen, late a member of Company A, Twenty-first New York Infantry, and Company G, First United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM J. MURRAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1334) granting a pension to William J. Murray.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William J. Murray, who served in the Department of the Gulf, in the telegraph department, in the year 1862, and in the Red River campaign in 1864, said pension to be at the rate of $12 per month.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read, and agreed to:

In line 9 strike out the words "said pension to be" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BARNEY SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2813) granting a pension to Barney Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Barney Smith, who served as a member of Company E of the Tenth Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELMER STICKLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1775) removing the charge of desertion against and correcting the military record of Elmer Stickle, late Company C, Fifteenth New Jersey Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against and to correct the military record of Elmer Stickle, late private, Company D, Fifteenth New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, were read:

At the end of line 7 add the words: "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill for the relief of Elmer Stickle."

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, as that is a desertion case, let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The report (by Mr. BROWNLOW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1775) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Elmer Stickle, and to grant him an honorable discharge, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to remove the charge of desertion standing against, and to correct the military record of, Elmer Stickle, of Binghamton, N. Y., and to grant him an honorable discharge, with the proviso that no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of the act.

It is shown by the records and evidence filed at the War Department that Elmer Stickle was enrolled August 11, 1862, at Newton, N. J., as a private in Company D, Fifteenth New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, to serve for three years.

He was with his company to May 3, 1863, when he was wounded in action at Fredericksburg, Va. In May and June, 1863, he was absent sick and was also reported and borne on the rolls as sick in hospital to February 29, 1864. The records state in March and April, 1864, "Deserted while absent sick in United States hospital." The medical records of the hospital do not show that the soldier deserted.

It is proved that the soldier was granted a furlough on account of wounds and sickness, and went home, and that the captain, who was an old neighbor and friend of his, told him to remain until he was able to return and perform duty. It is also proved by several reputable witnesses that at the time stated the soldier returned home, and that he was totally disabled from the effects of a gunshot wound, and that he remained at his home, disabled, until after the close of the war. The physician who treated him while at home died many years ago, but other witnesses testify to the fact that the soldier returned home and remained at home, where he was well known under his true name, in the sick and disabled condition described. Physicians of repute testify that, judging from the character of the soldier's wounds were serious and must have disabled him for years. Other evidence is filed showing the soldier's wounds, sickness, and disability, his inability to return to his regiment, and that he remained at and about his home constantly until after the close of the war.

It is undisputed that the soldier was wounded twice in battle and that he was sent to the hospital, and that he went from there to his home on account of his disabilities. He did not change his name, enlist in any other service, or conceal himself. He was not regarded at the hospital as a deserter, and this goes to show that he went home with leave and on account of his disabilities. If this soldier had been regarded as a deserter from the service, the Government would surely have made efforts to find him, punish him for his desertion, and return him to duty. The fact that no such effort was made and that the soldier remained where he could have been found any day is satisfactory evidence that he never was a deserter, but that he was known to be home on sick leave and was only marked as such on the company rolls through a mistake or inadvertence. It is probable that his furlough was not reported properly to the commanding officers of the company, or that there was some neglect somewhere in the matter.

The soldier has been a good citizen since the close of the war. An effort has been made to secure a removal of this charge at the War Department, but without avail, as the case is not strictly within the provisions of law applicable thereto. The record of the soldier was good up to the time he went home wounded from the hospital, and there is no pretense that he shirked in the face of the enemy.

Your committee is satisfied that the record of desertion was error; that the soldier never intended to desert and never did desert, and the bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass as amended.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ALMON SPRINGSTEEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2656) removing the charge of desertion standing against Almon Springsteen, late Company 5, One hundred and thirty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that since that bill has been reported the War Department itself, under the law has removed the charge of desertion. I therefore move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH D. PITTMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5746) for the relief of Elizabeth D. Pittman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth D. Pittman, dependent mother of William E. Potter, late of Company K, Nineteenth Illinois Infantry, at the rate of $20 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and pay her a pension."

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Strike out all after the word "month," in line 8.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Elizabeth D. Pittman."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Crafts on the pension roll as the surviving son of Moses Crafts, late of the Tenth Regiment Maine Infantry Volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after "place," insert "on the pension rolls."

In line 5 strike out "on the pension rolls as the surviving" and insert in lieu thereof the words "dependent and permanently helpless."

At the end of line 7 add the words "payable to his duly appointed guardian."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES HOWARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 851) granting a pension to Charles Howard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll Charles Howard, late a private, Company F, Thirty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $6 per month from the 1st day of July, 1865, to the 1st day of July, 1875; at the rate of $12 per month from the 1st day of July, 1875, to the 1st day of July, 1885; and at the rate of $30 per month from the 1st day of July, 1885.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "the name of."

In line 6, after the word "Infantry," insert "and pay him a pension."

Same line, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Strike out all of lines 7 to 13, inclusive.

Mr. LOVE. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this bill proposes to give back pay?

Mr. RAY of New York. No, not at all. We strike that part of it out, and simply give him $12 a month from the time the bill becomes law.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

In line 3, before "directed," insert "authorized and."

Line 4, commencing with "who," strike out all down to the end of line 7 and insert in lieu thereof "late an army nurse."

In line 8 strike out the word "to."

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just one word in reference to this case, inasmuch as I may not be present at the time it is considered in the House, unless it should be considered to-night. I desire to state for the information of the House that I am personally acquainted with the woman. She is a colored woman and resides in New Albany, in my district, and has ever resided there. She went into the field hospital with the Twenty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry as a nurse in 1862 and remained until the close of the war. In order that the facts may be known more in detail by the House, I have a letter written by a member of the regiment who was acquainted with her during the whole of the service, which I will read. It is as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., May 26, 1893.

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: Yours of the 20th to hand, and would have answered before this, but had to look up some of the Twenty-third boys for points in Aunt Lucy's case. She came to our regiment about the middle of September, 1862, at Bolivar, Tenn. I left the regiment several months later, consequently could not tell much of her history from personal knowledge.

All the members of the Twenty-third tell about the same story in regard to her service. She joined us the 15th or 16th of September, 1862, at Bolivar, Tenn. She was assigned to duty in the regimental hospital as nurse and cook; she also attended to the hospital washing.

The regiment was in the following engagements: Raymond, Miss., Champion Hill, Miss., Vicksburg, Miss., and Fort Gibson, Miss. After the fall of Vicksburg the regiment came home on veterans' furlough, she was with them, and when they returned as veterans she went back also, and marched with them in Sherman's march to the sea. In all of the different engagements during that famous march Aunt Lucy stuck to the regimental hospital, always ready to help any of the boys that were sick or wounded. Dr. Brooker and Dr. Burns were in charge of the hospital. They are both dead, but Dr. McPheeters came to the regiment later. He still lives in Washington County, and can give you any information you want in regard to her faithful service.

She came back with the regiment in 1865, and was mustered out at Indianapolis and has lived here ever since. She is a member of the Twenty-third Indiana Regimental Association, and attends every reunion and meeting we have.

Yours, respectfully,

W. T. ZENOR, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

THOS. P. MOORE.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID R. B. HARLAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9224) increasing the pension of David R. B. Harlan.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of David R. B. Harlan, late a captain of Company M, Ninth Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act in lieu of the pension he is now receiving under certificate No. 907961.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Line 7, strike out "five."

From lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "from and after the passage of this act."

Strike out all after the word "receiving," in line 9.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS B. HAMMOND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6076) to increase the pension of Thomas B. Hammond.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Thomas B. Hammond, Company H, Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, said pension to be in lieu of that which he now receives.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Line 4, after "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Line 5, after "Hammond," insert "late of."

Same line, strike out "Thirty-ninth" and insert in lieu thereof "Twenty-ninth."

Line 6, strike out the word "to," and after "pension" insert "at the rate."

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, said pension to be."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY E. WALKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9732) to enforce act of July 14, 1892.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of July 14, 1892, relating to intermediate pensions, shall be construed to be applicable to the case of Mary E. Walker, M. D., acting assistant surgeon in the war of 1861 to 1865.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Pensions shall be, and now is, authorized and directed to place the name of the said Mary E. Walker, M. D., on the pension roll, in accordance with section 1.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mary E. Walker, late an acting assistant or contract surgeon in the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Walker."

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the report in this case be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. MIERS of Indiana) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9732) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Walker, have carefully examined the same and all the evidence relating thereto, and respectfully report:

The bill as amended proposes to increase from $3.50 to $30 per month the pension of Mary E. Walker, of the city of Washington, who served as acting assistant or contract surgeon, United States Army, from March 11, 1864, to June 12, 1865, when her service was honorably terminated. Her original appointment was by order of Major-General Thomas, and she appears to have been paid $30 per month. In September, 1864, on the recommendation of General Thomas, she was employed under contract at $100 per month and assigned to the female prison at Louisville, Ky., where she was on duty until May 25, 1865. She was given a medal of honor by Congress and was highly commended by Edw. E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., medical director at Louisville. The following is a copy of an Executive order in her case:

"EXECUTIVE OFFICE.

"Whereas it appears from official reports that Dr. Mary E. Walker, a graduate of medicine, has rendered valuable service to the Government, and her efforts have been earnest and untiring in a variety of ways, and that she was assigned to duty and served as an assistant surgeon in charge of female prisoners at Louisville, Ky., upon the recommendation of Major-Generals Sherman and Thomas, and faithfully served as contract surgeon in the service of the United States, and has devoted herself with much patriotic zeal to the sick and wounded soldiers, both in the field and hospitals, to the detriment of her own health, and has also endured hardships as a prisoner of war four months in a Southern prison while acting as contract surgeon; and

"Whereas by reason of her not being a commissioned officer in the military service, a brevet or honorary rank can not, under existing laws, be conferred upon her; and

"Whereas in the opinion of the President an honorable recognition of her services and sufferings should be made:

"It is ordered, That a testimonial thereof shall be hereby made and given to the said Dr. Mary E. Walker, and that the usual medal of honor for meritorious services be given her."

"Given under my hand in the city of Washington, D. C., this 11th day of November, A. D. 1865.

"ANDREW JOHNSON, President.

"By the President:

"EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War."

Claimant appears to have served as an acting assistant surgeon for fifteen months, and to have been a prisoner of war for four months, and as would be natural her general health and constitution were greatly injured by the strain of confinement and exposure.

Dr. E. E. Phelps, medical director at Louisville, Ky., testifies to her having suffered from debility and prostration while under his charge at the female military prison at Louisville, and other evidence tends to show that by the hardships and exposure of the military service her general health was greatly impaired and has so continued ever since, and also that she contracted disease of eyes from which she has continuously suffered ever since.

She filed and established a claim in the Pension Office under the general law for disease of eyes, and for that disability she has been pensioned at $3.50 per month (one-half total of rank as assistant surgeon). She has claimed that other disabilities, to wit, affection of lungs and impairment of digestive organs, have resulted from her disease of eyes, but this has not been accepted by the medical authorities of the Pension Office, and the claim based thereon was rejected. She appealed the claim to the Secretary of the Interior, and the rejection was sustained.

She appealed for reconsideration, and that appeal was overruled. The action of the Pension Office and the Department appears to have been strictly correct. The disabilities named are not shown to have been due to disease of eyes or in any way connected therewith, but the general debilitated condition does appear to have been due to service and to have existed to a greater or less degree ever since, and by reason of such debilitated condition, together with disease of eyes, Dr. Walker would appear to be totally disabled for manual labor.

Had she served simply as a nurse for the length of time that she served in the higher capacity of assistant surgeon, she would, under the act of August 5, 1892, be entitled to a pension of $12 per month. Her services were much more valuable and meritorious, involving much more hardship and exposure, and resulted in greatly injuring her general health. For these services she was commended by the officers under whom she served, by the President, and by the Congress.

She is now 66 years of age and poor, and it certainly is not improper for Congress to make some provision for her support for the remainder of her life.

The bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mary E. Walker, late an acting assistant or contract surgeon in the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she now receives."

Amend the title so it will read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Walker."

Mr. LOVE. What is the nature of this case?

Mr. RAY of New York. This is a bill increasing the pension of Dr. Mary E. Walker from $7.50 a month to $30 a month. Judge MIERS of Indiana, a member of our committee who belongs to the gentleman's side of the House, made the report in this case, and he was very much impressed with the idea that the bill ought to be reported at $30 a month. He pressed that proposition very strongly before the committee.

Whatever prejudice there may be in the mind of any gentleman here, or of any citizen of the United States, growing out of the peculiar costume that this lady wears, when the younger members of this House familiarize themselves with the events of the civil war, and then read the record of this woman—inform themselves as to her valuable services (running through months and years) in that war—what she did for our soldiers in the camp and field, when they know of the commendations and thanks she received from the President of the United States, as well as from generals, colonels, and captains, and all who were associated with her and know her services—when you remember in connection with all this that she is now 69 years of age and poor, no one will oppose this bill.

Mr. LOVE. Is this a proposition to pension her on account of services as a nurse during the war?

Mr. RAY of New York. On account of services both as nurse and surgeon. She was a skilled surgeon, had graduated from a medical college, and was duly admitted to practice. She was a specialist as a surgeon.

Mr. LOVE. I have no prejudice against her at all.

Mr. RAY of New York. She is now 69 years of age and poor. She needs this pension. This is as deserving a case as was ever presented to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LOVE. What amount of pension is it proposed to pay her?

Mr. RAY of New York. Twenty dollars a month, being an increase from $7.50 a month which she is now receiving.

Mr. LOVE. I notice that most of these ladies pensioned on account of their services as nurses have been allowed only $12 a month.

Mr. RAY of New York. Not such ladies as this one.

Mr. LOVE. Ladies who served as nurses in the hospitals during the war. I should like to know why a larger pension is granted in this case.

Mr. RAY of New York. If Dr. Mary E. Walker had been nothing more than a nurse, we would not have increased her pension beyond $12 unless under exceptional circumstances. But Dr. Walker was not only a nurse, but a skilled surgeon; she went upon the field of battle; she went into the hospitals; she was there night and day. Such was the value of her services that she received, I believe, the thanks of Congress—certainly of the President of the United States. Something of what the then President said of her is printed in the report.

Mr. LOVE. Is she now practicing as a doctor or surgeon?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no; she can not practice now; she is beyond that. She has supported herself until the present time; but she is now failing. It is but proper and just that we give her enough to insure her a reasonable support during the remainder of her days; not in luxury, but in a reasonable manner. We will insure her against want.

The question being taken on the amendments reported by the committee, they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARGERETT FERRITER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4269) granting a pension to Margerett Ferriter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margerett Ferriter, widow of Patrick Ferriter, late private of Company F, Twenty-fourth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

EDWARD R. YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4298) granting an increase of pension to Edward R. Young.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward R. Young, late private in Company H, First United States Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension of $20 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read, and agreed to:

In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN N. LANDON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1861) granting an increase of pension to John N. Landon, of Leavenworth, Kans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John N. Landon, late private in Company K, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Company H, One hundred and thirty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, said pension to be at the rate of $16, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, and agreed to:

In lines 8 and 9, after the word "Infantry," in line 8, strike out the words "said pension to be" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension."

In line 9, after the word "dollars," insert the words "per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to John N. Landon."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY E. KLINE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3606) granting a pension to Mary E. Kline.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll of the United States the name of Mary E. Kline, helpless and dependent child of John Kline, late captain Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read, and agreed to:

In line 3, after the word "hereby," insert "authorized and."

In line 4 strike out the words "of the United States."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EDWIN HIGGINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 873) to remove the charge of desertion against Edwin Higgins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the rolls of the Army the charge of desertion now standing against the name of Edwin Higgins, late private of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The following amendment recommended by the committee was read:

Add the following proviso:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. LOVE. Is the author of this bill present, Mr. Chairman? The CHAIRMAN. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. HAMILTON. I am familiar with the case.

Mr. LOVE. Will the gentleman explain it?

Mr. HAMILTON. The report furnishes a better statement of the case than I can give.

Mr. LOVE. I have not the report here. I see it is a case of desertion.

Mr. HAMILTON. Perhaps the Clerk had better read the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Michigan.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 873) to remove the charge of desertion against Edwin Higgins, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass with the following amendment:

Add the following proviso:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The Senate report is hereby adopted.

[Senate Report No. 515, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill 873 respectfully report:

In this case it appears that Edwin Higgins enlisted in Company H, Eleventh Michigan Infantry Volunteers, on the 24th day of August, 1861, and was made company bugler, and was within a short time promoted to be a principal musician and chief bugler of the regiment, and that he served as such principal musician until about the 5th of January, 1863, when, by a general order requiring the discharge of all principal musicians who had enlisted as such, and the reduction to the ranks of all who had been promoted to that position, he was reduced to private in Company H, Eleventh Michigan Infantry.

About January 10, 1863, he was ordered to hospital, and there being no room at Murfreesboro, where the company was then stationed, he was allowed to go to Nashville, where shortly afterwards he was placed in convalescent camp, and being informed by one of the officers that his "descriptive list" as principal musician was equivalent to a discharge, and being in a very feeble condition, he took advantage of an opportunity to go home and did so. Edwin E. Pierce and Sarah Pierce testify that they were acquainted with Edwin Higgins during the years 1863 and 1864, and that during that time he suffered greatly from piles, dysentery, etc., and was utterly unable to perform the duties of a soldier. There is no record of his discharge in the War Department, though the records in the office of the adjutant-general of the State of Michigan show that the company return for June, 1863, reports him "Discharged at Nashville, Tenn."

Your committee are clearly of the opinion that this soldier had no intention of deserting; that he supposed himself to have been discharged, and went home under that belief, being incapable, in his enfeebled condition, of performing service as a soldier; and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES R. PRADT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10159) to grant an increase of pension to Charles R. Pradt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Charles R. Pradt, formerly a private in Company H, Fourteenth Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, at the rate of $72 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by him.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, since this bill was reported, Charles R. Pradt has died. I therefore move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is about time for the committee to rise.

Mr. BROMWELL. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. RAY of New York. What I was about to say was this: There are two or three gentlemen here whose bills would not be reached to-night; for instance, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY]. The first bill that he has had reported here is on this Calendar, and we shall not reach it for some little time. I should like to see his bill go through. Here is my friend on the left [Mr. McCLEARY], who has a bill which he is very anxious to get up. There are two or three of that kind. What I was going to ask was that these gentlemen have their bills brought up and considered out of their order. It is a matter of favor, and it seems to me only just.

Mr. LOVE. Are any of these desertion cases?

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] has such a bill, which he will explain. It is a very just bill.

Mr. COWHERD. Let the bills be brought up in the order in which they are on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the Chair to understand that as a general request for all members present?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; but I will ask it as we come to these special bills.

Mr. BROMWELL. I was going to suggest to the chairman that we run along through the Calendar, and if the member interested in a bill is not present, that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Then we go through the Calendar in the regular way until we strike a bill in which a member is interested who is present. That, it seems to me, is fairer than to take up bills which are far down the Calendar, thereby preventing the consideration of bills introduced by gentlemen who have been here at every session and whose bills are about to be reached.

Mr. RAY of New York. I was going to suggest that we can go on in that way, and then if the previous question is considered as ordered on all these bills, I can bring them up at any time. I am willing to go on in that way and take that course.

Mr. LOVE. Let those members who are present have the preference.

ABRAHAM T. CASEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1807) granting an increase of pension to Abraham T. Casey, of Larned, Kans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abraham T. Casey, late of Company H, First Regiment Illinois Cavalry, at $20 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read, and agreed to:

In line 7 strike out the word "at" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Abraham T. Casey."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY PAUL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7280) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Paul.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Mary Paul, dependent mother of John Paul, late a private in Company C, Forty-fifth Regiment of Illinois Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read, and agreed to:

In line 5 strike out "Mrs."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Mary Paul."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

AUGUSTA TROLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9632) granting a pension to Augusta Troland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Augusta Troland, widow of Ferdinand Volkman, late private in Company C, Sixth Connecticut Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $8 per month.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read:

In line 8 strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to understand the reason for the action of the committee in this case. It seems that the bill only asked for $8 a month as originally introduced, and the committee have made it $12. I should like to ask why the committee recommended this increase?

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman who introduced the bill did not understand that it was a case in which, if the claimant was entitled to any pension at all, she was entitled to $12. The author of the bill is a gentleman who is very modest and just minded—the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL]. You all know him. It was a very clear case, and we have simply given the applicant the amount to which she is justly entitled.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE L. PLUMMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3261) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George L. Plummer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against the military record of George L. Plummer, late of Company M, First Maine Cavalry Volunteers, and grant to said George L. Plummer an honorable discharge.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs was read:

Add after the word "discharge" in the last line of the bill, the following: "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, George L. Plummer enlisted as a minor in the First Maine Cavalry. His father came and took him away. On the way home he told his father that at the first opportunity he would go into the Army again. When that opportunity came, he reentered the same regiment and the same company, but in order to hide his identity from his father he took the name of George Rogers.

There are affidavits with the committee establishing the identity of George Rogers as George Plummer. Under the name of George Rogers he served for three years, until the close of the war, receiving an honorable discharge. His taking away in the first place was not his fault. The record of desertion against him is an unjust one, and the bill is for the purpose of correcting that injustice.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID W. PENNYWITT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 726) to increase the pension of David W. Pennywitt, of Manchester, Ohio.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of David W. Pennywitt, late of Company I, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, from $12 per month to $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "increase the pension" and insert in lieu thereof the words "place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name."

In line 6 strike out "from $12 per month to thirty."

At the end of line 7 add the following: "in lieu of the pension he now receives."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ALVAH A. EATON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1363) granting an increase of pension to Alvah A. Eaton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alvah A. Eaton, late of Company A, Twenty-eighth New York Infantry Volunteers, and grant him a pension at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "grant" and in insert in lieu thereof the word "pay."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY L. COOK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7971) granting a pension to Mary L. Cook.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Mary L. Cook, widow of Thomas M. Cook, a major and surgeon of the One hundred and first Regiment of Ohio Infantry Volunteers in the war of 1861 to 1865, in the military service of the United States, at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "of the United States."
Line 7, strike out the words "a major and."
Strike out all after "Volunteers," in line 8, and insert the following: "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SUSAN A. GUMMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2700) granting an increased pension to Susan A. Gummer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan A. Gummer, widow of John Gummer, late first lieutenant Company E, Thirty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and that he pay her a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of all other pension.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "of thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "at the rate of twenty-four."

In line 9 strike out "all other pension" and insert in lieu thereof "the pension she now receives."

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. SARAH E. WARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7595) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah E. Ward.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to place the name of Sarah E. Ward, formerly widow of William H. Wilson, late acting surgeon, United States Volunteers, upon the pension roll of the United States at the rate of $17 per month, and to pay the same to her during her present widowhood.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 3, after the word "is," insert "authorized and."

From lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "acting surgeon, United States Volunteers," and insert in lieu thereof "sergeant, Company I, Eighty-second New York Volunteer Infantry."

In line 6 strike out the words "of the United States" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and pay her a pension."

In line 7 strike out the word "seventeen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Strike out all after the word "month," in line 7.

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CATHARINE McCARTY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2829) for the relief of Catharine McCarty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Catharine McCarty, widow of John McCarty, late a private in Company B, First Regiment of Cavalry, Missouri State Militia Volunteers, subject to the limitations of the pension laws.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Strike out all after "volunteers," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN H. BOYD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9466) to pension John H. Boyd.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll the name of John H. Boyd, of Baker City, Oreg., late a member of Company C, Eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "Boyd," strike out "of Baker City, Oreg."

In line 7 insert "at the rate."

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert "thirty."

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FANNIE KAUTZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2117) granting a pension to Fannie Kautz, widow of August V. Kautz, late brigadier-general, United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie Kautz, widow of August V. Kautz, deceased, late a brigadier-general, retired, United States Army, at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Line 7, after "Army," insert "and pay her a pension."

The amendment were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGIE SMILEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10316) for the relief of Georgie Smiley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Georgie Smiley on the pension roll as the dependent daughter of George A. Smiley, deceased, late a private in Company I, Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 5, after "dependent," insert "imbecile."

At the end of line 5 add "same to be paid to her legal guardian when appointed."

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MONSON W. BLISS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5920) for the relief of Monson W. Bliss.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 4, after the word "Bliss," insert the word "late."

Line 6, strike out the word "invalid."

Same line, strike out the words "of the United States" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension."

Same line, strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "twenty-four" in lieu thereof.

Strike out all after the word "month," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY O. BRIGGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2867) granting an increase of pension to Henry O. Briggs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $45 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry O. Briggs, late private of Company L, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, the pension hereby granted to be in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "at the rate of $45 per month."

In line 8 strike out the words "the pension hereby granted to be" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MISS MAGGIE MORRIS.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen present who have had a bill reported and not considered and have deserving cases should have them now taken up. I ask unanimous consent that we take up the bill of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY], the bill H. R. 4668.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

Mr. RIDGELY. That will be without prejudice to bills passed over?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4668) to pension Miss Maggie Morris.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Miss Maggie Morris, of Girard, Ohio, daughter of Thomas Morris, late a veteran volunteer soldier of Company G, Sixth Regiment Ohio Cavalry, at the rate of $12 per month during her life, said Maggie Morris being weak minded and helpless.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 6 strike out "Miss." Also strike out "of Girard, Ohio," and insert in lieu thereof "dependent and helpless."
From line 7 strike out "a veteran volunteer soldier."
In line 8, after the word "Cavalry," insert "and pay her a pension."
Strike out all after "month," in line 9.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN C. KNAPP.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 8952) granting an increase of pension to John C. Knapp, of Company K, Eighty-fifth Regiment of New York Volunteers. This is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MAXWELL], who has been very faithful in his attendance here at these evening sessions. It is a deserving case, and I trust there will be no objection.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8952) granting an increase of pension to John C. Knapp, of Company K, Eighty-fifth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of John C. Knapp, private in Company K, Eighty-fifth Regiment of New York Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "of fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of twenty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL S. PATTERSON.

Mr. SHOWALTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5798) granting an increase of pension to Samuel S. Patterson, late of Battery C, First West Virginia Artillery, and a veteran of the Mexican war.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Samuel S. Patterson, of Butler, Pa., late a member of Battery C, First West Virginia Light Artillery, war of the rebellion, and also a member of Company D, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension of $72 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 5, strike out "of Butler, Pa."

Lines 6 and 7, strike out "war of the rebellion."

Line 9, strike out "of seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of twenty."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH A. HALTER.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 2026) to pension Sarah A. Halter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Halter, widow of the late B. E. Halter, for services rendered by the said B. E. Halter in the Navy of the United States during the rebellion, and that said Sarah A. Halter be allowed a pension of $30 per month.

The Clerk read the amendments recommended by the committee, as follows:

In line 4, after "B. E. Halter," insert "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Strike out all after "rebellion," in line 8.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Sarah A. Halter."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bills favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. EVANS, Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that the committee had had under consideration bills of the following titles, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that they lie on the table:

A bill (H. R. 2656) removing the charge of desertion standing against Almon Springsteen, late Company F, One hundred and thirty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. 10159) to grant an increase of pension to Charles R. Pradt.

That the committee had also had under consideration bills of the following titles, which the committee had directed him to report without amendment, with the recommendation that they do pass:

H. R. 10055. An act granting a pension to James Burnett;

H. R. 6427. An act for the relief of Clarissa A. Dunham;

H. R. 10080. An act granting a pension to Frances E. Utley Davis;

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on each of the bills reported by the Committee of the Whole to the House the previous question be considered as ordered upon the amendments and final passage of the bills.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 having arrived, under the rule the House stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army asking for the continuance during another year of the appropriation for the purchase of land for a target range at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissary-General of Subsistence, together with the draft of a bill to increase the efficiency of the Subsistence Department of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4759) to authorize the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company to straighten and restore the channel of the South Canadian River, in the Indian Territory, at the crossing of said railroad, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1588); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3277) to authorize the appointment of a military storekeeper in the Army, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1589); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10693) directing the enlistment of cooks in the Regular and Volunteer armies of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1590); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4750) granting right of way through the Pikes Peak timber-land reserve and the public lands to the Cripple Creek District Railway Company, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1592); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. FENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5188) for the relief of Mrs. A. C. Wagner, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1591); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10601) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Tilton; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 10742) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the judicial district of Kansas—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A joint resolution (H. Res. 283) tendering the thanks of Congress to Assistant Naval Constructor Richmond Pearson Hobson and to the volunteer crew of the Merrimac, and authorizing the transfer of Assistant Naval Constructor Hobson from the Construction Corps to the line of the United States Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

Also, a bill (H. R. 10741) granting a pension to Mrs. Rebecca J. Jones—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPRON: Petition of the Young People's Christian Union of Pawtucket, R. I., in favor of the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: Papers of Col. J. P. Megrew, to accompany House bill No. 9703, for the removal of disabilities in the case of Jacob Lamont, late private, Sixteenth Indiana Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Affidavit of Mary Ann Snyder, late nurse in medical department of United States Volunteers, for pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of Hedding Methodist Episcopal Church, Barre, Vt., Rev. W. R. Davenport, pastor, in favor of the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of Mrs. J. R. George and 30 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Barre, Vt., asking for the passage of the bill to raise the age of protection for girls to 18 years in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of T. J. Cochran and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Groton, Vt., to forbid the transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of T. J. Cochran and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Groton, and Hedding Methodist Episcopal Church, of Barre, Vt., Rev. W. R. Davenport, pastor, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KING: Petition of attorneys and citizens of the State of Utah, in support of Senate bill providing for another judicial circuit court of the United States, to be known as the "Tenth circuit," and to have jurisdiction in Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letter of James Glendinning, of Salt Lake City, in support of the claim of Frank Harigan, for extra compensation under the contract for sewer connecting Fort Douglas with Salt Lake City, Utah—to the Committee on Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 18, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

INSIGNIA OF RED CROSS.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1913) to protect the insignia and name of the Red Cross.

The bill, with the amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary, was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BAILEY. I shall have to examine this bill before I can consent to its consideration. I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9866. An act for the relief of Anna Merkel;
H. R. 5879. An act to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 3, 1887, 24 Statutes at Large, chapter 859; and
H. R. 3071. An act for the relief of James A. Stoddard.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] is recognized to bring up the conference report which was under consideration at the adjournment yesterday.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I believe the pending question is upon a motion by myself to concur in Senate amendment No. 79.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. GROUT. How much time does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] want?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Only a little.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman such time as he may desire.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no objection to the construction of the bridge referred to in this amendment. I discover by reference to the RECORD of February 1 that there was considerable objection to another bridge—the Massachusetts avenue bridge.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this part of the conference report?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This is not the bridge which the gentleman fought when this bill was up before. This bridge, called the Connecticut avenue bridge, leading over Rock Creek, is, I believe, considered by the citizens of Washington of all classes a necessity. It is recommended and approved by the District Commissioners.

The Government has spent $50,000 on this side of the creek in the purchase of land to bring the avenue up to the creek; and on the other side of the creek there has not only been a donation of the quantity of land necessary to extend the roadway to the bridge, but the avenues themselves on that side have been donated to the city. There are 5 miles of avenues laid out and completed on that side.

I hope members of the House will not confuse this with the Massachusetts avenue bridge. I am speaking of the Connecticut avenue bridge.

Mr. BALL. Is this the same bridge in which it was stated some school on the other side of the creek was interested?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir; it is the Massachusetts avenue bridge in which the Methodist University was stated to be interested. On these avenues extending 5 miles on the western side of the creek there are 250 to 350 residences already. Parks as well as avenues have been laid out and dedicated. The people who own those residences and other property on that side of the creek are paying their share of taxes into the city treasury. They have never received any benefit by an expenditure of taxes in that section, the revenues of the city being expended in paving streets and other expenses within the city limits.

In view of the fact that this bridge is recommended by the District Commissioners, that the Government has already expended $50,000 up to the creek on this side, that the people on the other side have made such large donations on that side, I think it only right that this bridge should be built. The project has been twice approved by the Senate, and the only reason it was not embraced in the appropriation bill before it left the House was the fact that the report on the subject did not reach our committee in time to be put in the bill.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the gentleman to take the position that the city or the Government ought to bridge Rock Creek at every place where an avenue will cross it?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir. I hope the gentleman does not understand any such thing. I am making no such statement or claim.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, we would like to hear this discussion.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be understood as saying that we ought to build a bridge at every place on Rock Creek where one may be surveyed or requested. That is not my point. I am confining my remarks exclusively to the Connecticut avenue bridge. This improvement is embraced in Senate amendment No. 79, in which I have moved that the House concur.

For the benefit of gentlemen on the other side who, on account of conversation among members, did not hear the statement just made, I will repeat that this bridge ought to be built for these reasons: First, it has been recommended by the District Commissioners and approved by the taxpayers of this city; it has been universally indorsed by the newspapers—the Post and the Star, and I believe by everyone who has paid any attention to the question. In the second place, the Government has already spent $50,000 in the purchase of land extending up to the creek on this side, and the citizens on the other side have dedicated a large area of land to facilitate the opening of the bridge. In the next place, there are 5 miles of avenues laid out and dedicated to the city on the other side, and on these avenues the people are building residences and improving the property rapidly. These people on the outside are entitled to consideration.

Mr. MAHANY. May I ask the gentleman a question right here?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. MAHANY. I am not sure that I am so much opposed to the Connecticut avenue extension. I realize the fact that there is a denser population at that point than there is at the Massachusetts avenue proposed extension. If the gentleman is speaking for the Connecticut avenue extension—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Exclusively.

Mr. MAHANY. That is what I want to make clear.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is my motion. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, and I undertake to say without fear of successful contradiction, that the only way to enlarge this city is on the outside. There is no room on the inside. We have got to cross the creek. We have got to go in other directions, and this city will grow. It ought to grow, and we are proud of the fact that it does grow, and is becoming more beautiful as a city for residence purposes every day.

Mr. SIMPSON. Can the gentleman inform us what this bridge is to cost?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes; it is all given in the report here.

Mr. MAHANY. Two hundred thousand dollars, if not more.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If one plan is accepted, it is to be $200,000. If that is considered too expensive, the Commissioners say, then, the Morrison plan is to be accepted.

Mr. SIMPSON. And the taxpayers of the District pay half of that, the taxpayers of the United States pay the other half.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is right.

Mr. MAHANY. Are you sure that the taxpayers of the District of Columbia desire either of these improvements?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I know that they desire this one of which I am speaking.

Mr. MAHANY. How do you know it?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I know it, as I said to the gentleman a moment ago, by mixing with the people, in the first place.

Mr. MAHANY. The gentleman has had personal interviews with the population?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman will not be too impatient, I will give him all the information he wants. In the first place, I know it because the Commissioners who rule over and control this District as agents of this Congress approved of it and have ordered it.

Mr. MAHANY. They are, of course, always in touch with the people.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I know it for another reason, that the taxpayers of this city have without a murmur submitted to an expense of $50,000 for the purpose of acquiring the necessary land on this side. There has been no complaint of that.

Mr. MAHANY. They have very few opportunities to make their "murmurs" heard.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, I want to ask the gentleman a question: Do you know that they do not want it?

Mr. MAHANY. Well, I know that the people of the United States do not want improvements in an uninhabited region of the District of Columbia, when appropriations for great improvements of general utility are denied.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is dodging the question.

Mr. MAHANY. No, it is not dodging the question.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have not asked for any appropriation for any improvement in an uninhabited portion of the District.

Mr. MAHANY. One side of this is practically uninhabited.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is not. Mr. Speaker, as there is no objection to this amendment, I hope it will be concurred in. We can then pass to the other and let each amendment stand upon its own merits.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have just been advised that quite an amount of land is to be condemned or secured on this side of the bridge before the bridge can be constructed. I have sent for the information, and will have it here in a minute.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The land is all condemned.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have been told—I do not know whether the information is correct or not, but I will ascertain in a moment—that it will require $280,000 to pay for the land to be condemned, or that has been condemned, or to be purchased or that has been purchased, on this side of the bridge.

Mr. SIMPSON. And that is besides the cost of the bridge.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make that statement tentatively.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You will have plenty of time to look into the matter.

Mr. SIMPSON. That would make the total cost over $400,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is alleged that $280,000 will be required to purchase land on this side of the bridge. Now, I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. MAHANY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he thinks these improvements are matters of urgent and pressing necessity?

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, the gentleman might suspect that I was not in favor of this proposition, and if he has any doubt I will say that I am not in favor of this proposition. I now call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to an amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] to the general deficiency in these terms:

That the sum of $280,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the payment of the awards, under condemnation, for land taken for the extension of Connecticut avenue from Florida avenue to Waterside drive, to be charged wholly to the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The gentleman is doubtless familiar with that, and he can explain to the House what there is in that proposition.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I hope the gentleman does not intend to bring anything else into this discussion, something which does not yet exist and may never exist. I know nothing about what the Senator from Michigan intends to do at the other end of the Capitol, and I do not think the gentleman from Missouri knows.

Mr. DOCKERY. My information is that the land must be condemned and paid for out of the treasury of the District.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I know that $50,000 has actually been paid for the land. That is my information.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much is yet due?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not suppose there was anything due. That seems to be for the purpose of connecting Connecticut avenue with Florida avenue or some other place. I confess I do not understand that proposition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I can explain the matter.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada ten minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. With the permission of the gentleman from Nevada, I will answer the gentleman from Missouri. I have obtained the necessary information. There is a street there now condemned and paid for. The proposition made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], which the gentleman from Missouri read here, is for the purpose of enlarging and widening the street, a proposition which may never pass and which perhaps ought not to pass. I am not discussing that proposition, however. That does not militate against the fact that the street is already there, the land condemned and paid for.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, the facts regarding Connecticut avenue are these: Connecticut avenue is one of the radial avenues, as you all know, of the District of Columbia. It originally extended from near the White House out to Florida avenue, a distance of about a mile and a half. From that point to Rock Creek is a distance of about three-quarters of a mile. The distance beyond Rock Creek and the District line is about 4 miles. Property owners in the region beyond Rock Creek had this avenue surveyed for a width of 185 feet and conveyed for a distance of 4 miles to the District of Columbia, themselves making the necessary purchases in some cases in order to open that avenue, and turned it over, without any expense whatever, to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MOODY. Is it wrought and traveled as a road beyond Rock Creek?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh, yes; they also graded that avenue the entire distance of 4 miles, at an expenditure of $250,000. They also put two bridges on that 4 miles, costing over $200,000, so that this avenue beyond Rock Creek, extending for a distance of 4 miles beyond Rock Creek, is now completed and is the great thoroughfare of that extensive region beyond Rock Creek, the thoroughfare into which come the various streets reaching out north, east, and west. It is the avenue that empties that entire district.

Mr. MAHANY. These conditions do not, however, attach to the Massachusetts avenue extension.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not to the same extent.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was all of this done by the citizens themselves?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; all of this was done by the citizens themselves. Then the question came up as to the completion of the intermediate portion of Connecticut avenue, about three-quarters of a mile in length, between Boundary street or Florida avenue and Rock Creek, lying this side of Rock Creek.

The popular sentiment of the people of the District was that Connecticut avenue should be continued straight; but some contended that it should be deflected so as to make use of existing streets. To have continued the street and condemned and purchased the land necessary for that purpose would have cost about $350,000, for during this time values had risen in the intermediate district. To deflect it and make use of and widen the existing streets would cost about $250,000.

After considering this question in Congress for six years, Congress determined to accept the more economic proposition and to make use of the deflection, and thus make use of existing streets; and for that purpose appropriated $50,000 for the purchase of the land upon which this bridge foundation would rest, and provided for the condemnation of the rest. That was made, however, conditionally on the property owners on the other side of Rock Creek conveying a certain space between the existing avenue and Rock Creek, about 200,000 feet, I think, which was done. The result is that the District is fully committed by Congress to this matter; that it has paid out $50,000 for this intermediate district, and it has also authorized condemnation, and judgments of condemnation have been entered for the balance; and the question is whether that creek shall be bridged so as to make a continuous thoroughfare from the White House to the District line. The work will be continuous from year to year, requiring only a small appropriation in each year, and at the time when the avenue is finished the overwhelming necessity of it will be apparent. It is apparent now, because population crowds out to it, and the population on the other side is quite extensive.

Mr. MOODY. Is there any connection between the two ends of the avenue—that part of the avenue on the other side and this part?

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is communication, but only by a very devious route.

Mr. MOODY. What is the deviation?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should think probably three-quarters of a mile, maybe less.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman a question to see if I understand this. It is not proposed to make Connecticut avenue straight between Rock Creek and Florida avenue, but it is a proposition to use the streets that run around a straight line, if I may so speak?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, is this bridge to be built near where the present bridge is, that was built without expense to the District?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; it is to be built about half a mile farther down the creek.

Mr. CANNON. Farther down the creek—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Its commencement on this side is about half a mile down.

Mr. CANNON. Is that in line with Connecticut avenue?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; the bridge takes up the straight line just beyond the deflection to which I have referred. The line has been laid out, and is shown in the existing map of the District. The deflected line has been settled by Congress and an appropriation has been made by both Houses and $50,000 paid on account of it.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, the only bridge that is available to cross Rock Creek is one that was built without expense to the Government.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes, that is true; with the exception of a very small bridge on Woodley road at a lower level.

Mr. CANNON. And that bridge, while it is used as a wagon bridge, is also constantly used by the company that built it for its cars.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And about half a mile farther south of this a road is to be constructed and is in harmony with the construction of Connecticut avenue.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is in harmony with it.

Mr. CANNON. And this appropriation that the gentleman from Missouri speaks of—$230,000 as a proposed Senate amendment to a deficiency bill—is to pay the damages which have been already ascertained in condemnation proceedings in laying out and widening the streets that intercept Connecticut avenue and which it is proposed to bridge?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is it; and I want to say further in this connection that the authorities have come to the conclusion that is a simpler proposition, to finish these radial avenues and not enter upon the vast and expensive schemes, such as was involved in the highway act, of extending all the existing streets in Washington.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Nevada the estimated cost of this bridge?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I really do not know.

Mr. MAHANY. Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the questions propounded by the gentleman from Illinois, in the perfectly judicial manner in which they were presented, disclose the real situation to the House. In the first place, it is developed, in the searching cross-examination of the gentleman, that there is a bridge on Rock Creek now within half a mile of the proposed bridge that cost the Government nothing, and which is being used from day to day. The proposed bridge, according to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY], will cost at least $200,000. Then, in addition to that liability, $230,000 is required to pay the awards already made from Florida avenue to Rock Creek, or Waterside drive, which is along the line of Rock Creek.

Now, it might as well be understood that this is a speculative enterprise. I make no criticism upon any gentleman who has his money invested there. They have a right to indulge in these speculations. But the question that suggests itself is this: Two hundred and thirty thousand dollars is required to meet the awards, and with a bridge now standing one-half mile from the contemplated bridge, can we afford to enter upon the enterprise of building a new bridge that will cost not less than $200,000?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Is the $230,000 to pay the condemnation proceedings to be paid by the Government or the people of the District?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. By the District entirely.

Mr. DOCKERY. Out of the revenue of the District.

Mr. PAYNE. That is, the people interested in the improvement are to pay for it?

Mr. DOCKERY. The people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DORR. The gentleman from New York knows very well that all of this money is paid out of the General Treasury; one-half of it is out of the Government Treasury and the other out of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from New York does not know any such thing. The amendment says "to be paid wholly out of the revenue of the District." As I understand, the Government has paid $50,000 for the site of this bridge, this end of it, under the guidance of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. No; under pressure from other sources—under compulsion.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course, under compulsion, as they always do—both ends of the committee. So this appropriation is but for $25,000 to start a foundation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Just a starter. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. There is a large number of people who live beyond Rock Creek and the avenues leading to the avenue.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have not heard anything from them yet.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there a large number living there?

Mr. DOCKERY. The only information coming to me is from gentlemen interested in the enterprise.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri is there any good reason for not going into this, except our extreme poverty?

Mr. DOCKERY. It would seem to me wise to first pay for the land.

Mr. PAYNE. That comes out of the revenue of the District; that does not affect your constituents or mine.

Mr. DOCKERY. We are acting as town council for the District and we ought to give a "fair deal" all around.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there any good reason for not giving this, except our ideas of economy?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is a sufficient reason, and it is not necessary to give any other.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, it has got to be done in the near future, and the only question is whether it should be done now.

Mr. DOCKERY. "In the sweet by and by" it may be necessary. I want to say that the surplus revenue of the District is a little over $600,000. Of that amount we have appropriated in this bill about $300,000 to increase the water supply, and an additional amount will be necessary to complete the project, either in this bill or the next, and it seems to me that we ought to secure more water before we build bridges that are not necessary.

Mr. MOODY. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well.

Mr. MOODY. It has been said here that certain condemnation proceedings have resulted in incurring the liability of $230,000. Now, what connection has that fact with this question, one way or the other? I do not exactly understand.

Mr. DOCKERY. The connection is this: The government of the District had to condemn the land from Florida avenue to the Waterside drive. Condemnation proceedings were instituted, and in order to meet the awards under these condemnations we shall have to appropriate in the general deficiency bill $230,000.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman's argument is that we can not afford to do it.

Mr. DOCKERY. That we do not want to complete the whole project at once; we had better pay for the land before we build the bridge.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We do not have to pay for the land out of the Government funds.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know that; it comes out of the District.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me a question? What effect will this appropriation of $25,000 have on the condemnation proceedings or the payment of the $230,000?

Mr. DOCKERY. The effect is simply this (and no one is more familiar with the effect of this proposition than my friend from Wisconsin): These gentlemen did not come here and ask for an expenditure of $200,000 outright, because they were perhaps apprehensive that, in view of the stringent condition of the Treasury, such a proposition might intimidate some gentlemen, even those who are disposed to vote large appropriations. So they ask a simple "starter" of $25,000 for a project which, when carried out, will cost not less than $200,000. Nothing was said, so far as I heard, about the "back pay" of $230,000 necessary to meet the awards already made.

Mr. BABCOCK. Is it not a fact that there is no connection between the $230,000 for opening streets and the bridge proposition; that those awards will go on and be paid whether this appropriation be made or not?

Mr. DOCKERY. There is this connection, unless you pay the awards, you can not reach this bridge.

Mr. BABCOCK. Very true; but this appropriation, whether it is needed or not, has no effect on the expenditure of the $230,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think you can get to the bridge unless we own the land.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that there is already a street there; that this proposition is simply to widen it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is all there is of it.

Mr. PAYNE. And the condemnation proceedings are simply to widen that street.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, I will say to my friend from New York and my friend from Georgia that the language of this amendment does not warrant their view. The amendment provides for the "extension of Connecticut avenue."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Widening it.

Mr. DOCKERY. It does not say so.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is what it means.

Mr. PAYNE. That is what I understood from the remarks of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and I think he has more information on this subject, perhaps, than any other gentleman here.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no doubt the gentleman from Nevada is well informed on this subject.

Mr. PAYNE. The only fault I find with the amendment is that it proposes to go to work on this improvement by piecemeal. In my opinion, the whole job should be undertaken at once. We should contract for the work with the lowest bidder, and appropriate enough money to build the bridge. It seems to me this bridge is necessary and ought to be built, and we ought to go about the work in a businesslike way.

Mr. GROUT. One word, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the statement about widening the street. The proposition was not to widen Connecticut avenue at that point, but back on the hill nearer Florida avenue. Those who have traced the history of this District appropriation bill for the last two or three sessions will remember that there has been presented by the Senate each time a proposition to straighten Connecticut avenue, which contemplated the removal of a small church and three dwelling houses, one of the value of between $30,000 and $40,000, and involved a deep cut in an elevation through which the avenue was to go before reaching the creek. The House conferees had stood up against that appropriation through repeated Congresses. Finally at the last session a compromise was reached. It was agreed that instead of making the avenue straight we would deflect it.

The avenue already runs on a deflection, and up to about the summit of the hill or elevation referred to is already laid out, although not of a width to compare with the rest of the avenue off to the east. What gentlemen refer to when they speak about widening the avenue is at that point. Then there is a set-off to the left as you go westward; and farther toward the river is this ground, for the condemnation of which an appropriation is proposed by this Senate amendment. It was stipulated that this condemnation should be authorized, provided the owners of the land dedicated a certain quantity on the other side of the avenue, so as to make the proper approach there.

So, Mr. Speaker, after repeatedly meeting the Senate conferees, and entirely defeating this proposition to straighten Connecticut avenue—knocking it out entirely—we felt ourselves compelled at the last session to compromise by providing for completing the extension of the avenue, but not on the straight line—on the deflected line—thus saving to the Government, as I have always claimed, about $200,000.

Now, the construction of this bridge is only a question of time. That is the fact about the matter. The House Committee on Appropriations did not have this proposition in the bill when it first came before you. We did have the next proposition referred to in Senate amendment No. 80, to construct a bridge across Massachusetts avenue. The Senate has put in a proposition to start work on both these avenues. The House will remember that when the question was up before, I thought we might profitably commence the work on Massachusetts avenue bridge. I am informed that for that improvement there is to be no expenditure for land; the way is already owned by the Government up to the abutments of the bridge. I do not speak with authority on that point, but I am so informed.

My opinion is that while we have brought these propositions back to the House with a disagreement, the House might perhaps well enough agree to them. In accordance with the authority which we granted last session the condemnation proceedings have gone on, and the indebtedness thereby incurred is to be paid either by inserting the necessary appropriation in the pending deficiency bill, or in some other bill at some other time. The payment of that money is only a question of time. And it seems to me that we might properly enough commence the work on both these bridges. We do it in a small way. We have it in our own hands, and while it must be admitted that the pressure has been severe, both upon the Senate and the House, to have this work started, I ought, perhaps, to state in frankness that when we came to this agreement in conference a year ago it was tacitly understood, indeed it was expressly understood, that this bridge should be built, because we authorized the preparation of plans for the bridge and made an appropriation for it.

This, then, in brief is the situation. The proposition of course calls for money. Arguments may be formulated against both of these propositions, but it does seem to me that the time has come when we may start upon these enterprises, and that we are committed to them by our previous action, perhaps in a measure upon compulsion, because the House stood out just as long as it could against doing anything with this Connecticut avenue proposition. Finally we did agree upon the less expensive plan and took steps for the construction of this bridge by authorizing plans.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has the gentleman in his researches in connection with this and other extensions any information he can give the House as to what it would cost to straighten that avenue from Florida avenue across to where this bridge is proposed to be built?

Mr. GROUT. I just stated that my belief is that it would have made a difference of $200,000; that is, would have cost $200,000 more than the deflected line.

Mr. McMILLIN. My judgment is that it is a very great misfortune that that has not been done.

Mr. GROUT. That may be. I will simply say to the gentleman—

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not say this as any reflection on the gentleman, because he has acted as he thought wise in adopting this policy; but that avenue has been extended about 4 miles beyond Rock Creek without cost to the people, and I think it is a misfortune that we did not open up the avenue and make a straight street right through.

Mr. GROUT. As a justification of our action in insisting upon the less expensive course, I will say that the only difference whether it goes on a straight line or on a deflected line is simply a matter of appearance to the eye. If the avenue were straightened, then in driving down from the other side where it stretches off to the west, the eye would rest upon a long thoroughfare stretching away in a straight line. That is the only advantage there would be in the straight avenue, and, as you see, it would be all in your eye; and $200,000 is quite a sum of the people's money to pay just to please the eye of those who drive along Connecticut avenue from west of Rock Creek.

The matter of convenience to the public is very trifling, because it makes a deflection of only a few rods, which practically amounts to nothing; and it did seem to the House conferees that it was an expenditure that we ought not to enter upon to condemn the property necessary to straighten the street there. I am frank to say that I did all in my power to prevent it and to agree upon the less expensive route, and am still satisfied with my course. I have no doubt my associates are—

Mr. MAHANY. As there are two bridge propositions here, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to state for the information of the House which proposition he thinks is less urgent as a matter of present construction for the convenience of the people of the District of Columbia, and which one he thinks ought to be built if we are compelled to take our choice.

Mr. BABCOCK. The Massachusetts avenue bridge is not under discussion now.

Mr. GROUT. I have not balanced this matter in my mind, and am not prepared to say which is most urgent.

Mr. MAHANY. Should not the gentleman or the committee give us that information?

Mr. GROUT. I wish to say in all fairness that it is not an unsuitable thing to enter upon the construction of both of these bridges. I have no feeling about the matter and no interest in it. I am perfectly willing to take the judgment of the House, and to carry it out faithfully, as we have done heretofore, because when the House disagreed to the other amendment, we felt constrained to bring in a disagreement as to both and submit the matter to the House for your guidance. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK].

Mr. BABCOCK. I fully concur in what the gentleman from Vermont has said, and I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is no connection between this appropriation of $25,000 for the construction of this bridge and the matter of the bill appropriating $200,000 to open the street. That is a proposition that originated under the last appropriation bill and is being carried out under condemnation proceedings. Now, whether you appropriate this $25,000 to build a bridge or whether you do not should not be considered with the other proposition. The bridge has got to be built, and it is only a question whether you will commence it now or put it off. In my opinion it ought to be done now.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the chairman of the District Committee whether he thinks it is the proper province of this Appropriations Committee to proceed to lay out streets and avenues and build bridges, and so forth? Ought not that work to originate with the District Committee, and ought not bills to come rather from that committee before appropriations are made like those contemplated in this appropriation bill?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This did not originate in the Appropriations Committee of the House.

Mr. KING. In the Appropriations Committee of the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no; not a bit of it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It did not. It is a scheme brought by the District authorities before the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KING. It has not received the approval of the regular District Committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman from Utah that there are many bills so intimately connected with appropriations that either committee might properly have charge of them; but it has been the rule that the Appropriations Committee shall have charge of nearly all the appropriations. The District Committee have occasionally reported bills carrying appropriations, but not as a rule. I believe the District Committee should have charge of all legislation proper.

Mr. KING. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. I congratulate the people of the northwest section on the fact that they are soon to have largely increased bridge accommodations over Rock Creek. They now have a bridge half a mile from the proposed bridge, a good bridge, constructed without cost to the Government. This bridge is to be given, and then when we reach the next amendment a bridge will be authorized seven-eighths of a mile from this. These bridges will cost over $400,000. I think the gentleman from New York has the correct business view of the matter; that is, if we intend to enter upon these enterprises the money should be fully appropriated to carry the projects to completion and not start with an insufficient appropriation. If the House desires to make the appropriation, I trust some gentleman will move to concur with an amendment carrying the amount of the estimate.

Mr. PAYNE. When these two bridges are built, they will be the only two bridges across Rock Creek that have not double street railroad car tracks over them?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know about that.

Mr. MAHANY. Does the gentleman want this built for the exclusive benefit of people who use carriages?

Mr. PAYNE. I want it built for the people who use carriages as well as those who walk and those who ride in street cars.

Mr. MAHANY. Not for the exclusive benefit and convenience of the people who ride in carriages? This would be the result unless the proposed bridge were part of a street railway route.

Mr. PAYNE. Because I believe people ought to be allowed to walk in this country, and to have a bridge to walk on, if they want to, and I have not any demagogue about me either.

Mr. MAHANY. We need the gentleman's assurance to be certain of that.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] one minute.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want the House to distinctly understand that this is not the Massachusetts avenue bridge.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does not the gentleman want both bridges?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman has no authority or right to say that the next amendment will give the people of that vicinity another bridge.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman does not desire to rest his case on the other.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is not the statement true?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We are not sure that the other bridge will be built or that the other amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GROUT. I ask for the previous question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Before you put that motion, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Who is going to build this bridge? Who is going to pay for it?

Mr. DOCKERY. The people of the District half and the people of the United States half.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I want to know is, are the people of the District of Columbia going to build their bridge or are we going to build it? That is a plain question.

Mr. GROUT. Whom do you mean by "we"?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I mean the people of the United States, the rest of us.

Mr. GROUT. The people of the United States and the people of the District of Columbia are going to pay the expense of building the bridge—half and half.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is, the rest of the people are going to pay half of the expense.

Mr. GROUT. That is right, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. Under the law.

Mr. GROUT. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in Senate amendment No. 79.

The question being taken, several members demanded a division. The House divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the ayes are 50 and the noes are 41. Accordingly the motion is agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, there is no quorum present.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That point is made too late.

Mr. SIMPSON. No, it is not too late. I made the point of no quorum as soon as the result was announced. I do not see how it can be too late.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The Chair delayed the announcement; the Chair waited.

Mr. SIMPSON. The Chair did not wait.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair waited to hear objection, and no objection was made.

Mr. SIMPSON. I made it just as soon as I could hear the result. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point comes too late.

On motion of Mr. LIVINGSTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, that leaves now the amendment numbered 80 and several other amendments, including the amendments relating to charity, on which the conferees have thus far disagreed, and I shall ask that the House support a motion to further insist, if that satisfies the gentleman, in its disagreement to the several Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. MAHANY. I would like to be heard on that motion.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the Senate amendment relating to the Massachusetts avenue bridge.

Mr. GROUT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY].

[Mr. MAHANY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the remarks that were made on the 1st of February, 1898, found on page 1325 of the RECORD, almost exactly the words of the gentleman from New York, made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ], in which he says:

Long before you waste this money for the benefit of a few men who will speculate in real estate you would better pay some of the delayed pensions to the crippled and aged soldiers and their widows and orphans—

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. BENNETT. I have not finished reading—

Mr. MAHANY. I thank the gentleman from New York for the reference, because it brings out the fact that in this Congress the decrepit and poverty-afflicted veterans of this country have, to some extent at least, suffered from the rigorous economy practiced in the granting of invalid pensions.

Mr. KING. Will my friend from New York permit me a question?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is not the gentleman reading from the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEBURN]? As I remember, his remarks were stronger even than those of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ].

Mr. BENNETT. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] further said:

Long before you waste this $200,000 on the selfish interest of a few men you would better open the mouth of the Mississippi River, etc.

Now, that is almost the same language used by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] just now. I am surprised that he should indulge in expressions made use of by others.

Mr. MAHANY. Well, I shall never be charged with making use of the expressions employed by the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNETT. These two propositions, one for the Connecticut avenue bridge and the other for the Massachusetts avenue bridge, ought to be adopted. The people along the line of Massachusetts avenue have freely given 16 feet of the land on either side, so that the bridge can be built without going through condemnation proceedings and without the expenditure of the money. Beyond this, on Georgetown Heights, they have given probably 50,000 or 60,000 feet of land for parking purposes. The bridge will lead to Georgetown Heights, to the Naval Observatory, and to the Wesleyan College, and to a thickly populated and settled portion of the city. I believe it will be of immense advantage to the District.

Mr. MAHANY. Does the gentleman say that the Rock Creek region at the extension of Massachusetts avenue is a thickly settled part of the city?

Mr. BENNETT. I say that Georgetown Heights is thickly settled.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman from New York allow me? Would not the building of the bridge be of great public convenience?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes; I believe both bridges should be constructed, and I am unable to understand the position of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY].

Mr. MAHANY. Why should this money be spent for the building of these bridges when there are so many unpaved streets in the populous suburbs of the city?

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] such time as he may want.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of this amendment for the construction of this bridge. The amount appropriated in the amendment is $25,000. The estimated total cost for the construction of the bridge is, in round numbers, $200,000. That is the estimate of the engineer. There is a little bridge there now that cost about $20,000, wholly unfit for travel and public use. The bridge contemplated is a steel bridge, and is to be used for all purposes except for carriages, cars, and wagons carrying heavy loads. It connects with the National Observatory, which has a circle of 100 acres. Reference has been made that that portion beyond the contemplated bridge is not populous; it could not be very populous with 100 acres taken up for a National Observatory. I am, however, advised that the interests of the National Observatory require and demand the construction of a bridge adapted for all heavy carrying purposes. It also leads to the great National Methodist University, which also has 100 acres, and where there is a building just completed in which has been put $200,000, and students will soon begin to occupy it.

This Methodist University is backed up by the entire Methodist Church of the United States. We have in this city a Catholic University, and Congress has given it every facility, by roadways and street improvements, to afford it easy facilities in connecting with the city. I remember very well, when Samuel J. Randall was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and I was on the subcommittee on appropriations for the District of Columbia, Mr. Randall called my attention to these matters and said we would march on a line of a policy that would give easy and comfortable access to these great universities. We did so. If my memory does not err, we put in $15,000 at that time as our first move for the improvement of the streets leading toward that university; and other appropriations have since been made.

Now, the Methodists of this country are building a great university at an estimated cost of $10,000,000, and they are asking for this great university the same facilities and privileges that Congress has already given to the Catholic University.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is it not a fact that this Methodist college has about 90 acres of vacant land over there which would be largely increased in value if this bridge should be built?

Several MEMBERS. We hope that is so.

Mr. HENDERSON. They have 100 acres. They have a building up now, costing $200,000, which will be occupied by students this fall. And if giving them road facilities improves their property, it is simply doing what every Republican, Democrat, and Populist ought to favor.

Mr. MAHANY. May I ask the gentleman a question in that connection?

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, if the gentleman from New York will content himself with only one question, I will yield.

Mr. MAHANY. I think one question will do. Is it not probable that students who attend that university will take the street railway routes in preference to walking over that bridge?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am assured by Prof. Samuel L. Beiler that this bridge is absolutely needed for the freight and loading work on that university, and I will put that earnest worker in the cause of education against my friend from New York.

But I will not stop there. I send to the Clerk's desk a letter addressed to me by Bishop Hurst, who is at the head of this great enterprise. I ask to have it read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 14, 1898.

MY DEAR MR. HENDERSON: A few years ago the Congress extended Massachusetts avenue to the site of the American University. This, of course, was done not with a thought of aid to the university, but to develop the widest and most important residence street of Washington. The university site covers 90 acres, and we already have our first building completed, the college of history, costing $170,000. We have in contemplation another building for this fall, but materials for building are hauled to the grounds by various circuitous routes. The Congress has appropriated annually for a number of years about $10,000 for the extension of the avenue, but this seems now to have stopped. There seems to be no appropriation for either the extension of the avenue or for the bridge over Rock Creek. We favor the amendment of the Senate proposing $25,000 for the bridge. There is no direct outlet for the Frederick road and the country beyond. Massachusetts avenue would furnish just such an outlet. The Woodley lane is too hilly for the hauling of material and even of produce. I have made careful inquiry and find that Massachusetts avenue, if extended, can be opened without the condemnation of any ground, as the property has already been dedicated, with perhaps a very trifling exception of one or two small pieces.

We hope to open our department of history this fall. As soon as the bridge is built and the avenue is opened, there will be constant use of both for the university, its patrons, and its students. We have not the slightest financial interest in this, except our development will be more rapid. I hope all friends of education will see the importance of this great undertaking. The American University is an institution to which all leading Protestant denominations have contributed, and even the Roman Catholic friends to education have cooperated to some extent also.

This letter will be handed to you by Rev. Dr. S. L. Beiler, the vice-chancellor of the university, who will be glad to give you any further information that you may desire.

Yours sincerely,

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
House of Representatives.

JOHN F. HURST.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to add only a word. In addition to accommodating the National Observatory, where the Government has now a million dollars planted, and in addition to the facilities which will be given to the Methodist University, which involves a contemplated expense of $10,000,000 to $12,000,000, with a $200,000 building already erected, this road opens the connections to the most popular park of that whole country, namely, along the Tennallytown road, where the homes of honest people—not speculators—stand like monuments to the industry of their owners.

Mr. MAHANY rose.

Mr. HENDERSON. Ah, my friend, you thought one question would do! It will do for me. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHANY. It evidently "did" for you. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Not only will this bridge, with its connecting thoroughfares, accommodate that popular park along the Tennallytown road, but it will accommodate Tennallytown itself.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I have sometimes said that if suddenly confronted with a question of how I should vote when educational institutions were appealing for aid, and if I had not time to investigate the particular question presented, I would vote blindly in behalf of education. But this matter I have investigated. I have looked carefully into it and I believe that this improvement is needed. And I want to say to the Appropriations Committee, whose members responded to the leaders who were erecting the Catholic University, that I thank them for their consistency in coming here with this little recognition of the great Methodist University of the United States and (in the future) of the world.

Mr. GROUT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY].

Mr. MAHANY. In reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], let me say that if the proposition is to give a donation of $200,000 to this university, let us so understand it. If this improvement is to be made for the benefit of a "thickly settled population," consisting of ten or twenty inhabitants on this side of Rock Creek and none on the other side, let us understand that fact. I observe that the Pennsylvania delegation are a unit in favor of this bridge.

Mr. BINGHAM. Of course they are.

Mr. MAHANY. Possibly the fact that the proprietor of a Philadelphia newspaper has built a $50,000 house across that creek may have some influence?

Mr. BINGHAM. A house which he has owned for twenty years.

Mr. MAHANY. In which he has doubtless lived very comfortably for twenty years without this bridge.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, it does not require anybody versed in public affairs to understand that this proposition has all the earmarks of a "job." The purpose is to take $200,000 out of the Treasury for the benefit, as I said, of a few land speculators who desire to enhance their private holdings at the public expense.

Mr. GROUT. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, so far as the city of Washington is concerned, we sit here as a town or city council. I think we ought to consider this subject just as the councils of any great city would consider a similar project coming before them. I am satisfied that the gentleman from New York who opposes this measure has never been upon the scene of this proposed bridge.

Mr. MAHANY. Oh, I have been there many times.

Mr. OLMSTED. Your remarks upon the subject and your course to-day do not indicate it, for you oppose this measure, although you failed to vote against the proposition to build a bridge across Connecticut avenue, whereas any man familiar with the location knows that this Massachusetts avenue bridge is ten times as necessary as the Connecticut avenue bridge against which you failed either to vote or to raise your voice.

Mr. MAHANY. That is your assumption or presumption.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is no assumption or presumption. I have been upon the ground within the past two hours and know whereof I speak. Now, the only argument which the gentleman has made against this bridge is that, forsooth, somebody owning land upon the other side—some imaginary syndicate—may profit by the construction of the bridge.

Mr. MAHANY. The syndicate may be "imaginary," but its influence, apparently, is very real.

Mr. OLMSTED. The only syndicate that has been mentioned is the Methodist College, which owns 100 acres of land, and a gentleman whom my friend from New York says lives and owns a great newspaper in Philadelphia and owns a residence upon the avenue on the other side of this impassable ravine. Now, if any gentleman living in Philadelphia or anywhere in Pennsylvania owns a house over there, he has never spoken to me upon the subject. If he does own such property, that fact will not prevent me from voting for this much-needed improvement. I say it is a shame and a disgrace that the broadest, largest, and finest avenue in this city, which is rapidly becoming, and ought to be, the finest and most beautiful residence city in the world—a city in which the whole people of the United States have an interest and of which they are justly proud—it is a shame and a disgrace that that great, broad, handsome avenue is broken in two by an unbridged ravine 50 feet deep, at the bottom of which there flows a very considerable stream known as Rock Creek.

If the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] knew whereof he spoke, he would know there has been as much money expended in opening and blasting out this avenue upon the other side of this stream as it would cost to build the bridge, and yet you can not get across to that part of the avenue without going half a mile out of your way or else going down into that ravine and crossing a bridge built at private expense and climbing up the bank upon the other side.

Mr. MAHANY. If the gentleman will permit me for a moment, I will bring the testimony of the official geographer of the Government. There [showing the map] is a wilderness, while the Connecticut avenue extension leads through and to a comparatively populous region.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. I yield no further. I thought the gentleman based his information upon some picture that he had seen somewhere or other and not upon personal knowledge.

Mr. MAHANY. Oh, I base it upon both.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have been there this morning, and I say that this avenue is lined with fine, magnificent residences, almost up to that ravine.

Mr. MAHANY. I am talking about the conditions on the other side of the ravine.

Mr. OLMSTED. There are fine residences on the other side of the ravine, and, as the gentleman from Iowa, General HENDERSON, has well said, there is a thickly settled country beyond, whose people are waiting to come across this bridge. They now reach the city by a circuitous route, crossing bridges which are covered with double lines of street-car tracks.

The presence of the Naval Observatory upon the other side of this stream is a sufficient justification for this bridge. All the good Methodist people of this country are interested in its construction, and they are entitled to it. The gentleman from Iowa has told how the Catholic institution has been favored and benefited by public improvements in its direction. The Methodists are entitled to at least equal consideration. It is true that every public improvement benefits private properties, but the fact that the construction of this bridge may enhance the value of the land owned by the Wesleyan College ought not to deter any member of this House from voting in its favor. The people who have contributed the money to build that college have done much for this city. They are entitled to this means of access to that institution. There is not a great city in the United States whose councils would permit such a ravine across its handsomest street to remain unbridged.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is it not a fact that there is now a good bridge, a substantial bridge, not more than a block from where it is proposed to build this one?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is not so.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman had been there, he would not have asked that question.

Mr. BINGHAM. Three-quarters of a mile away is the nearest bridge.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to yield some time to the opposition to this proposition.

Mr. GROUT. How much time is desired?

Mr. KING. Ten minutes.

Mr. GROUT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall consume all the time that has been allotted me. I am opposed to this appropriation. I am opposed to the manner in which it has been brought before us. When the appropriate committees have been appointed I think that they should have an opportunity to consider these measures. The regular District Committee appointed by this House is charged with the duty of introducing and supplying needed legislation for this city; but there is a growing disposition upon the part of the Appropriations Committee in this House, if I am to judge by my limited experience here, to usurp functions that pertain to other committees of the House. Accordingly we find the District appropriation committee incorporating upon a general appropriation bill measures which ought to originate with the District Committee. So far as this bill is concerned, I believe that the Senate is more consurable than the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me? In the last session of Congress the District Committee reported a bill making the surveys and all the preliminary work for this Massachusetts avenue bridge, and this is one of the results of the action of the District Committee.

Mr. KING. I want to say to my friend from Wisconsin that, as I understand the duties of these respective committees, it would be the duty of the regular District Committee, rather than of the Appropriations Committee, to make provision for the construction of a bridge. I do not think it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations of this House to submit a measure for the construction of a bridge or for the widening of a street.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. KING. With pleasure.

Mr. GROUT. Is the gentleman aware that the subject was referred to the District Committee and that the District Committee obtained from the House its discharge from the consideration of the matter and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is the gentleman aware that this same item has been heretofore rejected by the House?

Mr. KING. Yes; by a decisive vote.

I will say to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] that I do not know what has been done in the past, but it does seem to me that it is the duty of the District Committee to introduce and provide legislation for the construction of bridges and the opening of streets. When this is done the Committee on Appropriations has merely the perfunctory duty of adding to the appropriation bills the necessary appropriations for the meeting of the expenses which have been incurred.

Mr. GAINES. Does this bill order a bridge built and also provide for the appropriation?

Mr. KING. This bill appropriates $25,000 for the beginning of the work. Of course it is merely the entering wedge, and everybody knows that this is preliminary merely to an appropriation which will exceed perhaps $200,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no. The exhibit of the Department only shows $199,000.

Mr. MAHANY. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] says $750,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have stated what the exhibit of the Department is.

Mr. KING. And when exhibits show $200,000, common experience indicates that the expense is liable to be a much greater sum.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no; it would not exceed it.

Mr. KING. I find by examining the record that when this matter was up before, my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who is ominously silent upon this occasion, declaimed with very great vigor against this measure which is now so virtuous.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman had better not stir up the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KING. It was a very great vice then, but it has been sanctified by time. It is astonishing how many vicious measures go to the Senate and there become cleansed and purified and come back here white as snow; and it is surprising how many gentlemen vote "no" or "aye," as the case may be, upon propositions here, and then when those same propositions come back from the Senate cast a different vote.

Mr. GAINES. Have their eyes opened.

Mr. KING. My friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who sits before me and honors me with his attention, inveighed very strongly against this measure when it was under consideration a few weeks ago. I think the arguments which he then adduced are invincible. If they were invincible then, they are invulnerable now. If it was wrong to appropriate then, it is not right to appropriate now. The only argument which has been adduced in support of this measure was the one just offered by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], who pleads for this bill because there is a university being constructed out in the country.

I visited the place where this bridge is desired last evening, and the only inhabitants of the neighborhood were one boy and a mule, one of the animals which have been made famous by Blanco's dispatches.

There was not a house within hundreds of yards on this side of Rock Creek, and as you peered across the chasm into the distance beyond you could see, perhaps half a mile away, a chimney looking out through the hills. On the left was the city of the dead. This is a place where you propose to expend $200,000 or $300,000.

Mr. MAHANY. The gentleman from Iowa says $750,000.

Mr. KING. It is stated by my friend from New York [Mr. MAHANY], quoting another distinguished gentleman of the House, that the bridge will cost $750,000.

I say, Mr. Speaker, there is no necessity for the construction of this bridge. There are no houses in proximity to Rock Creek where it is designed to construct the proposed bridge. It is not just or proper to appropriate any such sum of money at the present for the convenience of a few people residing in the country; and it is a fact, though denied by the distinguished gentleman who last addressed the committee, that there is a bridge within a short distance from Massachusetts avenue. In the West and a great many other places we consider ourselves fortunate if we get a bridge within 10 or 15 miles to enable us to cross a stream, but here bridges are desired every few rods, and because a deviation of two or three squares may be required in order to find a suitable bridge that is urged as a sufficient reason to spend large sums for the construction of additional bridges. If some gentlemen could have their way we would construct a bridge at the extension of every street, avenue, and highway in the District.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would, speaking for myself.

Mr. KING. Of course my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania would expend all the money in the Treasury—

Mr. BINGHAM. I would put one on every street, if necessary.

Mr. KING (continuing). And when that was gone, he would bond the United States, and when those bonds were sold and the money exhausted, he would again issue bonds, until he fastened the gold standard and a perpetual national debt upon the American people. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say again, there is no necessity for the construction of this bridge. It is simply, and I repeat the words of my friend from New York, in the interest of some people who have property beyond the settled portion of the city. It will enhance the value of it, of course. This should not be done when there are streets in this city that need paving and avenues within a short radius of this Capitol that need attention.

Mr. MAHANY. And the Potomac Flats to reclaim.

Mr. KING. My friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in his February speech talked about the necessity of reclaiming the Potomac Flats before making such appropriations as this. He called attention to the effect of the noxious gases arising from these poisonous flats, the fever which they engender decimating the ranks of the people, and then inveighed against this committee making extravagant and useless appropriations upon the heights beyond when appropriations ought to be made for the sanitary condition and for the health and improvement of the immediate city.

Mr. SIMPSON. I take it from what has been said that this is a scheme to enable the Methodist College, while serving God, to put money in their pockets.

Mr. KING. I can not say as to that; but I venture to remark that if this bridge is constructed, it is apparent from the number of railroads that approach the university that no one will travel to it over this proposed bridge. If Massachusetts avenue is followed, persons need only to diverge a short distance from the main traveled way in order to obtain a good bridge by which to cross Rock Creek. There is no necessity at the present time for the construction of such a bridge as is contemplated by this amendment, and I sincerely hope that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. GROUT. In reply to the gentleman's attack upon the committee, stating that it has usurped the functions of another committee, the District Committee, let me say that whatever expenditure is considered municipal in character it has always been held—at least such has always been the practice—that the Committee on Appropriations have power to provide for it without an order in the shape of general legislation. They do not wait on the Committee on the District of Columbia to order lamps here and there, or a bridge here and there. In other words, there is authority in the committee to appropriate for anything directly municipal. The Committee on the District of Columbia have recognized the propriety of this course by asking to be discharged from the consideration of this very matter and having it referred to our committee during this very session. So much for this. Now, Mr. Speaker, one reason further for the construction of this bridge that has not been mentioned.

The accommodation it will be to the National Observatory has been referred to; also the necessity for it on the part of the Methodist University. Allegations have been made that there are no houses on the other side of Rock Creek. There are not close down to the creek, but up beyond there are, and still farther beyond is the village of Tennallytown. But the fact not yet stated and bearing upon the propriety of building this bridge is this: There have since 1892 been appropriations made for the improvement of the roadway beyond Rock Creek—mark that, gentlemen—to the amount of some forty-odd thousand dollars, in small sums, running through the different years, with a view of spanning the chasm in due time with a bridge and opening by that avenue to that university and Observatory free and easy access to the city. It will be remembered that when this matter came up in the consideration of this bill in the House I was in favor of this appropriation. But as the House refused to make the appropriation, I feel that it is my duty in conference to stand against the item and agree to it only when the House shall so instruct or when further resistance would seem to imperil the bill. Nevertheless it is my individual judgment that we ought to enter upon the construction of this bridge now. Mr. Speaker, I think this matter has been sufficiently discussed, and I demand the previous question.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. I believe I have a minute left; and if so, I would be very glad to yield it to the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yielded the floor, and did not reserve any time.

Mr. GROUT. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to have that minute.

Mr. GROUT. I yield the gentleman such time as he desires.

Mr. HEPBURN. Some time ago, Mr. Speaker, when this matter was under consideration, I made some observations in opposition to this structure. I am glad to see that what I said at that time has made some impression even upon the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. KING. I agreed with you then.

Mr. HEPBURN. And that he now remembers what I said.

Mr. KING. I always remember what my friend says.

Mr. HEPBURN. I intend to vote just as the gentleman votes. He seems to think it is a singular thing that I do not reiterate and repeat what I said on that occasion. I have observed a habit the gentleman has himself of that kind. I think among the many speeches he has made, perhaps if he could have contented himself as I have now the House would have had all the information on the subjects he has discussed. I do not think it is necessary to go over the argument I made then. I satisfied myself, if no one else, that this ought not to pass, and I am still of that opinion. [Applause.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The question is on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 8 and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DOCKERY, Mr. KING, and others) there were—ayes 48, noes 42.

Mr. MAHANY, Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky, and Mr. SIMPSON. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore proceeded to count the House.

Mr. MAHANY (pending the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMPSON. I renew it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I make the point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOODY. If before the point of no quorum is withdrawn the Chair should announce no quorum was present, would it be possible for the House to proceed with any business, eulogies or any business whatever, until a quorum was secured?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a proposition that the yeas and nays be considered as ordered and the report stand over until Monday, so that the special order in reference to eulogies may be entered upon at once.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let it stand over until the next legislative day on which the conference report is considered.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; the previous question has been ordered, and let it be taken up on the next day when the conference report is considered.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point of no quorum for that purpose, but shall renew it if it is not agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, that it goes over until Monday, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum is withdrawn, and unanimous consent is asked that the yeas and nays be considered as ordered on the pending proposition. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Unanimous consent is further asked that the report shall go over until Monday—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Until the conference report is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Until the conference report is in order. Is there objection to that? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REMOVAL OF ABANDONED TRACKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 914) to compel street railway companies in the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 914) "An act to compel street railway companies in the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the first and second and third amendments of the House and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the fourth amendment of the House and agree to the same amended as follows: In line 3 of the matter proposed to be inserted, after the word "over" insert the words "any portion of the underground electric;" and in line 11 of said matter, after the words "fine of $10," insert the words "for every car operated in violation of the provisions of this act, said fine;" and that the House agree to the same.

J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES McMILLAN,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read, as follows:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to all of the amendments of the House and agrees to the same. In the fourth amendment the report of the conference committee simply makes the meaning more definite, as a strict construction of the amendment as it passed the Senate would make it necessary to change one street railway from electric to horsepower, which error is now provided for. The second amendment in the same amendment provides a more definite penalty for the violation of the act.

The conference report was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS OF THE BELT RAILWAY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 8541, an act to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8541) to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same amended as follows: On page 2, beginning with line 23, strike out all to and including the word "void," on page 3, line 10, and in place thereof insert: "Provided, That stock and bonds may be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by a majority vote of the stockholders of such company; And provided further, That the issue of such stock and bonds shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment of said Belt Railway, and shall in no case exceed the sum of $150,000 per mile of single track;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted as section 4 insert:

"SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and required to station special policemen at such street-railway crossings and intersections in the city of Washington as the said Commissioners may deem necessary, the expense of such service to be paid pro rata by the respective companies; every car shall be brought to a full stop, immediately before making such crossing or intersection. Neglect or failure to pay for the service monthly, or to stop any car, as herein provided for shall subject the company to a fine of not to exceed $25 for every such neglect or failure, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same amended as follows: Number the sections of the bill consecutively; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES McMILLAN,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read, as follows:

Amendments 1 and 2 make the amount of stock and bonds to be determined by a majority vote of the stockholders of the company, subject to the limitation of $150,000 a mile of single track, total capitalization and bonding. Amendment 3 is a verbal change.

Amendment 4 is included in amendment 2, and therefore the Senate recedes.

Amendment 5: The Senate inserted a provision requiring watchmen to be stationed at each point of crossing or intersection of street-railway tracks in the District of Columbia. The conference committee, after having examined the whole matter, came to the conclusion that to station a watchman at every one of the intersections would be unnecessary and that the present system of signaling by the motorman of one car to the motorman of another car is the best system that can be devised to prevent accidents. The amendment proposed by the committee of conference gives the Commissioners discretion to station policemen at such crossings as may need attention, such policemen to be paid by the companies.

Amendments 6, 7, and 8 relate to changes in the numbering of sections.

The conference report was agreed to.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. BABCOCK. I submit the conference report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 6143, "An act to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered from 1 to 4, inclusive, 6 to 9, inclusive, 11, 13, 16 to 18, inclusive, 20 to 24, inclusive, and 26, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same amended as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted strike out all after the words "are hereby" and insert the word "repealed;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed to be inserted, after the word "lighting," in line 6, insert the words "and propelling;" and in the same line, after the word "cars," insert the words "and other machinery;" and at the end of said matter add the following: "Provided, however, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit street-railway companies using the underground electric system to construct conduits not exceeding five blocks in length to connect their existing conduits for the purpose of conveying electric current to be used for street-railway purposes only;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same amended by inserting after the words "from the opening" the words "and grading;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 14.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same amended as follows: On page 3, line 7, strike out the words "unless the roadway of;" all of lines 8, 9, and 10, and in line 11 the words "between New York avenue and G street," and insert "the roadway shall be widened to a width of 45 feet, one-half at the expense of said company and one-half at the expense of any District of Columbia appropriation available for such work;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out and inserted on page 4, line 13, strike out all after the word "act" to the end of the section and insert the following: "Or otherwise: Provided, That such stock and bonds shall be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the majority stockholders of such company: And provided further, That the issue of such bonds and stock shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment aforesaid, and the total outstanding bonds and stock shall in no event exceed the sum of $150,000 per mile of single track."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same amended as follows: In line 3 of the matter proposed to be inserted strike out the word "Company" and insert the words "of Washington;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES McMILLAN,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HEPBURN (interrupting the reading of the report). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. At what time may a point of order be made against one of the items of this report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As soon as the report is read and is before the House.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against—I do not know the number of the amendment, but it is the amendment to section 2 of the bill, which reads as follows:

That the powers conferred in an act entitled "An act relative to the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia" (now the Capital Traction Company), approved March 1, 1895, relative to joint management, lease, purchase, or sale of connecting or intersecting lines, are hereby conferred upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and all other street railway companies in the District of Columbia.

This section, it will be observed, was simply the conferring of a power upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company—a power of the same character as that possessed by the Capital Traction Company. That was the effect of the amendment, which was not agreed to and which went to conference. Now the conferees, as I understand, have agreed to the Senate amendment amended by striking out the words "conferred upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and all other street railway companies in the District of Columbia" and inserting the word "repealed." So that the bill as now returned, instead of making a grant of power to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, repeals a statute, and thereby takes from another company a power that it possesses under that statute. I make the point that there was no disagreement of this character, and that the conference committee have no jurisdiction whatever over this subject. They are attempting as a conference committee to repeal a statute that was in no way involved in the matter referred to them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did the gentleman read the entire Senate amendment in his remarks?

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe I did.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is there not a special order for 2 o'clock to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I demand the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask that the special order be laid before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], in view of the present situation, that it might be well, perhaps, to withdraw this conference report at present, because the report, if insisted upon, would probably take precedence over the special order.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not wish to have it do that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We do not object to the report going over.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will withdraw the report by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the conference report being allowed to go over until some future time? The Chair hears no objection. It is so ordered; and points of order will be considered as pending.

Mr. BABCOCK. One moment, Mr. Speaker. Is it understood that this report will be pending as unfinished business, subject to being called up again, or is it withdrawn? I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the conference report will be considered as withdrawn.
There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. DAVISON of Kentucky, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ZENOR, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HARTMAN, for three weeks.

To Mr. CRUMPACKER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOY, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

HIGHWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask that House bill No. 10309, known as the "highway bill," may be laid before the House at this time, so that the Chair may announce the conferees. The bill is now on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 10309) to repeal an act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and for other purposes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON as conferees on the part of the House.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR HARRIS.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk, pursuant to the special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for fitting tribute to the memory of Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS, late a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect to his memory and eminent service, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings the House stand adjourned.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk of the House to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, we assemble to-day to pay tribute to the memory of one of the most remarkable men ever produced by "the Volunteer State"—ISHAM GREEN HARRIS. Tennessee has been prolific of great men, and they have been prolific of great deeds. She, before admission to statehood, furnished John Sevier and his fellow-officers and their brave comrades to win the battle of Kings Mountain and the Revolution; furnished General Jackson to conquer England's trained army at New Orleans, and subsequently, as President, to stand as the great tribune of the people; furnished Polk to carry on the Mexican war; Houston to wrest Texas from Mexico; Crockett to immortalize "the Alamo" by his death, and Andrew Johnson to take the helm of state as President during the trying hours immediately succeeding our civil war. The State has furnished a long line of other noble and able statesmen, yet, Mr. Speaker, ISHAM G. HARRIS stands out in history as a distinguished man, even when compared to these distinguished sons of our splendid State.

ISHAM G. HARRIS was born in Franklin County, Tenn., on the 10th of February, 1818. He died July 8, 1897. He therefore lacked but little of reaching fourscore years. He married Miss Martha Travis, of Paris, Tenn., whom he survived only a few months. They left four sons; and four of their children died before the parents.

That State—this country—has produced few men who achieved so many triumphs despite so many difficulties.

He was too poor when he began life to acquire a collegiate education. He was too poor even to start a business of his own and had to hire to another as clerk. But early in the action he showed those sterling qualities—intelligence, integrity, and industry—which caused him to win his first battle, enabled him to enter business on his own account about the time he attained his majority, and to triumph in so many of the battles of later life. But this is an experience so oft witnessed that it has come to be doubted whether poverty in youth has not made more great men than it ever marred. Poverty and misfortunes try the man. Trials and tribulations once passed are found to have chastened and strengthened the man instead of weakening him.

Mr. Speaker, a brief, plain narrative of the struggles of Senator HARRIS and his triumphs makes a very bright page in American history. He was born before Jefferson wrote his famous letter urging the promulgation of the "Monroe doctrine" or Monroe proclaimed it. He therefore saw the rise and triumph of that doctrine whereby our Government laid out the map of the world and forced the world to accept the map.

He was a young man when Jackson, who had been a soldier in the Revolution, still lived. He beheld his country when it numbered but a few millions; he lived to see it surpass in greatness and grandeur not only the nations now existing, but any nation that ever rose in the world's history. He lived when there was not a railroad, a telegraph, or a telephone in the world. Yet when he died our country had enough railroad mileage to circle the globe six times. Before he died he could whisper across the State and talk almost across the continent. Before his death he could have recorded his voice in the graphophone so it could be taken off sigh for sigh and sound for sound by his grandchildren fifty years after his death.

As already stated, he moved from Franklin County, Tenn., to Henry County when only about 14 years old, to hire as a clerk in a store. I have narrated how he set up for himself at the age of 21 years.

But mercantile pursuits were not sufficiently exciting for him. While thus engaged, looking forward to a vocation more congenial with his fiery and eloquent nature, he had studied law at night, getting whatever private training he could obtain.

He moved back to Paris, Tenn., whence he had gone to Mississippi, and in the year 1841 began the practice of the law in conjunction with an older brother, who was both able and distinguished in the practice. From this time forward his life was one of strenuous exertion, constant battle, and great triumph.

He was elected a member of the State legislature from his senatorial district in 1847.

In 1848 he was a candidate for elector from his Congressional district on the Democratic ticket. He displayed tact and ability to such a degree as to arouse the enthusiasm of his friends and cause them to look to him for a standard bearer later on.

In 1849 he was nominated for Congress, again canvassing the district, and was elected.

He was reelected in 1851, and at the close of his term, declining further nomination, he removed to Memphis, which was his home until his death, and entered successfully into the practice of his profession.

In 1856 he again entered the political arena as candidate for elector for the State at large on the Democratic ticket. His opponent in this campaign was one of the most distinguished of Tennessee sons, Ex-Governor Neil S. Brown, who was not only able as a lawyer, but able in debate. He was one of two distinguished brothers, the other being Gen. John C. Brown, who were governors of Tennessee.

In 1857 he was elected governor of Tennessee.

In 1859 he was reelected.

Then came the stirring events of the civil war in which he was to play so distinguished a part. As "war governor" he was untiring in his exertions in organizing and equipping troops, sending them to the front, and in feeding and clothing them. So energetically and successfully did he carry on this work that when the war closed about 100,000 men had been furnished to the Confederate army, notwithstanding the thousands that had gone to the Union Army, the State being divided in sentiment on the question of secession.

When Tennessee was overrun by the Federal forces and the capital had to be abandoned, Senator HARRIS took up his line of march with the Confederate troops and stayed with them to the close of the conflict. He was a portion of the time with that great cavalry commander, Gen. Bedford Forrest; but probably a greater portion of his time prior to the death of that distinguished general was spent with Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, by whose side he was when that great commander of Confederate forces was killed at Shiloh. One of the most graphic descriptions I ever heard was by Senator HARRIS, only a few days before the beginning of his last illness, giving an account of the death of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston and the great battle in which it occurred.

During this period he had in his custody the school fund of Tennessee. It was a coin fund, dedicated by the people of Tennessee to the cause of education alone, and amounted to many hundred thousand dollars. When compelled to leave the State he carried this treasure with him, and month after month and year after year, from city to city, as the army went, the fund was taken. Through all troubles it was preserved intact, and when the war closed, not being able to return to the State, he sent it back to be used as the law had dedicated it.

At the close of this fierce conflict, in which more than 2,000,000 soldiers had participated, sectional and war prejudices were at the highest pitch. The then ruling government of Tennessee, on the charge that he had been guilty of treason to the State, offered a reward for Senator HARRIS, by reason of which he left the United States and went to Mexico. After staying some time in Mexico he went to England, where he lived and engaged in business for one year. The prejudices of war subsiding, he returned to the State he had loved so well and resumed the practice of his profession.

He continued this, taking interest in the political affairs of his State, but seeking no office until 1876. In that year the Democratic party, in convention at Nashville, moved by a remarkably eloquent address delivered by him to the convention, nominated him over all opposition as candidate for elector on the Tilden-Hendricks ticket. It soon developed that there still existed in some portions of the State prejudice against him to such a degree that he came to believe that votes would be polled against his party on account of prejudices against him. With the same manliness and devotion that had characterized his whole life he came forward in a patriotic address to the people, declining to make the race for elector, in order that some man against whom there were no prejudices might be put forward by his party. At the same time he declared his purpose to be no laggard in the conflict, but to go forward, doing battle wherever his services were needed, which he did.

In 1877 he was elected by the Democratic legislature to the United States Senate, where the balance of his life was spent in faithful and efficient service to his country. Those who served with him in the Senate have already testified to his efficiency in every department of legislative life. It will, therefore, not be necessary for me to recount all of his characteristics in that body. Suffice it to say that as a debater he was courteous but bold, pointed, able, and eloquent. As a parliamentarian he probably had no superior in the distinguished body of which he was a member. He adhered with unflinching devotion to the principles of the Democratic party. He believed in a strict construction of the Constitution, in economy in public expenses, and the exertion of the taxing power only for the purpose of obtaining revenue.

When the great conflict was on in 1894 for revising the tariff laws and reducing taxation to the requirements of economic government, he was made the manager in the Senate of that measure. He was also appointed one of the conferees on the part of the Senate when that bill was sent to conference. During the long and trying period that it was in conference he attended with the same punctuality and worked with the same assiduity that characterized him in all things. Though then very old, he was able to stand the long strain when others more youthful and apparently more robust gave way. He and the lamented and eloquent Voorhees were both on that conference, and have both gone hence, leaving behind a great name and record.

During a portion of the time that Senator HARRIS was a member of the Senate he was President pro tempore of that body, and no man was more frequently called to the chair, whether the administration of the Senate was of his political faith or not, than he.

Many regarded Senator HARRIS as impetuous. He was never so in coming to a conclusion. He was careful of his premises, deliberate in making up his mind; but when the conclusion was reached, his stand was so decided and his action so unrestrained that many, not knowing him well, would conclude that he was an impulsive and impetuous man, whereas nothing was further from him.

He was warm in his friendships, true to his friends, and truthful in all things. He never made a promise that he did not fulfill nor even give an intimation in a direction that he did not intend to go.

Blessed with a strong constitution that seemed to require no care, with a body that never tired, and a spirit that never flagged, this remarkable man moved on to a ripe old age with not a mental faculty dimmed and with none of his fiery spirit quenched. But the end came, as it must come to all. The time arrived when the spirit, though unimpaired, could not pull forward a weary, worn, and wasted body. Until a very recent period before his death he continued to wait upon the daily sessions of the Senate with his accustomed regularity. Finally, when the breakdown did come, he went to the seashore to gain strength and recuperation. And well might he, for during the period that they were contemporaries the waves had not been more ceaseless in their motion than his spirit ceaseless in its exertion. The recuperation obtained there was only temporary. He returned to the Capitol and to the Senate Chamber to again take up the struggle; but the effort was useless. The time had come when a long and eventful life must terminate—that earth was to reclaim its dust, and God the spirit He had lent it. I stood at his bedside and felt his last pulse beat. The end was as calm as the summer's eve on which it came. The man who had been so fiery in life was as a sleeping child in death.

With appropriate ceremonies his funeral occurred in the Senate Chamber. There is where it should have occurred. He had had every trial that could test youth, every struggle that could embarrass young manhood, and every difficulty that could hamper mature manhood and old age. Step by step he had gone forward and upward, till he had held almost every office in the gift of his State. And having been honored by it as few men are honored, he became an exile from it—a wanderer in foreign lands, where none but strange faces were to meet him and none but strange voices to greet him—a standing reward offered by his native State for his capture and return. But over all of these he triumphed, and returning to his loved Commonwealth, was again chosen as the leader of its thought and action, and for a fifth of a century occupied with distinguished ability a seat in that great Chamber. It was therefore fitting that the scene of his activities should be that of his funeral. The poverty under which he rested in his youth and the difficulties he encountered in after years neither retarded nor crushed him.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that the eagle builds its nest never near the ground, nor ever in the valley, but on loftiest and most inaccessible peaks. It is also said that when the parent bird concludes that the eaglets have lingered long enough around the nest she carries them, not down with tenderness and care to earth to try their wings, but bearing them aloft upon her back above the clouds she shakes them off in mid-air to defy the dangers and gain the glories of the skies. Like that young bird, our dead statesman was shaken off in tender years, but like the eagle, he soared above all difficulties.

Accompanied by a portion of his many faithful friends and associates, we took his remains to his native State. At the capitol the dead statesman, in the senate chamber, where he had first had legislative experience, was visited by thousands. The men whom he had fought in past years and those with whom he had done battle alike came to pay the tribute of their respect to his memory. The old Confederate was there, the old Democrat, the aged Whig, the Republican—all were there, and there was no heart that was not sad. Thence his remains were taken to Memphis, and there thousands gathered to attend his funeral and to witness his burial. Near the great river, in the greatest of all the valleys of earth, in the beautiful cemetery of the splendid city of Memphis, we laid him to rest.

Nor shall his glory be forgot
While Fame her record keeps,
Or memory points the hallowed spot
Where valor proudly sleeps.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the first acquaintance I had with the late Senator HARRIS was after he came to the Senate in 1877. Senator HARRIS was, I believe, for most of the time he was in the Senate, a member of the Finance Committee. During this time I was a member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures in the House. The jurisdiction of these two committees often brought us in close relations personally and politically.

He became the leader of the Democratic party in the Senate in all the great battles for the free coinage of silver and in resisting the efforts of the opponents of bimetalism in further demonetizing it. During the great battle that is memorable in our history as probably one of the most notable in the annals of parliamentary debate that took place in the effort to repeal what is commonly known as the Sherman Act, the late Senator HARRIS took the leading part; in fact, he was, to all intents and purposes, the parliamentary counselor and leader in the Senate on the side of the bimetalists. I often saw him in the Senate when the questions of parliamentary law were raised during this contest take the leading part in maintaining the position of his side, and anyone who ever saw him in one of those contests, who had an opportunity to observe the great force with which he put his points and the clearness in which he stated his propositions and the strong and emphatic language in which he made his demonstrations, can never forget the power, both mental and physical, that was exhibited by the man. Every word came from him as a shot from a cannon, and it went to the mark as if aimed by an expert. There was no effort at ornate speech, but an immense cannonading of logic, power in statement, and conviction in argument.

I always regarded him as a firm and determined friend of the people as he understood their interests. He was a man who possessed great courage, and was not afraid to announce his views and opinions on any subject. He had that faith in the intelligence and fairness of the American people to believe that a man would be measured by them according to that degree of courage and fidelity with which he fought for the principles that he honestly maintained.

I shall not attempt to give a historical sketch of him, but shall leave that to those who knew him as a neighbor and friend from the State which he so long and ably represented not only in official positions at home, but in the councils of the Federal Government. I shall not attempt to enter into a eulogy upon his high character. I could not pronounce a greater eulogy upon him than the simple, truthful statement that from my knowledge of him, extending over a period of twenty years, he impressed me as a man of great ability and wide attainments; a man of undoubted courage and strong convictions, and was always ready to maintain them; that he was a true friend of constitutional liberty; that his heart went out to the great mass of American people, and it was their interest under the Constitution upon all economic questions that he brought all of his great ability to promote and subserve. His State has lost its greatest champion in the national councils; bimetalism has lost one of its most faithful advocates in the nation. His loss is felt not only in his State and throughout the nation as a great advocate of this cause, but is regretted by bimetalists throughout the world.

I speak especially on this question, because it was in the contests upon this subject that I became more intimately acquainted with him, and was enabled to form a just opinion of the man.

But his labors were confined to no particular subject. There was no great question of legislation affecting the interests of the people of his State and of the nation that he did not give to it his earnest attention, and upon all the subjects of the currency, tariff, of Federal and State control, of the rights and powers of the States as contradistinguished from the powers of the Federal Government; in other words, the great dividing line between these jurisdictions received his earnest investigation. He was sincerely a strict constructionist as understood and taught by such leaders as Jefferson and Calhoun and others of the party to which Senator HARRIS belonged. His discussions of these subjects were marked by great ability and zeal. He was a leader naturally. He towered above the average man, and by his will power and ability inspired confidence in those around him as a leader; hence he was a leader in the Senate, and to say that he took a leading part in that body is to pay a high tribute to his qualities as a great man.

Peace to his ashes; honor to his memory.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, when Senator ISHAM G. HARRIS died I felt a sense of personal loss such as I never realized before in the death of a public man. He was not only my political friend, but my intimate personal friend. In his death, therefore, I was conscious of the fact that while the country had suffered the loss of a valued public servant whose place could not well be filled, that personally I had lost one to whom I had been accustomed to look for that counsel and advice which only a true friend can give. I had known him from my boyhood. The first time I ever saw him I remember well. It was in 1856, when I, a mere youth, went to my county town to listen to a joint debate between himself and Ex-Governor Neil S. Brown, of our State. They were the electors for the State at large that year, he representing Mr. Buchanan while Governor Brown represented Mr. Fillmore.

I next saw him the following year, when he was a candidate for governor of Tennessee, and had for his opponent Robert Hatton. Two years later, as a candidate for reelection to the office of governor, I witnessed the joint debate between himself and his Whig opponent, John Netherland. He was successful in both these campaigns for governor, and was renominated by his party for that office in 1861. During that year as a candidate I heard him in joint debate with his opponent, William H. Polk, a younger brother of President Polk. Inheriting as I did the political sentiments and theories of my father, who belonged to the old Whig party, I of course did not agree with Governor HARRIS in the opinions he gave expression to and in the arguments he made in those several joint debates which I have mentioned.

While I did not agree with him, I was greatly impressed by him as I observed his intense zeal, his fiery eloquence, his earnest gesture, and at times impassioned flights of oratory. The impressions I derived from his speeches, boy as I was, and fighting against them as I did by reason of the inherited opposition thereto, to which I have referred, made lodgment in my mind which was never eradicated. I shall not undertake to follow the career of this great man through all his public life in our State. Others have done this in their eulogies of him, which will appear along with my own.

He was born in Franklin County, Tenn., February 10, 1817. This county I had the honor to represent upon this floor for eight years, though it is not now within my district. At an early age he removed to Henry County, Tenn., where his parents died and are buried. Soon after his death many of the people of that county met in Paris, the county seat, where he had grown to manhood and practiced law, to pay tribute to his memory. A graceful and loving tribute was then and there paid to him by his former neighbors and friends. I take the liberty of using the resolutions they adopted for certain facts in his life and that of his family, which I set forth below. He was the son of Isham G. Harris and wife, Lucy Davidson Harris, and was the youngest son of a family of nine children. His oldest brother, George W. D. Harris, was an able and eloquent minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His brother William R. Harris was on the supreme bench of Tennessee at the time of his death, which occurred on the 19th of June, 1858, from the explosion of a steamboat boiler on the Mississippi River. Another brother, James Harris, a gallant Confederate soldier, fell at the battle of Shiloh in April, 1862.

Senator HARRIS went to Paris, Tenn., at the age of about 14 years, and began to work as a salesman in a dry-goods store. Three years later he went to Mississippi and engaged in merchandising in partnership with his brother. After about three years he sold out his interest in the store and was paid in the notes of a Mississippi bank and returned to Paris with the intention of studying law. The Mississippi bank failed, leaving him penniless, and he again engaged in merchandising, studying law at night until the year 1841, when he sold his interest in the business and entered upon the study of the law. Having applied himself closely to his studies while in business, he very early secured license and entered upon the practice. He was admitted to the bar at the May term of the court in 1841. He became at once a successful practitioner, taking rank as one of the best lawyers of the State.

He was married in 1843 to Miss Martha Travis, of which marriage there were born a family of eight children, four of whom survive. In 1847, he was elected to the State senate of Tennessee and in 1849 to a seat on this floor. He was reelected in 1851, and was again nominated in 1853, but declined the nomination and removed to Memphis that he might find a larger field in which to practice his profession. He continued in active practice until 1857, when, as I have stated, he was chosen governor of Tennessee. He was the governor of our State from 1857 until the war between the States closed. He took a very active part in behalf of the Southern States during that war, participating in many battles.

After the establishment of peace he went to Mexico, where he remained about two years, going from there to London, where he remained until November, 1867. He then returned to Memphis, and again entered upon the practice of law with great success. In 1876 the State convention placed him at the head of the electoral ticket of his party in Tennessee. His selection to this position did not meet with universal favor in one section of the State. He thereupon resigned as elector, but proceeded to make a thorough and extensive canvass of the whole State for his party. By this course and conduct he added great popularity to himself, and at the close of the canvass announced his candidacy for the United States Senate. When the legislature assembled the following January, he was chosen Senator almost unanimously. He was reelected a Senator in 1883, in 1889, and in 1895.

I shall not attempt to discuss his long career in the Senate of the United States, but it is well known of all men that he adorned the position and met every requirement of the high trust with which he was clothed with earnestness, fidelity, and signal ability. He was a great debater, a faithful public servant, and a courageous soldier. He was the foremost man in Tennessee politics during his generation. He possessed fine conversational powers, and was a most entertaining companion. His manner was sometimes severe and apparently cross, but within him there was always sympathy and love for humanity. It has been truly said of him that more people are indebted to him for favors extended than to any other man who ever occupied a public office.

Mr. Speaker, his death was a great national calamity. For more than fifty years he served his country in the State and national councils. He held the highest stations the people of his State could give him. He had opportunities to accumulate wealth, but died poor. He was scrupulously honest in private life and incorruptible in the public service. He had all the courage of the most courageous, and would have gone to the stake rather than yield his convictions of right or duty. He was never of those who would follow a multitude to do evil. He was ambitious, but was not sordid or venal. He loved the people, but was in no sense a demagogue.

His character was positive and admitted of no compromise. He was always frank and sincere. He was either for you or against you. He either favored your measure or opposed it. You were never in doubt as to whether he favored you and your measure, for guile and deceit were strangers to him. He was the chief architect and builder of Tennessee's Democracy, and the place he occupied in their hearts can not be filled. His integrity was never assailed nor questioned, and no man ever accused him of breaking a pledge or violating a promise. From early manhood through a long life and an honorable career, clothed oftentimes with trusts of the highest character, frequently taxed to the utmost of his physical endurance, his course had been steadily and unflinchingly upward. His candor, his faithfulness, his sagacity, his probity, with his integrity, honesty, courage, devotion to duty, and his successful career entitle his fame to endure and give conspicuous luster to Tennessee.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, Senator ISHAM G. HARRIS, of Tennessee, whose memory we now meet to commemorate, was in every way a remarkable man.

He was born in Franklin County, Tenn., in 1818.

Sprung from Revolutionary stock, a country-bred boy, he had no special advantages of wealth, education, or family influence. He was the architect of his own fortune.

At the early age of 14 years, with only a country-school education, he began the battle of life.

Leaving his home, he settled at Paris, Tenn., hired himself as a merchant's clerk; next entered on business for his own account, and meantime studied law at night; then finally graduated, went to the bar, and began the practice of law at Paris. His great industry and energy, which as a business man made him successful, soon made him preeminent in his chosen profession.

The attractions of the political field in a country where the people actively control prevailed over the habits and inducements of legal pursuits. His advancement here was rapid. In 1846 he was elected to the State legislature; next behold him the candidate for Presidential elector in his Congressional district; then elected and reelected to the House; then in 1853 declining reelection; next, Presidential elector; then in 1857 elected governor of the State of Tennessee, reelected in 1859, and again in 1861.

Honors such as these, worthily won, might well fill the measure of any man's ambition, but these honors were only the prelude to a career which for nearly forty years since has made him conspicuous.

He was the great war governor of the State of Tennessee; organized 100,000 volunteers for the Confederate service; took his own full share of the perils of battle; led a regiment into the bloody field of Shiloh; stood by Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, the great Confederate commander, when he received his mortal wound; carried him from the field; and served for three years more as aid on the staffs of the generals who successfully commanded the Confederate army of Tennessee.

At the close of the war he was for years an exile by reason of his distinction and services to his State, which made him a special mark for slander and malignity. But when, in 1867, the abatement of passion finally permitted the step, he returned to Memphis, where he again practiced law for ten years.

In 1877 he was elected a Senator of the United States from the State of Tennessee, taking his seat March 5, 1877. He was reelected in 1883; again in 1889, and finally in 1895, for the term of six years. On the 8th of July last he passed away, full of years and full of honors.

Such a succession of public honors was not the result of accident, nor of pertinacity in seeking public trusts. More than once he declined public station for private pursuits. He was a man of convictions, fearless, bold, uncompromising, and took all risks in times of conflict, strife, disorder, violent prejudice, and strong excitement. If, therefore, we find such a constant and unvaried tide of success, we must study the causes in the intellectual and moral force of the man.

Pursuing this pathway, I find no difficulty in locating the cause of his success and popularity. He did not inherit fortune, nor did he ever acquire any large means. He showed grit and determination at the very beginning. He had excellent business habits; he had the qualities of action—the executive faculty.

He had quickness of perception, and, what is far more, quickness of decision. He had energy, industry, close application, persistence, and the ambition to succeed in everything he undertook.

These qualities told on everything he did. They are largely the secret of his successes as merchant, lawyer, governor, politician, and Congressman. Perhaps the most trying time of his life was as governor of Tennessee from 1861 to 1865, and the two or three years of exile and straitened means that followed the war. But while adversity might come, he was not the man to lie down and surrender. His nature was heroic. He triumphed over adverse fate. The personal and moral heroism that bore him to the field of Shiloh and through the perils of the war marked his entire career. In peace and in war he was a born fighter and a leader of men.

He exercised marked influence upon his associates and contemporaries. He did not carry Tennessee out of the Union, as some would say, but he led in the movement, and gave it much of its strength.

The same influence was witnessed in his career in Congress.

He was not a great or a learned lawyer. He had given too much time to other things to fill a rôle that is only filled by those who give their whole lives to that arduous, zealous profession of the law; but he was a good business lawyer. His success at the bar can not be otherwise explained.

He was a clear-headed, logical man, and never neglected what he had on hand. As a speaker in the Senate he might not, indeed, be eloquent. His style did not smell of the lamp. He did not often speak at length. He did not speak for the sake of display or merely to make a speech; but when he did speak he was forcible, clear, strong, and convincing. He went at once to the turning point of the case. He wasted no words. He struck fairly at the shield of his antagonist. He had the ability, if he pleased, to discuss profound and difficult economic questions. His speech some years ago upon the silver question was regarded as one of the best of that long and able debate in the Senate.

Very soon after he came to the Senate Senator HARRIS was placed on very important committees, which he filled up to the time of his death. But while a hard-working, business Senator, he gave especial attention to parliamentary law. He was made President pro tempore of the body, and very often occupied the chair. He enjoyed it, and the Senators of both parties were glad to have him sit there. They all knew that he was absolutely fair, impartial, and always courteous and conservative.

The knowledge of parliamentary law, and, above all, the ability to preside, is a rare gift. It is a great, a responsible, trust to be the presiding officer of the Senate or the House of Representatives; and one who worthily, ably, and conscientiously fills such a trust has rendered a most important service to the body over which he presides and to the cause of representative government, upon which our public liberties depend.

In private life Senator HARRIS was a simple, natural man. His sincerity and frankness were his most striking qualities, but he was also kindly and genial. He did not go out of his way to conciliate foes, but he was rarely aggressive, almost always conciliatory, and to his friends was true as steel.

I have said he was a man of convictions. He was always a Democrat. He was true to his party, and never went back on his flag. He abhorred treachery or duplicity in politics. But while a strong party man, his political foes felt that he would never strike them unfairly. They respected and honored him. They never doubted his word or questioned his integrity.

After a long life, in peace and in war filling many trying positions, this plain man of the people, simple, natural, strong, heroic, has passed from our midst, with no stain on his record, no page of his life that his friends would wish to blot; honored and mourned by his State, and by all who had the good fortune to know him. I count it a high privilege to pay this last tribute of my respect to one on whose career I would willingly dwell longer if the work had not been so well performed by others.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, the eloquent, affectionate, and interesting eulogies to which we have listened make it unnecessary for me to say more than to testify my personal regard and reverence for the great statesman and Democratic leader whose memory we commemorate to-day. He deserves all of the encomiums bestowed upon him here or elsewhere.

In many respects he was one of the most remarkable men that this country has ever produced. His life was a success, and yet full of struggle and adventure. We first hear of him as an ambitious, penniless youth of 14 years, struggling against those dread jailers of the human heart, humble birth and poverty. At 21 a successful country merchant; at 25 a good lawyer; at 30 a leader of his party in the State legislature; at 33 a Representative in Congress, and at 40 governor of his State. He served through the late war as governor of Tennessee, and at the same time on the staff of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston until the death of the general at Shiloh.

The success of the Union Army made him an exile from the home of his birth and the people he loved. After more than two years in Mexico and England, he returned to Memphis broken in fortune and began again the practice of his profession. As soon as the people of his native State were allowed to control their elections and vote the Democrats of that State turned to him as their leader. In 1877 he was elected to the United States Senate, where he served the State until his death. He lived almost four-score years, and held office for nearly fifty years.

At the end of a career so remarkable and eventful it is proper that the Congress of which he was a member should temporarily suspend its ordinary labors to pay tribute to his character and find, if possible, the great secret of his wonderful success. He was without college education and was an entire stranger to the artful practices of the politician, but he possessed a strong, well-balanced mind and from childhood was not ashamed to work, not afraid to tell the truth, and in everything was direct and honest.

In boyhood, in manhood, in private transactions, in public life, in military life, in adversity, in prosperity, in his own country, or in exile, his personal integrity and superb courage never failed him. He was true to himself. He was true to every trust reposed in him—to his State, his constituents, and to his friends. He was courteous and candid to his foes. He trusted the people; they had faith in him. He never betrayed them; they never deserted him. He died comparatively poor in purse, but rich in that which above everything else he desired, the love and confidence of the people of this Republic and particularly those of Tennessee.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Speaker, the first name of a public man that I ever learned to utter was that of ISHAM G. HARRIS, or, as he was familiarly known in our section of Tennessee, GREEN HARRIS. I was born a constituent of his. He was the first public man I ever heard of on the hustings. I come of a family that did not originally lean to Mr. HARRIS's views. It was after the decay of the Whig party began, in 1854, that my father and uncle (declining to become members of the Know-Nothing party) joined fortunes with HARRIS. So that my memories of him began as a political opponent, but early ripened into those of a political friend and leader.

The most remarkable thing to my mind as a child was the fascination the man had for me. I always attended, when I had permission, the public speakings in my own county, and especially asked the privilege of hearing Governor HARRIS. His head looked to me in those days exceedingly large. He was bald when yet a very young man. His eyes set deep back in his head and, when animated in debate, were searching and commanding. He was not what we call an eloquent man, after the manner of Haskell and Haynes and Henry, yet there was a peculiarity about his expressions, a directness, as if in a steady charge, that absolutely fascinated me as a child, and I can remember well, when I would go home from a meeting, that I insisted upon explanations being made to me of what was meant by certain of his arguments.

I remember, as well as if they were yesterday, his great debates in the fifties, with Governor Brown, General Hatton, and Colonel Netherland, his discussions of "squatter sovereignty" and the "Kansas and Nebraska bills," and the attitude which he demanded Tennessee should maintain (questions of which I as a child could have no understanding), but I was so interested by the manner and force of the man that I was compelled to inquire the subject of his talk.

I can remember well when he first became a candidate for governor and came into our section of the State. It was a remarkable campaign; perhaps not so remarkable as the campaign just before it, in 1856, when he defeated Governor Brown for elector at large, but from the standpoint of national politics more important and far-reaching than the great debates between Johnson and Henry and Johnson and Gentry. But in our section of the State it was more important than either of those campaigns I have mentioned. HARRIS was our idol, our political leader. To our section of the State he was neighbor and friend, and we were greatly interested in the outcome of the campaign. The men with whom he debated these questions in 1856 and 1857 and 1859 were men of the finest character and the highest ability and education, and it was a subject of conversation and comment among the educated and accomplished Tennesseans that HARRIS always held his own with the most accomplished and best learned of the public men of his day.

As has been before stated, he was what, for the lack of a better definition, we call a "self-made" man. That is to say, he was without a college education. He had not been trained by any literary master. He had a little of what we call academy education. He commenced life without means and without being well equipped in college; but I am told by his confidants that he was a student of men and events rather than of books, though as a youth he read books. I well recollect hearing a conversation in the cloakroom here last winter, by the only man who ever held a successful tilt with him in politics, Emerson Etheridge, that it was commonly known in Henry County in his boyhood days that every book bearing upon public questions which could possibly be borrowed or bought HARRIS read; and while he lacked college training, he gave all of his spare time to informing himself on the great questions of the day. And when he came out into public life, it was a cause of marvel among the prominent men of the State that on all the questions of interest of that day he stood in the forefront.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I do no violence to the glory roll of Tennessee when I say that next to General Jackson ISHAM G. HARRIS was the most potential figure that has ever lived in that State. He had at one period of his life bitter and resentful enemies. A man of his positive character always has; but up against them he had the most powerful, positive, and affectionate friends of any man who has lived in the State of Tennessee since I can remember. To him, to his force of character, to his indomitable energy, to his tremendous courage, to his incisive arguments, more than to any other man, and I may say than to all other men of the State, is due the position which Tennessee assumed in 1861.

In 1860 the Democratic party of the State was divided. He and Senator Johnson at that time both supported Mr. Breckinridge. Early in the year 1861 they separated. Governor HARRIS insisted that the election of Mr. Lincoln would lead to the destruction of State sovereignty and centralization of government. Taking the resolutions of 1798 as his text and Mr. Calhoun as his political guide, he demanded that the State of Tennessee should follow her sister States of the South. In this contention he was met and resisted by the most powerful Democrat then living in the State, Senator Johnson, afterwards President, who led the Union element in the Democratic party. He was met by that other powerful element, the remnants of the old Whig party, led by Brownlow, of East Tennessee, and M. R. Hill and Emerson Etheridge, of West Tennessee, all of them the brainiest and bravest of men.

In the first contest, in February, 1861, an election was held for delegates to a constitutional convention, as well as to test the sense of the people on the question of secession. The advocates of secession were defeated by more than 60,000 majority. But Governor HARRIS was not dismayed. Under his undaunted leadership those who believed that Tennessee should join the South kept up the fight. He called the legislature to meet in special session. In this connection I desire to call attention to his justly celebrated message to the general assembly of Tennessee.

At this period, Mr. Speaker, far removed as we are from those troublous times of civil war, when we can speak of the public questions of that period with calmness and without being offensive, I may be permitted to call attention to his message to the general assembly of Tennessee in the spring of 1861. I do not believe I ever read a state paper on the sovereignty of the States, or the original doctrine of "State rights," as it was understood by our school of politics, that was in all of its elements so strong, convincing, and conclusive as that message.

In aid of his irresistible arguments, his energy and his courage were so intense that in spite of the fact that Tennessee had voted in February, 1861, by a majority of 60,000 to remain in the Union, in less than six months the State of Tennessee joined her fortunes with the South and became a member of the Confederacy. My attention was not called to Governor HARRIS's message in a serious way until after the war. I procured a copy of the acts of the general assembly and have it in my library, and once in a while I read it, more because of the strength of the paper than in memory of its subject. And I say to-day that in my opinion it is the most powerful argument ever made from that standpoint.

Governor HARRIS's distinctive characteristics were "honesty of purpose" and "directness of speech." He was a positive and affirmative man. He was quick to decide, and forceful and lucid in explaining his position. His worst enemy never declared of him that there was any doubt about where he stood upon any public question. Public men, as we know, nearly all at some time bend to public opinion and give up cherished views, but Governor HARRIS fought with the same degree of courage public opinion, when he thought it was wrong, as when he was leading in the current running his way. He fought and won with public opinion against him in 1849, 1856, and 1861. And his last great battle was for bimetalism against a strong current.

He did not study to ascertain the popular side. He only waited to convince himself of what was right for the people and constitutional. Then he spoke and acted. Secession was as unpopular in 1860 and early in 1861 in Tennessee as it was in Illinois. But it did not deter him. He believed that the reserved rights of the States were to be invaded and the Constitution violated, and he acted accordingly. The general belief in his honesty of purpose and his force of character, together with his powerful arguments, made Tennessee a part of the Confederacy.

There is a potent lesson to young ambition in the life of Senator HARRIS. He was honest; honest in thought, honest in speech, honest in private life. His word to his neighbor was sufficient. This made him strong with the people. And he believed in the people. Like his great political master, Jefferson, he trusted the people, and they in turn trusted him. I knew Governor HARRIS well in my boyhood days. He was often in my town. I lived in a stone's throw of his illustrious brother, Rev. George W. D. Harris, one of the strongest and most distinguished men in the Southern Methodist Church.

Force of character and integrity of purpose is and was in the name. It has been said of the HARRIS name that there was no compromise in them. It has been stated often that the dead Senator was dogmatic. Mr. Speaker, what man of strong mind, great force of character, information, and positive convictions but what is more or less dogmatic? And yet with all, this great forceful, driving man, when properly approached, was as gentle as a woman. I was not taught to regard Governor HARRIS as a jurist of equal merit with his brother, Judge William Harris, or Judge William B. Turley. But he was a very successful practitioner of the law. His character for honesty, his forceful and positive way of approaching everything made him a success at the bar. He did not study rhetorical art, hence did not rank with the orators of Tennessee. He did not delve deeply into the philosophy of the law, so as to become a great judge, for, as has been well said by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER], "the law is an exceedingly jealous mistress, and will not permit her votaries to become great who worship at any other shrine." Yet, Mr. Speaker, Governor HARRIS was one of the best lawyers I have ever known who was also a successful politician.

While he was not a great orator, he had that character of speech which is the best eloquence. He persuaded men to his way of thinking by his integrity of intention and his simple but forceful expression. He was a successful politician without veiling any of his opinions. ISHAM G. HARRIS was more than a politician. He was a statesman. That splendid term as applied to him is deserved. He believed that the fathers of the Republic builded the Constitution to guard the rights and contribute to the happiness of the people, and so believing he was a "strict constructionist." His last struggle was to restore to the people "bimetalism," their constitutional right. He spoke that which he thought; he acted his convictions; he thought not for himself but for his people. Of such are statesmen. History will say that all in all ISHAM

GREEN HARRIS was one of the very strongest men that have ever lived in the State of my nativity.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in the public life of this country, no man has more fully and honorably left the imprint of his character and great ability than ISHAM G. HARRIS. For half a century and more he stood in the fierce light of the public gaze, and the universal judgment of his fellow-citizens vindicates the integrity of his actions and bears testimony to his honesty and manhood. In all the affairs of life, in all its walks, as the private citizen, as the public servant, his qualities of heart and mind have vindicated the purity of his motives and the high purposes that ever impelled his intercourse with his fellow-men.

With that great State, Tennessee, that so long recognized and valued his worth, and which he so long honored as State official and in the larger sphere of Federal public service, his name is inseparably linked. And whether in the discharge of his duties as a State official or the broader arena of Federal legislation, a wisdom and fidelity not surpassed and rarely equaled have marked his public career. A singleness of purpose, guided by the best interests of all the people, as he could understand and know them, was the rule of his life.

For a brief time, laying aside the duties of civil station to enter into the more stirring scenes and activities of warfare, the same high resolves and purposes, the same fidelity to duty as he saw it, guided his feet. He saw his people divided—the North against South. He cast his fortunes with the people of that sun-kissed land that gave him birth and whose rights, as he believed, were assailed. When this darkest page in our country's history was closed, when the cause for which he fought was lost, when the starry banner of the Union floated once more over a reunited country, the roar of cannon, the rattle of musketry, the gleam of sabers had ceased, this man, accepting the issues as settled, in good faith did what he could to heal the breaches made by war and to set in motion again the forces of civil government for the upbuilding of our common country. Broad gauged, liberal minded, he still admired the beauty of the Southern Cross, but its effulgence did not in his eyes dim the brilliancy of the Northern star. Reaching a ripe old age, the sands of life run out. He slept. How well he met the obligations of life, with what fidelity and integrity he discharged them, the judgment of the present is known, the history of the future will record—

In his honor impregnable,
In his simplicity sublime;
No cause ever had a nobler defender,
No principle a purer victim.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Mr. Speaker, one who, at the assembling of this Congress in extra session, had, in the coordinate House of Congress, by more than twenty years' service become a familiar presence, a potent influence, came not again on our reassembling. We are paying the last tribute of respect to one who served longer in the Senate of the United States than has any citizen of my State, and whose name will be forever prominently associated with her history.

ISHAM GREEN HARRIS played a leading and bold part in every prominent national measure for the past forty-seven years. He was a very remarkable man and of a family remarkable for intellect, one of his brothers having been distinguished as a judge of Tennessee's highest court and another as a strong, forceful clergyman of the Methodist Church. With educational advantages scarcely worthy of the name, he possessed a felicity, fluency, and vigor of speech possessed by few collegians. His will power was phenomenal.

Whether as an advocate before a jury, as a Representative in this body during the stormy period of 1850, as governor of Tennessee organizing and planning for the secession of that old Whig, antiseccession State from our Federal Union, organizing and equipping an army, conducting a political campaign in his own State, or organizing for the free-silver campaign of 1896, he threw himself into all his undertakings with that determination and utter disregard of obstacles which are usually guaranties of success.

From his entrance into public life when a very young man he was the acknowledged leader of his party in western Tennessee. When Andrew Johnson had nearly completed a second term as governor of Tennessee in 1857, the Democratic party with one voice turned to HARRIS as their most capable leader, and nominated him for governor; and on the threshold of the successful canvass he then made an incident occurred illustrative of his character.

Mr. Johnson had prepared a speech which he intended delivering and circulating in pamphlet form. HARRIS was asked by him to hear this speech read, with the remark that "he intended it as the keynote to the approaching campaign." After Johnson had read his speech to HARRIS, the latter said: "I should regret to have you deliver that speech as a 'keynote to this campaign.'" "Why?" asked Johnson. "Because," said HARRIS, "my competitor will be sure to read from it in our joint discussions." "What if he does?" asked Johnson. "Then," replied HARRIS, "I would denounce it, and, from your and my position in our party, it would be very embarrassing to not only ourselves, but to our party. In that speech, Johnson, you advocate a new basis of representation in Congress and the electoral college, eliminating the three-fifths of the slave population now represented, and you advocate changes in the Federal Constitution by which the President, Vice-President, United States Senators, and the entire Federal judiciary shall be elected by a direct vote of the people, and the judiciary for a limited period. Not one of your propositions can be found in any platform of the Democratic party, State or national. I am opposed to all of them. They are not Democracy; they are only Andy Johnsonisms, and you can not force them on me as a keynote for my campaign."

For the first time Mr. Johnson encountered within his party a will as imperious as his own. He was ardently desirous of the election of a legislature which would make him Senator, and as the Whigs had elected the three previous legislatures he felt compelled to yield to the younger leader to prevent division in his party, and he failed to deliver the speech he had prepared. But there was never any cordial feeling after this between the two leaders. Had not Johnson been accustomed to the unquestioning obedience of the politicians of his party he would not have made the mistake of trying to put his collar over the neck of his younger confrère. He would have remembered that HARRIS was almost the only Democrat of influence in Tennessee who had dared oppose Mr. Clay's compromise measures of 1850 in the face of the overwhelming sentiment of the people of that State in favor of their adoption.

In 1859 and 1861 he was reelected governor of his State, which office he held till the close of the late war, and from the inauguration of the rebellion of 1861 until his death his supremacy was as absolute in his party in Tennessee as was ever that of Andrew Jackson and Andrew Johnson, and lasted longer than that of either. Johnson's began with his election as governor in 1853 and terminated in 1861, when he patriotically refused to follow his party and State into rebellion. True, he was elected to the Senate in 1875 by a majority of only 1 vote, but a majority of his party voted against him because he had opposed it on the war question, and because of this ground of opposition the Republicans in the legislature voted for and elected him. The supremacy of Andrew Jackson in Tennessee politics began in 1815, with his superb victory at New Orleans, and terminated in 1836, when the people of the State became weary of worthless "wild-cat" local bank money and free trade. Johnson's domination in his party was for a period of eight, Jackson's twenty-one, and HARRIS's thirty-six years and until his death.

Of the large number of able men in the executive chairs of the States, North and South, with the inauguration of war in 1861, no one of them was possessed of more determination than the governor of Tennessee, or of as much executive ability, except the great and lamented war governor of Indiana, Oliver P. Morton. It was the expression of the London Times that the most plausible justification of the reasons for the action of the seceding States was made by Governor HARRIS in his messages to the legislature of Tennessee in 1861. Unsound and sophistical as I regard his reasoning to have been, it is a fact that in the labor demanded of him as the governor of a State reluctant to secede, and divided in sentiment as Tennessee was, he showed such herculean energy as to entitle him to a position among the first of the forceful men of that era of forceful men. What Governor Morton was to his State and the Federal Government, that was Governor HARRIS to Tennessee and the ill-fated Confederacy.
